"His Wife's Friend"

Dorothy Dalton Featured in Successful Tragedy of Chinese Mystery Type. Produced by Thomas H. Ince.

Reviewed by Jane McCloskey.

A RETURN to the reliable old Chinese mystery story with its long suffering heroine, unexplained disappearances and strange potions, mark "His Wife's Friend," a Paramount-Ince feature, whose star is Dorothy Dalton.

The plot is involved, and the length of the picture forces a rather hurried explanation, but in spite of that drawback, things happen pretty logically and the atmosphere is genuine. The scenes were photographed on beautiful locations, and it isn't hard to believe in the English character of the landscape. Dorothy Dalton has a few moments of real emotional work, and succeeds very well in maintaining herself as the center of interest. The morbid tone of the story, with its recurrent premonitions and their fulfillment, is unbroken except for a jarring bit of farce provided by two Scotland Yard sleuths, whose ridiculous appearance doesn't ring either true or amusing in these particular circumstances.

On the whole it is a "thorough" picture, sincerely acted and, carefully worked out. If climaxes are abundant and the action seems crowded at times, still the main parts—especially the sleek Chinaman's—are well played, and there is a real thrill in the tale's unfolding.

The Story.

Tragically bored from a steady overdose of neglect, Lady Marian Grimwood finds no response in Sir Robert, her husband, whose morose, self-absorbed nature interests itself solely in his nightly game of chess. To this unhappy household comes Major John Heritage, a former suitor of Lady Marion's, and the disclosure of her unhappiness re-awakens his love for her.

The very evening of his visit, although both lovers detect suspicion in the mind of Sir Robert, the Major stays to "chess it" with his host, substituting for a local Chinaman, whose skill at the game amounts to genius. At a late hour Lady Marion is terrified when, upon discovering her husband and her guest to be absent, a farmer rushes to her with tales of a midnight tragedy. The subsequent delivery to her of a letter written by her husband accusing her of direct responsibility for his death, and the discovery of Sir Robert's drowned body, further complicates the mystery without solving it.

Six months later, a certain Lord Waverly, owner of the adjoining estate, repeats his request for Lady Marion's hand and emphasizes it by showing her the accusing letter from her dead husband, stolen by Lin Foo, the chess-playing Chinaman, who is his confidential servant. Knowing that the letter is damning evidence against her lover, Lady Marion consents to his suit. She renounces her love, and in response to a written summons delivered by the Chinaman, she goes to a lonely cabin, where Heritage barely arrives in time to save her from death at Waverly's hand. Waverly, in a peculiar dazed state of mind, dashes himself to death over a precipice.

The chain of disaster is cleared up finally when Ling Foo is detained in Lady Marion's house, drugged with a poison which had first been found in Sir Robert's glass the night of his drowning and later in the cabin from which Waverly went to his death. The Chinaman lapses into a hypnotic state, explains that the potion is not harmful to the body, but destroys the power of the will temporarily, and under its influence he tells Lady Marion that years before, in Thibet, his son had been guide for Sir Robert, who had killed him, and that he, the father, had sworn to be revenged. It was he who had lured Sir Robert to his end, and had aimed at the wife through Waverly. Lady Marion, at last secure from danger, turns Ling Foo over to the police as her husband's murderer, and insures her lover's safety by burning the recovered letter.

"High Speed"

Edward Earle and Gladys Hulette Co-Stars in Clinton H. Stagg's Racing Story for Hallmark.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE situation which forms the groundwork of Clinton H. Stagg's story of the gasoline track, "High Speed," is one rarely exceeded in its kind. The story carries itself without elaboration, as proved in the Hallmark adaptation, which has the advantage of an excellent cast with Edward Earle and Gladys Hulette in the stellar roles.

In spite of the fact that the action moves slowly at times, and that points of vantage in the sory are ofen reduced to mere incidents, the picture holds the interest of the spectator from first to last. It is a production of good moral tone, strong suspense and adventurous suggestion.

The character of Billy Brice is portrayed in fine style by Edward Earle. The role is different from any in which he has been seen before and his conception of character of the road champion, who, in payment of a debt, allows his honor to be besmirched rather than bring disgrace on one who has befriended him, is well-poised, effective and unobtrusive. Gladys Hulette also acquits herself well. The next in line for honors is Charles Husted in the role of Dan, the hostler at the Rhoades home. Robert Lytton is a familiar figure who, with few opportunities, makes the most of every occasion.

The Story.

A dethroned road champion is the center of attraction in "High Speed," and his angel of rescue is the pretty daughter of the president of the Rhoades Automobile Company. In an ill stroke of luck, Billy, driver of the Rhoades racer, has gone temporarily down and out as the result of a crooked deal put over on him at the Santa Monica races. To serve his own ends, Rhoades' son-in-law bribes Brice's mechanician to cripple his car, and places the blame on Brice, with the result that he is barred from driving again, and Rhoades' business is almost ruined.

One day, when Edith Rhoades is being driven by Kelly, a disgruntled chauffeur, along a country road, he pretends that the machine has broken down and is about to force Edith into an hour's wait, when Billy Brice happens along the road on foot. The incident ends in a fight between the two men with Brice the victor. Arriving at the Rhoades home in charge of the wheel, he reveals his identity, but is engaged as Edith's chauffeur in the face of her father's protestations.

At the approach of the racing season, Rhoades and his driver busy themselves with preparations, without counting on the interference of a rival who pays his men to frame an accident for Johnson, the driver. The accident, which lays Johnson up in the hospital, opens an opportunity for Brice to limber up the new car for the race. In the meantime, Edith has communicated the news of her employment of Brice as her chauffeur to her sister in the West. The sister decides to come East and lift the stain which her husband has placed on Brice's name. A period of suspense, with incidental attempts on the part of the enemy to injure the Rhoades car, leads to the climax. Edith procures a renewal of Brice's license card, which allows him to drive in the race to a victorious finish.

"A Girl Named Mary"

Dramatized Story Featuring Marguerite Clark in Youthful Role.

Reviewed by Jane McCloskey.

A BLONDED Marguerite Clark is the heroine of "A Girl Named Mary," from a story by Juliet Wilbur Thompkins. It is the tale of a woman's unwavering, almost endless effort, rewarded after years of trial. In it, Kathlyn Williams as Mrs. Marise Jaffrey, mother of the girl played by the star, takes a part which she handles well—it it is extremely difficult in that there is hardly one moment's let-up from emotional strain and she has few chances for relaxation in a lighter vein—but she carries the work off in good style and manages to look mature and dignified without losing her youthful charm.

Miss Clark, on the other hand, is her lithsome, buoyant self and her ease and thorough at-home-ness in either the humble surroundings at Mrs. Healy's or the sumptuous elegance of her mother's home are interesting to watch.

Aggie Herring takes the part of the supposed mother, a faithful, devoted, conscientious Irish soul, whose warm heart and meagre purse fit in with all the movie traditions of Irish "aristocracy." Cheerful as it is and sincerely acted by the entire cast—not excepting Wallace MacDonald's attractive, energetic lover part, and Lillian Leighton as an ogre-like person, who deplores her mistress' interest in many poor Marys and treats them like the rabble she holds them to be. The story seems to suffer from over-analysis; what film space should normally be given over to action of some kind, is taken up with mental weighing and debating on the part of Mary Healy.

However, the play has much to commend it in the way of quaint humor, clean plot and wholesome romance.

Cast.

Story by Juliet Wilbor Tompkins.
Directed by Walter Edwards.

The Story.

Marise Jaffrey, a woman of refinement and wealth, spends her days and her fortune searching for "A Girl Named Mary," her little daughter. Fifteen years previous to the opening of the play, Marise had decided to leave her husband because of his cruelty. Upon returning from a visit to her father, she discovered that the husband had left the house and that her baby and its nurse were missing. The news of a railroad wreck, in which Jaffrey was killed closed all avenues of information as to the whereabouts of the child. Her life ever since has been spent in fruitless search.

Mary Healy, played by Marguerite Clark, is a young stenographer whom Mrs. Jaffrey has befriended, and who is sorry for the loneliness of the older woman's life. The girl is a cheerful, radiant, lovable little body, the idol alike of her supposed mother and of Henry Martin, foreman of a factory and Mary's "steady."

She sends to Mrs. Jaffrey a certain Mary Laguna, an unfortunate foundling, thinking that she might prove to be the missing daughter, but the fact of the two cases do not agree, and although her loneliness increases, Mrs. Jaffrey has some cause to be thankful that her child had not sunk to the depths of the poor waif.

It soon develops, through a resemblance noticed by Marise, between the little stenographer and her own mother, that Mrs. Healy is not really Mary's mother, but that the child has been left to her care. Clothes that the baby wore prove beyond a doubt that Mary Healy is in reality Marise Jaffrey's child, and the rest of the story is taken up with the struggle in Mary's mind between her love for her adopted mother and her feeling of obligation toward Mrs. Jaffrey, whose affectionate advances she steadily repulses. She finally comes to the conclusion that she can love both women and anger neither, because her marriage to Henry Martin, whom she loves, will settle the question of her future home.

Mrs. Jaffrey's search is at last successful, she has heard her daughter call her "Mother," and she then turns her attention to one Hugh Le Baron, played by Charles Clary, a devoted lover who has waited for her all through the fifteen years of her anxiety.

"Nothing But the Truth"

Taylor Holmes Production Released by Metro Contains Good Entertainment.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE Frederic S. Isham novel, "Nothing But the Truth," which James Montgomery fashioned into a lively farce for William Collier, has been turned into a moving picture, with Taylor Holmes as the unfortunate chap who is forced to tell nothing but the truth for five days. In adapting the story to the screen, David Kirkland, who also directed the picture, has been obliged to drop most of the "gag" lines inserted by the witty and resourceful Collier and invent situations to take their place. These situations are not often of a novel nature, and the picture lacks the lively touch-and-go of the stage farce. Judged solely on its own merits, it contains considerable good entertainment and should satisfy the average screen patron.

The production has had the benefit of a capable cast. Taylor Holmes plays the truth telling hero, with the breezy sense of humor the part requires. He receives his principal support from Elsie Mackaye, Marcelle Carroll, Ben Hendricks, Charles Craig, Ned A. Sparks and Colin Campbell. The production has handsome settings.

The Story.

Bob Bennett, having made a thirty-thousand dollar bet with three of his friends that he can tell "Nothing But the Truth" for five days, proceeds to stick close to his side of the agreement and thus illustrates what a deal of harm the unalloyed truth can work. On being asked questions by the wives of the other parties to the bet he reveals secret sins of commission charged against the trio of frisky husbands, which puts an end to domestic harmony in the households of all three.

The revengeful trio pursue him for the next five days, intent on stopping his mouth until he is no longer obliged to tell nothing but the truth. They kidnap him from his room in the country estate where most of the scenes are laid and have him locked up in a lunatic asylum. Bob makes his escape, aided by a romantic young thing named Dolly, who is in love with him because she thinks that he is the society crook who is relieving the female guests of the house party of their jewels.

Bob is in love with Gwendolyn Gerald, a handsome heiress who returns his affection, but Bob will not tell her of his love because he believes his father has lost everything and the Bennetts are paupers. It is to help his father that Bob is anxious to win the bet. His truth telling causes a misunderstanding between Gwendolyn and him, and suspicion points strongly in his direction as the enterprising jewel thief. He has a stolen article slipped into his pocket by the real thief, and again Dolly comes to his rescue. When time is up at last, and he can clear himself with his friends, he finds that his father's story about being broke was only a scheme to test him and to bring Gwendolyn and him together. Bob wins the thirty-thousand.

"Marked Men" Not a Reissue

In the January 3 issue of the Moving Picture World there was printed a review of "Marked Men," the splendid Universal adaptation of Peter B. Kyne's great story, in which it was stated that the subject was a reissue. An official of the Universal has requested us to set right the exhibitors on "Marked Men," declaring that, while Universal, several years ago, made a version of this Kyne story, it was not the same as the present one, that while the director of the version now before the exhibitors was Jack Ford, that another officiated in the making of the initial subject. The Universal official quoted expresses the opinion that "Marked Men" is one of his company's best special attractions and calls attention to the statement of several critics, placing the production on a par with the best three pictures of the year.

"The Prince of Avenue A"

James J. Corbett Featured in Amusing Universal Subject Dealing with Ward Politics.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A TRIUMPH among unique character stories is this blithe little comedy of ward politics, "The Prince of Avenue A," with James J. Corbett in the leading role. The production "hews to the line" in almost every details and presents a story of genuine life, as humorous as it is realistic. An undercurrent of humor is felt through the number, which rises gradually to a laughable climax.

James J. Corbett appears as the hero, Barry O'Connor, son of an old-time Irish ward boss. The character is one that fits Mr. Corbett's personality very well and he does some exceptionally good acting in the part, playing with effective restraint through most of the scenes. An occasional "ruction" gives him the expected pugilistic opportunities, and these are done in a satisfying way, but it is in the quieter moments that he reaches new heights as an actor. Cora Drew, Richard Cummings, Frederick Vroom and Lydia Yeamons Titus do some good work in the supporting cast.

The pictures of an Irish ward on Avenue A are delightful and reflect credit on the director, Jack Ford. The plot incidents are in keeping with the political theme, and the social events are handled with a pleasing touch. Even the campaign cigar is not forgotten and contributes its share of the smiles. The comedy, as a whole, sets a strong pace for screen stories of this type.

The Story.

Barry O'Connor, in "The Prince of Avenue A," is the son of Patrick O'Connor, a Tammany ward boss of the old school. Barry dresses in "Fifth Avenue" clothes, but is greatly admired in the district for all his swell manners. His father, at the time the story opens, is supporting William Tompkins for mayor. Tompkin's daughter, Mary, is engaged to a society chap named Reggie Vanderlip.

While Patrick O'Connor and Tompkins are in a conference, Mary telephones that a faucet is leaking in their bath room at home. Barry, who is a plumber by trade, responds to the call and rushes to the Tompkins' home. He fixes the faucet and then invites the supposed maid to attend the Mechanics' ball with him that night. The maid turns out to be Mary Tompkins. She does not go to the ball, but in the course of time forms a friendship with Barry and invites him to one of her swell affairs. Barry attends this, but his rough conduct gets on Mary's nerves and she asks him to leave.

The strained social situation between the O'Connor and Tompkins families make things look bad for the coming election. But Patrick O'Connor gets up another social event, at which Barry and Mary lead the grand march. Incidentally, the old ward boss puts one over on his political enemies and this assures the election of Tompkins. Barry fights valiantly to defend Mary, in a hand-to-hand conflict, and she then discovers she is in love with him.

"The Blue Bonnet"

Hodkinson Presents, Through Pathe, a Story of Humanitarian Interest Starring Billie Rhodes.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

PORTRAYING with power and insight the kindly character and work of a Salvation lass, "The Blue Bonnett" pictures, meanwhile, a fatalistic drama, the eternal conflict between human temperaments. Very much like the old-fashioned novel in structure, it gives the life story of a girl from her babyhood. She becomes a waif, completely lost to both her parents, her soul weak and limited by unfavorable circumstances. Her lines of life, are however, constantly crossed by her wandering father and gay mother until a dramatic moment is reached in the lives of all three.

Up to this moment, "The Blue Bonnet" is an elaborate piece of screen fiction, with many side issues and numerous characters, the latter admirably typed, but it takes on the guise of true drama during the concluding scenes. Billie Rhodes gives an intelligent interpretation of her role throughout, but she is at her best as the Salvation lass. All of her support is good, but none of it distinctive.

The Story.

When Ruth Drake comes to wear the Blue Bonnett of a Salvation lassie, she has passed through a varied experience, that of a waif abandoned by a heartless mother after being stolen from a loving father. The mother becomes a vaudeville favorite, while the father wanders in a fruitless search for his child. Once or twice. Ruth comes in contact with her father, neither recognizing the other, and it is she who finally rescues him from complete demoralization, when she gives him work in the Salvation Army. She has had a varied experienced abroad as a nurse and a great favorite with American soldiers, particularly Sidney Haviland, who backed her mother in a theatrical venture, unaware that the latter, under the stage name of Aurora Varney, was related to Ruth Haviland has had more than one glimpse of Ruth's nobility of heart. He owes her, besides, a debt of gratitude for her kindness to him while he was wounded. He is with her on the street one day when he is approached by Aurora Varney with an attempt at reconciliation, but he repels her coldly. She summons the pretty little Salvation lass to her rooms and frames up a successful charge against the girl. So strong is the evidence against Ruth at the trial that conviction seems certain.

Then enter the elements of a storm that has long been gathering. Aurora is identified as the woman who abandoned her baby long years before. She is trying to prove her own daughter to be a criminal. Terrible are the consequences for the faithless wife and mother, but her final misdeed leaves Ruth in the arms of the loving father, brightening their lives and assuring both the happiness they have long deserved.

"She Loves and Lies"

Norma Talmadge Has Light Comedy Role in Entertaining Select Release.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

A SHORT story by Wilkie Collins in its original form, "She Loves and Lies" is good entertainment and gives Norma Talmadge a light comedy role which permits her to wear handsome gowns, act with her usual excellent effect and disguise herself as an elderly lady of stately manners during a portion of the picture. Joseph Schenck has produced this Select release with liberality as to supporting company and settings, and the director has carried out his part of the work with commendable skill. As one of the adaptors, Chester Withey has changed the English atmosphere and altered the characters of the story to conform with the New York of today, and the entire picture moves briskly, with occasional glimpses of Washington Square and other well-known localities to give impressions of reality to the scenes.

"She Loves and Lies" is never a strong story, but the star makes the most of several displays of real feeling and, as Marie Callender, presents a type of American girl that is clever enough and good enough to be the wife of any man, no matter how high his station. Some of the devices of the plot will cause the more sophisticated portion of a body of spectators to smile indulgently and to wonder if any person ever was fooled by a wig and a few lines on the face; but the spirit of the tale is wholesome and bright, and there is never a moment when the picture is not enjoyable.

Conway Tearle contrives to be manly in a part which depends more upon personality than on situations. Octavia Brooke, Phillips Tead and Ida Darling are consistently amusing in a trio of character parts.

Cast.

Marie Callender .....Norma Talmadge
Ernest Lismore .....Conway Tearle
Polly Poplar .....Octavia Brooke

The Story

Marie Callender, the girl in "She Loves and Lies," who does the things mentioned in the title, is an actress with an ambitious aunt and two lovers. One, named Gordon, is an elderly man of vast wealth; the other is a young chap, with nothing but his nerve to recommend him. Urged on by her aunt and Polly Poplar, an artist friend, Marie becomes engaged to Gordon. While visiting his country home, the house takes fire and Marie is rescued by Ernest Lismore, the handsome young man next door. The exposure on the night of the fire proves fatal to Gordon, but before he dies he leaves everything to Marie provided she marries the man of her choice.

After the death of Gordon, the girl, now living in the millionaire's city home, commences to think seriously of the man who saved her life. Hearing that he is badly in need of money, she disguises herself as a woman of sixty and invites him to the house. When he arrives she tells him she will advance him one hundred thousand dollars if he will marry her. The ceremony is performed, but the couple do not live together as man and wife. Gordon treats Marie with the utmost respect, but is led to believe that he loves another woman, when his wife takes off her wig and grease-paint and fascinates him as June Daye, a young artist who lives in Washington Square.

Gordon is honest about the affair, and goes home and confesses everything to his wife, after she has hastened home also and resumed her disguise. There is a pleasant ending all around, with Polly Poplar and Marie's former admirer pairing off and taking out a marriage license.

"An Adventure in Hearts"

Fantastic Paramount Comedy of Love and Romance, Starring Robert Warwick.

Reviewed by Jane McCloskey.

ROBERT WARWICK is the featured player of "An Adventure in Hearts," adapted by Paramount from Anthony Hope's book, "Captain Dieppe." It is cheerful, spring-time comedy, made up of pretty sentiment, some quick action, a wetter-than-wet rainstorm and the romantic background of an old Italian castle. Warwick takes the part of a mysterious and gentlemanly soldier-of-fortune, too quick witted to be imposed upon and too venturesome to forego a fling at romance when it is presented in so attractive a form as Helene Chadwick's impersonation of Lucia. Specially to be praised is the local color furnished by Tyrolean peasants and sunny countrysides, which lend a welcome summer note.

The tale itself is light and entertaining, a little threadbare in spots and requiring no particular depth of appreciation, but smiling and optimistic throughout. Walter Long's playing of Sevier, a secret agent, is clever as it can be. His proscribed mannerisms look truly natural, and he has the rare charm of stifling his vanity for the sake of a part. James Cruze, in the character of the cultured, love-sick count of Fieramondi, all of whose culture cannot supply him with a rhyming word to describe "my darling's nose," makes a finished, though laughable picture. The other players are satisfactorily cast.

The Story.

The hero of "An Adventure in Hearts" is one Captain Dieppe, an "international agent and diplomatic free lance," whose current mission, as the story opens, lies with a small principality in Italy. The Councillors of State conspire to withhold payment for his services until he has delivered to them an important report. Dieppe frustrates their plans, refusing to give up the information until the cash is forthcoming, and departs. At the command of the Minister, he is shadowed by Sevier of the secret service.

Eluding Sevier, Dieppe finds himself in Fieramondi and honors the village with his presence for dinner as the guest of the Count. Matrimonial relations at the castle are so strained that the Count and his bride inhabit different wings of the building, and what more natural than that Dieppe should mistake a midnight vision of loveliness, glimpsed in the halls, for the Countess? In reality, the "vision" is a cousin by marriage, who apparently falls as much in love with the noble hero as he with her. Meantime, the Countess herself is off to Genoa in search of fifty-thousand francs, with which to repay a gambling debt due one Paul Sharpe, who is the unwelcome cause of her domestic misunderstanding.

She returns, unsuccessful, in a driving rainstorm, but matters are straightened out to perfection, when Dieppe, keeping an appointment with Sharpe, whom he has previously insulted, fights him, steals the incriminating I. O. U.'s and opens the way to a reconciliation between husband and wife. All this he does in a most laudable self-effacing spirit, thinking he is sacrificing his own love. But he discovers the error in identity, is rejoiced that Lucia is but an unmarried cousin, high-handedly obtains his money from Sevier, and the play ends with some entertaining little by-play, as the gay Captain and his lady go slowly in to dinner.

Robert Warwick Goes in for "An Adventure in Hearts" and Wins in the End.

An Unusual Story of Love and Secret Service with Robert Warwick as the Star.

Exploitation Angles: Play up Warwick, and tell that this is "Captain Dieppe" under another title. Make your appeal to the book lovers, and get the local stores to help. Then work an appeal to those who do not know the book with the high lights of the story, centering upon the efforts of the hero to restore the woman he loves to her supposed husband.

"The Heart of Youth"

Lila Lee Featured in Paramount-Artcraft Picture Especially Pleasing to Youthful Audiences.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

LILA LEE is well suited to the role of Josephine Darchat, which she plays in the Paramount-Artcraft picture, "The Heart of Youth." The majority of the players in the picture are young, many of them children, and the youthful capers carried to the extreme in the production are bound to excite laughter. A family feud occasioned by the presence of a spring on the edge of joint properties leads to amusing complications in which the love thread is jolted into temporary insensibility. The production takes the form of a comedy-drama, and has a steady flow of interesting action. There is a strong vein of human interest and a pleasing characterization. The production is wholesome, not always faultless in direction; in fact there is a tendency to over-do certain details of the action. It is adapted to the children's matinee as well as to the adult audience.

The Story.

A quarrel between Os Whipple and Calvin Prendergast, who summers with his family on a plot of ground adjoining the Whipple farm, is the pivot about which the action of "The Heart of Youth" centers. A spring on the border line between the two properties is the bone of contention which leads to bitter strife and finally to a reunion of the two families.

The interesting part of the situation lies in the fact that young Russ Prendergast falls in love with pretty Josephine Darchat, and follows the bent of his inclination in spite of family differences. Mrs. Prendergast, yielding to her son's request, invites Josephine to a party at her home. Things run smoothly until one day Russ leaves a note with some flowers for Josephine in the hollow of a tree. The youthful Prendergasts, who have stolen the cook's false hair, displace the flowers and leave the hair in their stead.

The result is disastrous to the peace of the family, and things go from bad to worse, until one day in desperation Josephine changes the course of the water from the spring, and the Prendergast cottage is left without any. Prendergast brings in outside help, and a fierce fight ensues. While the fight is on, the youngest of the Prendergast children falls in the lake. Josephine rescues him and is the means of revealing to the old folks the foolishness of their quarrel.

"Go West, Young Woman"

Christie Comedy Is Funny and Spirited.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

FAY TINCHER is the star player of the Christie comedy, "Go West, Young Woman." Much of the business is not particularly novel, but the idea underlying the plot is capital, and the director keeps things moving at a lively rate. Spirited acting by the entire cast and a good "surprise" finish heap up the measure of the picture's entertaining qualities.

The mayor of a town out in Texas receives word that his niece from the East is about to pay him a visit. The young woman is shown on the train, then landing in the town. Here she finds that the place is literally going to the dogs. The sheriff cannot keep order, and a bandit is in the habit of riding into town and robbing it whenever he takes the notion. Her uncle is about to lose his office, and matters are in a bad way for him. Determined to help him out of his troubles, the girl has the mayor appoint her sheriff. With the help of a female police force, she starts a reform administration which amounts to a moral whirlwind. The bandit is captured after a terrific fight, and the girl herself, finding the the ex-sheriff is in league with the robber, goes gunning for him. She wakes up in the middle of a lively shooting match, to find herself still on the train. Apprehension of what the town may be like has caused her bad dream. Met at the station by her uncle, she discovers that the place is as quiet and well behaved as a New England village.

Fay Tincher puts jump and ginger and many comedy touches into her part and turns it into a good natured satire on the ambition of the woman of today to tackle any job once the exclusive property of mere man. There are laughs aplenty in "Go West, Young Woman."

"The Log of the U-35"

C. B. Price Co., Inc., Exhibits Authentic Film Illustration of German Barbarism.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

NO more convincing evidence of the truth of German barbarism could be found than that exhibited in the two-reel film "The Log of the U-35," which is being handled by the C. B. Price Company, Inc. It displays 1,600 feet of submarine crime, the actual destruction and sinking of ships of the Allies plying to and fro in mid-ocean with supplies of various sorts. From one hundred vessels sunk by the U-35, six lone prisoners pacing its decks are the only living evidence of the ship's crews.

The film, clearly photographed, represents a painstaking effort on the part of the photographic section of the German Naval Department, to preserve, for the Imperail archives, authentic records of glorified atrocities mistaken by the "all highest" for deeds of bravery. It includes close-up views of a German officer bearing a French name, whose father captured in the Franco-Prussian war, married a German woman, and the crew apparently happily engaged in the business of submarine murder. All the views, in fact, are taken at close range, and show the actual details of setting out to obey the order of Von Tirpitz, the preparing of the guns, the stealing of water and supplies from the merchant ships, the wanton sinking of each in turn, to the number of six or eight, the taking prisoner of officers and the leaving of the crews to their fate. Actual scenes of bombing and torpedoing ships, and sometimes the explosion of a boiler as a vessel goes down are among the appalling sights to be seen in this film, which was captured by an allied officer who was a prisoner in Germany.

"Germany in 1920"

Series of Views Brought from Germany by Fox News Cameraman Showing Rehabilitation of Conquered Country.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

AFTER meeting with many difficulties in trying to make entry into Germany for the purpose of obtaining film evidence of conditions as they are in the conquered country, the camermen of the Fox News were able not only to secure some German government films, but also to procure scenes of the rehabilitation of Germany first hand.

The film measures 2,000 feet, and includes official records of the Austrian as well as of the German government, released now for the first time. There are scenes in Coblenz, Cologne, Leipsic and Berlin. Views on the storied Rhine, looking north from the bridge which was destroyed by the Germans, and rebuilt on pontoons by the Americans, and from the fortress of Ehrenbreitstein overlooking the river and known as the "Gibraltar of Germany," are due for good American applause when "Old Glory" is seen flying from the top of the fortress.

Hindenburg in civilian clothes, looking much the worse for wear, and as a sub-title happily quotes, "wearing in his head a gray hair for every American soldier that crossed the ocean." One of the grim comedy touches in connection with the Germany of the old regime shows the ex-kaiser handing out iron crosses like so many lozenges. The crown prince also figures in a couple of scenes of the picture.

In striking contrast to the rulers of the old Germany is President Ebert with his wife and sons, Herr Bauer, president of the Board of Ministers, and Herr Noske, Minister of War, are also present.

The most important feature of the picture is the knowledge which it gives us of Germany's haste to get herself together again, and also of the apparent necessity for very young men, mere boys, entering the trades. The cameraman has snapped views of boys tilling the fields, making gardens, mending and making shoes, shoeing horses and employed at various unchildlike labors. The extensions of the Berlin subway, and the enthusiasm exhibited over a produce fair in Leipsic are among the warning which the picture holds for those who are inclined to be too sanguine.

Athletic tendencies of German girls are illustrated in scenes showing them swimming and at work on the trapeze and at the bar. A scene showing 10,000 German school children simultaneously taking calisthenics is not surprising but interesting.

COMMENTS

ALL FOR THE DOUGH BAG (Rainbow), Feb. 3.—A good two-reel comic, by J. A. Howe, featuring Phil Dunham, Bartine Barkette and others. Some of the small business in this is decidedly funny and novel as well. A thief with a grip filled with money furnishes a number of amusing complications. The subject is a good one of the knockabout sort.

SCREEN MAGAZINE, NO. 44 (Universal).—Contains some vivid photographs of the moon, taken through the great Hooker telescope at Mt. Wilson observatory. Further double-action animated drawings of Cinema Luke, a new and humorous method of serving meals on a revolving table top, and other features are included.

THE BETRAYAL (Pathe).—Chapter 7 of "The Black Secret." This serial continues to make unusual claims upon the interest. One of the best features is the complex character of Vaux, who turns some new tricks in this instalment. The number closes with Evelyn and McKay arriving at the forest of Les Errues by the use of an aeroplane and parachutes. The illusion is good and they meet a warm reception behind the German lines.

THE COUNTERFEIT TRAIL (Universal).—A two-reel subject, written by Dorothy Rochfort, with Magda Lane and Robert Burns in the leading roles. The scenes are laid in the West and the plot concerns the round-up of a counterfeiter. The latter manages to throw suspicion temporarily on the hero, but he is cleared in the end. This contains considerable hand-to-hand fighting and is good in action.

THE MIGHT OF LOVE (Universal Jewel).—A two-reel number, made by the Stage Women's War Relief. This features Mabel Taliaferro as the heroine, a part which she appears in to advantage, screening to excellent effect. The story is one of a light, agreeable sort, not particularly strong as to plot, but entertaining. Others appearing are Rob Wagner, Mrs. Russ Wytal, Lucia Moore and Margaret Leslie.

HIS LUCKY BLUNDER (Universal).—A one-reel comedy of average quality. The action centers about a married woman's birthday and some jewels stolen from her by a pair of crooks. The husband recovers the jewels by accident, but claims credit with his wife for being very shrewd. The number is only fairly entertaining.

THE SPEAKEASY (Sennett).—With the question of an up-to-date subject before him, Mack Sennett has filmed the humors of Prohibition and filled his picture with the comic difficulties encountered by the proprietor of a small hotel when he tries to run a "speakeasy" in the cellar. Charlie Murray plays the landlord and is aided by several of the leading members of the Sennett fun makers. The comedy is up to the Sennett average.

RED HOT HOTTENTOTS (Rolin-Pathe).—A "Snub" Pollard comedy, one of the best in which he has appeared. This opens with rivalry over a girl in this country and then moves to the heart of Africa, where the principals get into difficulties with man-eating cannibals. The number is amusing and should have a particular appeal to children.

FOX NEWS, NO. 25.—Some truly remarkable pictures taken from an aeroplane driven by Bertram E. Moisant are the strong feature of this. Looping the loop, tail spinning and other stunts of the plane serve to turn the earth over and over in a marvelous way. Only "seeing is believing" in such pictures as this. The number contains various other good features.

THE PURPLE DAGGER (Hallmark).—The second episode of "The Trail of the Octopus" rivals the first in the quality of its thrills. The openinfg of the episode shows Carter Holmes rescuing Ruth Stanhope in the Temple of the Devil Worshippers. After an apparently successful struggle with members of the Sacred Twelve, they find themselves pre-

THE STOLEN PICTURE (Pathe).—Episode No. 4 of "The Adventures of Ruth." In this number Ruth acts as maid at a reception and recovers in a clever manner a painting which had been stolen from an artist. She again finds herself in a clash with "The Thirteen" and the Hound threatens vengeance for her interference with their plans. The scenes are highly colored and the settings much superior to the average serial. The action is good but requires close watching as Ruth takes up the various tasks laid out for her.

WHY GO HOME? (Rolin-Pathe).—A "Snub" Pollard comic, in which Snub plays the role of a sporty judge who makes a specailty of "divorce and burglary" cases. He visits a cabaret and is having a high time when his wife appears. There are many knockabout scenes of the conventional sort, some of which will bring laughs. As a whole the subject is one of about average strength.

THE DEATH STUDIO (Pathe).—Chapter 11 of "The Black Secret." Despite the trick of the spies to bring Evelyn and Kay together in deadly combat, both escape serious injury. They then go to a studio, at 26 Stuart Place, where they discover a German spy searching for information about the great secret. He has killed the artist living in the studio. Vaux turns up and there are a number of exciting occurrences in a general effort to get a certain bit of paper containing valuable information.

THE JAY BIRD (Western), Jan. 10.—A two-reel subject, featuring Hoot Gibson and Josphine Hill. This has a fine comedy plot and makes an unusually good number. The country bank scenes are especially funny and quite true to life. The hero makes good with the bank president, by preventing a robbery and thus wins the daughter's hand in marriage.

IN THE SOUP (Okeh).—A Chris Rub comic, featuring Chris in his Swedish character. He woos the daughter of an old African lion hunter, who insists that his daughter can only marry a brave hunter. Chris, after many mishaps, catches a live lion in a barrel. This is an amusing subject of the elemental sort and should delight children in particular.

CAUGHT IN THE END (Star Comedy).—A typical Lyons and Moran comedy, featuring Eddie and Lee as a couple of gay deceivers. Each pretends to be ill in order to remain away from a lecture which is attended by their wives. The latter return to find the husbands playing poker with friends. The usual amusing complications follow.

THE DUNGEON OF DESPAIR (Universal), Feb. 16.—This Chapter, No. 8, of "The Lion Man," opens with a real thrill, when Jim, in a high powered auto, rescues Stella from the end of the moving train. The scenes in Wang's Chinese den are also done in good melodramatic style, and the number closes with Stella and Jim in danger of drowning in a dungeon room which is slowly filling with water.

SOLD INTO SLAVERY, (Universal), Feb. 23.—Chapter 9 of "The Lion Man." Stella and Jim are rescued from drowning in the dugeon room by the sudden appearance of the Lion Man. They emerge from the cave by means of rope ladders. But Wang once more captures Stella and plans to sell her to a Chinese slave dealer. Jim in the meantime is leading a band of cowboys in an effort to capture Wang. The number is full of lively action.

band of cowboys in an effort to capture Wang. The number is full of lively action.

"A LADY'S TAILOR" (Sennett-Paramount). The popularity of Mack Sennett farces will be enhanced by "A Lady's Tailor," though it is a departure from the customary thing in some respects, an artistic departure in its way during the opening scenes. Ford Sterling gives a Fashion Revue to a small and delighted audience, in which he deftly wraps and unwraps some ladies of symmetrical outlines. When the unwrapping promises startling disclosures there is much craning of necks and excitement among the male spectators at the Revue. Some of these effects are the same on those who watch the presentation of the farce. Thereafter is the usual mixup of jealous wives and husbands with an athletic mother-in-law in lively evidence.

FOX NEWS, NO. 21.—This interesting number presents a diversified collection of topics in pictorial form. The opening feature shows devastating floods in southern towns and Red Cross relief work. On the trail of Carlisle, the train robber, is also a good subject and there are many others.

MUTT AND JEFF'S NOOZE WEEKLY (Fox).—Here is a laughable animated subject, featuring Mutt and Jeff in the act of projecting a burlesque news pictorial. They also appear in the various scenes. The unveiling of a statue, and the fight with the India Rubber Kid are typically amusing.

THE GANGSTER'S VENGEANCE (Universal), Instalment No. 14 of "The Midnight Man."—A characteristic chapter of this melodramatic serial. Nell and Jim escape from the house in which they were captives by way of the roof. Later they plunge in an automobile into an excavation, and the final events take place in a packing house, where Jim is suspended at the close over a blazing furnace. The name and products of the Cudahy Packing Company appear quite prominently at times in this number.

WHIRLED TO DESTRUCTION (Universal), Chapter 15 of "The Midnight Man."—Some special mechanical devices contribute a number of genuine melodramatic thrills to this instalment. Jim is saved by Nell from the burning pit, only to be trapped later in a small cage, with descending spears threatening his life. Later he takes a dizzying ride on an electric fly wheel. This and other recent numbers have held up the interest in the serial very well.

HURLED FROM THE HEIGHTS (Universal), Chapter 16 of "The Midnight Man."—This sees the further efforts of John Gilmore and Morgan to get the mystery ring away from Jim. The latter plays the part of a lighthouse helper on Luna Point, which makes a picturesque setting for the stirring action. Jim is hurled from the lighthouse tower at the close.

THE CAVE OF DESTRUCTION (Universal), Chapter No. 17 of "The Midnight Man."—This takes an unusually interesting turn, picturing the opening of the mysterious ring, which discloses where the secret wealth is hidden. John Gilmore and another lose their lives when opening the steel door at th cave's mouth. Jim and Nell enter the cave only to find themselves in danger from a fire and explosion.

TOUGH LUCK, (Rolin-Pathe).—A comic number, featuring "Snub" Pollard and a large cast. This gets a good running start and the action continues without abatement till the end. The idea is a funny one; Snub and his girl break a mirror, walk under a ladder, a black cat crosses their path, and they meet a cross eyed man. Some amusing misadventures follow.

THE STRIKE OF A RATTLER, (Tempest Cody Series).—A strong two-reel Western, in which Tempest Cody decides suddenly to purchase a beautiful ranch property. She is badly swindled by "The Rattler" and his friends. The real owner appears, after the alleged sale and helps Tempest recover the money. This has a unique plot and contains splendid scenic effects.

SHE'S EVERYWHERE, (Universal).—A two-reel number of The Stage Woman's War Relief series. Montague Love and Enid Markey play the leading roles. The plot is a clever one, and concerns a nervous business man who is pursued by what he thinks are visions of the same girl in many places. The latter turns out to be an authoress who changes jobs frequently in order to get literary material. The number is a very entertaining one.

THE BETRAYAL (Pathe).—Chapter 7 of "The Black Secret." This serial continues to make unusual claims upon the interest. One of the best features is the complex character of Vaux, who turns some new tricks in this instalment. The number closes with Evelyn and McKay arriving at the forest of Les Errues by the use of an aeroplane and parachutes. The illusion is good and they meet a warm reception behind the German lines.

THE ROPE OF DEATH, (Universal).—Episode No. 2 of "The Lion Man." Kathleen O'Connell, who plays the heroine, begins getting into her best stride in this number, which is a very good one for serial purposes. The events of the number, which are full of exciting action. Stella dresses in boys' clothes in order to turn some interesting tricks on the conspirators.

THE KIDNAPPERS, (Universal).—Episode No. 3 of "The Lion Man." This gets into full swing and makes a strong serial instalment. It pictures the coming of Stella to a Western town, where she meets Jack Westcott, who has been slated to be killed by Enright and his gang. The two have many adventures in this number, which includes many riding and fighting scenes of a stirring sort, and some splendid scenic effects.

Reprinted from Bulletins

THE MYSTERY OF THE YELLOW ROOM (Realart).—An Emile Chautard feature produced by Mayflower and derived from a widely-read mystery novel by Gaston Leroux. This interesting detective story has an unexpected ending. It is visualized capably. The mystery relates to a murderous attack on a girl in the Yellow Room. Her cries call her father to the only door locked on her side. When he finally breaks in and finds her nearly dead her assailant has escaped, though the only window is heavily barred and there are no exits. A good attraction and calculated to hold the spectator's attention closely.—HARRISON.

MAKING GOOD WITH MOTHER (Lawrence Grossmith).—A short and amusing comedy of the Grossmith type, with the lead in the role of a stupid, good-natured and wealthy young man on a weed-end visit to the family of his finance. He is popular in spite of his absent-mindedness and mishaps, but he gets into a predicament by retiring early in the wrong bedroom, that of a young society vamp. The story follows the negligee idea now in vogue in Broadway stage comedies.—HARRISON.

BULLIN' THE BULLSHEVIKI (Eff and Eff).—There is every evidence that no expense has been spared in the making of the four-part burlesque, "Bullin' the Bullsheviki." Frank P. Donovan has written and directed the production; and while he has made a commendable effort to convert his theme into an amusing burlesque, he occasionally fails to arrive at the intended comedy. Marguerite Clayton is the featured member of the cast She appears on the scene in the town of Killemoff wearing a suave smile but hiding a ferocious determination to steal from Troitsky certain important papers. The average audience would find many things in this production highly amusing.—MacDONALD.

PRETZEL FARMING (Fox).—A Mutt and Jeff Animated, depicting one of Bud Fisher's whimsical ideas. The two raise pretzel bushes, which are irrigated with 2.75 per cent. beer and produce enormous crops. This is very funny.—McELRAVY.

THE ARIZONA CAT CLAW (World).—A five-reel western story of the cattle country, featuring Edythe Sterling, Leo Maloney, William Quinn and others. Cattle stealing is one feature of the production, which is not very strong in continuity, but contains some entertaining melodraatic moments. The number resembles a serial in construction and its chief strength is found in various entertaining stunts and some unusually good scenic effects. A touch of heart interest is woven into the number by the betrayal of a girl named Amelia Young by a mining engineer. The latter is forced to marry the girl at the point of a gun. The production as a whole is one of average strength.—McELRAVY.

THE WOLF PACK (Pathe).—October 19.—Episode No. 12 of "The Great Gamble." This shows more of Nell's adventures in passing herself off as Aline and then pictures the trials of Aline and Ralph.—McELRAVY.

THE HEART OF THE JUNGLE (Paul J. Rainey).—For real thrills this one-reel picture of big game hunting in Africa beats the best melodrama. A lion hunt with the king of beasts shot within twelve feet of the camera is the final stunt.—WEITZEL.

THE BROKEN BUTTERFLY (Robertson-Cole).—A Maurice Tourneur production featuring Lew Cody, with Pauline Stark in the feminine lead. The picture is excessively beautiful as regards settings, photography and the individual work of some members of the cast, including Pauline Stark and Mary Alden. Lew Cody is not well suited to the role of the composer in love with the simple country girl. The character is a poorly balanced one, and is therefore a thankless one to play.—MacDONALD.

THE MOONSHINE TRAIL (Pathe).—A six-part production by J. Stuart Blackton and Stanley Olmsted. Sylvia Bremer and Robert Gordon head a large cast, many of whom play interesting character roles. The story deals throughout with the havoc wrought by strong drink on the human family. The first pictures are taken in the Kentucky mountains, showing the destruction of a still and the death of the father and the two sons operating it. The mother and daughter of the still owner then come to New York, and drink plays a strong part in the latter's love affair. The production as a whole abounds in powerful scenes of a compelling, though frequently unpleasant nature, softened by the influence of love and occasional touches of real humor. It grips the interest well and has a certain timeliness that is not to be overlooked.—McELRAVY.

THE STREAM OF LIFE (Plymouth).—"The Stream of Life" is a religious conception carefully thought out and well made. It has a powerful appeal for the average spectator, for the reason that its play is principally on the emotional side. It tells the story of man from his childhood to his death, showing him first in the simple country life under the influence of an ideal mother. When he reaches the ag of manhood, he longs to better himself, and begs to be allowed to go to the city, where he becomes in time a successful business man with a wife and child. The mother, left alone on the farm by the death of her husband, comes to visit them. During the period of the visit, the son's child dies. Through this incident both the son, who has long been estranged from the church, and also his wife, renounce the gay life to which they have been accustomed and spend the remainder of their lives in trying to make others happy.—MacDONALD.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E.T. KEYSER

How Would You Lay Out and Equip This Proposed Picture Theatre?

A SUBSCRIBER to the Moving Picture World who is considering the erection of a new picture theatre sends us a rough sketch of his proposed floor plan and requests that brother exhibitors favor him with any constructive criticism regarding the layout that their experience dictates.

The plan arrived in rather crude form, so we have had it redrawn, adhering to the dimensions given in the original and submit it to our readers, who we invite to tear it apart and reconstruct from the fragments something that they believe to be a better proposition.

Three Stores Provided For

It will be noted by referring to the plan that the house measures eighty-five by one hundred and twenty-five feet. In order to reduce overhead expense three stores are to occupy the frontage. One of these is to be thirty-five and two to be seventeen feet in width. Between the stores is a foyer sixteen feet wide and over this and extending for a short distance into the flanking stores it is planned to have a projection room, nine by eighteen feet with a three-foot motor room on one side and a four-foot rewinding room on the other.

The seating is arranged in twenty-three rows, the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth rows being merely suggested by a few chairs. Three aisles, each four feet wide, are indicated on the plan and there are four exits provided for on each side of the house.

Our friend evidently proposes to be prepared for personal appearances and the efforts of the local dramatic club, as he has allowed for rather ample stage space. The screen is a trifle over thirty-three feet distance from the first row of seats.

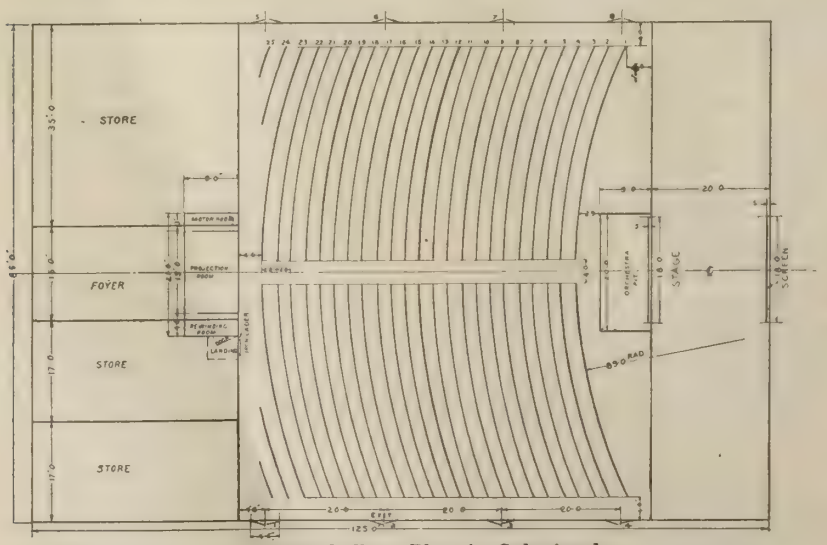
While the engraver's boy was delivering the plan cut, Kinsila, Edward Bernard, you know, the man who wrote "Modern Theatre Construction," drifted in. We showed him the plans and asked him to contribute a few ideas.

Tell Us About It

THIS department exists for the purpose of spreading the glad tidings of anything in the way of equipment, its use or arrangement that makes or saves money for picture theatres or studios.

The door is wide open and the lid entirely absent to any exhibitor, house or studio manager or manufacturer who has a story to tell or a device to describe, the reading of which will tend to increase efficiency in the showing or making of films.

Send photos and diagrams whenever possible and address your communication to "Better Equipment" Department, Moving Picture World.



Ground Floor Plan As Submitted.
What would you suggest as improvements?

Kinsila Contributes.

He said: "Tell him to make his house in amphitheatre form, each succeeding row about five inches above the row in front. This will leave the aisles with an easy ramp, and elevate the last rows enough for him to install the stores underneath the last rows and on a level with the street. This would give him all his seating on the one floor and economize greatly in the construction of the house.

"The lobby of the theatre should be at least about twenty or twenty-five feet wide, with either side or intermediate tunnels ramped into a cross aisle dividing the house in half. This will give him his entire area for seating, with a generous lobby and two shallow stores underneath on the street level. It will also afford ideal sight and projection lines."

We can see the store rent profiteering scheme go blooey if Kinsila gets the job, but as it would certainly make for better interior arrangement there are extenuating circumstances.

Richardson Lays Down the Law.

Kinsila had hardly vanished down the elevator before Richardson hove into sight. We grabbed him with one hand and waved the plans at him with the other. "How about it?" we asked.

Richardson glanced over the layout until his eye caught the projection room. Then he unlimbered and began shooting. When Richardson gets talking on this subject all speed laws are off, so we hung out a distress signal and the young lady who explains our absence to bill collectors proceeded to catch his conversation with the aid of the late Sir Isaac Pitman. And here it what she caught on the fly:

"As to the front wall of the room, if your inquirer will follow driections as per the handbook he will get the best there is to be had. That same holds good in the entire construction of the room."

(We believe that Richardson would sell handbooks at a missionary meeting. But it's a good book all right and would probably enable the missionaries to give good educational shows to prospective converts. Ed.)

"As to the floor plan, as shown in drawing, would suggest that more space is devoted to the projection room proper than is at all necessary. The extra space does no harm, but why use eighteen feet for that room and allow only three feet for the motor room (presumable motor-generator room), which is too small.

"I would suggest the following change: Add two feet to motor room, making

Three Unit Motor-Generator

The three unit 150 kw. Westinghouse motor-generator illustrated was installed and placed into operation five hours after the above photograph was taken. Undoubtedly quick work, but it is nothing unusual for motion picture studios where ability and efficiency are performing many unusual things.

It is interesting to note that within three months of the time this installation was made, another three-unit 75 kw. Westinghouse motor-generator was ordered. This new equipment is to be operated in parallel on a common bus with the 150 kw. unit.

it five feet wide and one foot to the rewinding room, making it four feet wide. This will leave a projection room sixteen feet wide by nine feet, front to back, with a ten-foot ceiling. This is ample, even though a stereopticon and spot be used.

"If your inquirer wants a really efficient room he must have fresh air inlet ducts entering at or near floor line, and in such position that when the air is pulled out of the ceiling vent pipe there will be a circulation of air in all parts of the room. He MUST provide running water, with basin, and should have toilet facilities also.

Walls and Ceilings Black.

The walls and ceiling should be dead black, or a very dark green. No lights should be allowed to burn in the room when projection is in progress, unless observation ports of at least twenty-four inches be provided.

Small observation ports and light in the projection room are prolific causes of poor results, as they make it impractical for the projectionist to have a clear-cut, sharp view of his screen. Large ports and a fairly light room are permissible, but the size must NOT be less than twenty-four inches square, though the ports may be covered with plate glass, in the center of which a hole four to six inches in diameter has been cut, or thin photographic glass may be used without the hole.

"If glass is used it must not be set vertically, but on a slant of about two inches to the foot—the bottom that much further out than the top, to kill the reflection. It must be readily removable, or on hinges, for cleaning.

"But regardless of whether large ports are used and some light allowed, the projection room walls must be black or very dark green. This is to kill the glare which is present with light colored walls.

Two Projectors Suggested.

"As to equipment, I would suggest two projectors, and a spot and stereopticon, if there be use for the latter. A motor generator if the current is A C, a volt and ammeter, located on the front wall of the projection room, where they will be under the eye of the projectionist at all times, and a rewinder geared down so that it will require not less than eight minutes to rewind a thousand feet of film.

"This rewinder should be motor driven and so arranged that the motor will automatically stop the instant the rewinding is done.

"In addition there should be a hand driven rewinder for inspection purposes.

Projection Room Circuit.

"The projection room electric circuit should be not less than a size capable of carrying the full projection room load with five per cent. voltage drop.

"Anything less means waste, which is registered on the meter. The projector outlets should come out of the floor directly behind each machine, and four feet from the front wall."

Having thus expressed himself regarding the projection room, the editor of the Projection Department called attention to the fact that owing to the angle of vision from the sides of the front rows, those seats provided for outside of a line drawn from outer aisle seats in row ten to the outer edge of screen should be eliminated.

What a Heating Man Advises.

Later in the day, we were favored with a call by Henry N. Dix, Jr., of the American Radiator Company's architectural department. We showed him the plans and suggested that he make a few remarks on the subject of a heating plant.

Mr. Dix took the plans back to his office and promptly came across with the following communication:

I would suggest that the boiler room be placed under the stage and not below the stores as is usually done. By doing this the problem of heating is greatly simplified and radiators may be placed on or near the floor in the front of the theatre near the orchestra pit. To do this may require that the theatre be narrowed a few feet in order to allow a coal wagon to pass to the rear through the side alleys. In this case this does not seem a great hardship as the building is now unusually wide.

Suggests Two Boilers.

I would strongly suggest that two boilers be used for heating, each boiler at least 75 per cent. of the size which would be used in case only one boiler was installed. With such an arrangement one boiler alone, by forcing, would be capable of heating the theatre satisfactorily in case the other boiler was broken or otherwise out of use. Where only one boiler is installed, a broken boiler means a complete shut-down of the theatre for several days, during which time many times the cost of the extra boiler is lost in revenue at the box office. Other than this, such an arrangement of twin boilers is much more economical from the fuel standpoint, great economies being affected in the mild days of spring and fall when only one boiler is needed.

Selecting the Boiler.

When selecting the boiler I believe that there are at least four things to bear in mind, namely: First cost, efficiency or economy, nature of care boiler will require and lastly, "water line."

The first three of these are closely related, first cost being the least important. A theatre is built with the idea of making the capital invested pay large dividends; therefore, it seems that if by spending, let us say, several hundred dollars extra on the boiler and heating equipment one can through the increased efficiency or economy of the plant show a saving in fuel and operating cost of at least 20 per cent. on the extra money invested, such an expenditure is well worth while, indeed it would, if necessary, be good business to borrow this extra money at 6 per cent.

The Question of "Water Line."

The question of "water line" is of vital importance in the case being considered because the lower the water line of the boiler the less excavation is necessary for the boiler room. This means a corresponding saving in cost of building construction due to this lesser excavation, and the lesser amount and cost of foundation walls.

As for the location of the radiators, I would suggest that wall radiation be used, the side walls recessed to a depth of five inches in order that this radiation may be set therein and not project into the aisle space.

It is needless to say that a downfeed system is perhaps the most satisfactory for this and the average theatre. By this I mean that the supply piping is run somewheres above the radiators and the return along or below the floor back to the boiler.

For Economy.

In the interest of economy, I have one more suggestion to make, naemly: That there be a separate supply and return main for the radiators to be installed in the stores and offices. By closing the valves on these lines in the boiler room, a large economy of fuel is obtained during such times as the theatre is in use and the stores closed. That is, steam would only be used to heat the theatre and none needlessly wasted by heating closed stores.

On the other hand, there will undoubtedly be times such as mornings when heat is needed in the stores and not in the theatre. The additional cost of such piping would not be prohibitive and the economies obtained would pay handsome dividends on the additional investment.

If anyone, manufacturer or exhibitor, has further suggestions to make, this department is wide open for their reception and publication.

DRY YOUR FILMS FASTER!

Quick handling of your wet film places you in the right position to increase the capacity of your laboratory with no increase of floor space. Air conditioned to the right temperature with the proper amount of humidity enables you to produce the feet of film demanded, no matter whether the outside atmosphere is warm and wet or cold and dry.

Nicholas Power Company and Fox Film Join in Great Foreign Trade Drive

THE announcement that the Nicholas Power Company has given the Fox Film Corporation the agency for the sale of Power's Cameragraphs in France, Belgium and Switzerland, is one of the most interesting trade news items that the film industry has received in many years. Not only does this indicate that these two great organizations have consummated an important contract, but also that the Nicholas Power Company has completed its great chain of noted foreign representatives.

Edward Earl.

When Mr. Fox decided to enter the foreign field, one of the first matters considered was the adoption of a projector which would be well known to all foreign exhibitors, and as a result of his investigations, he sought the agency for the Cameragraph.

Spain's King a Power's Patron.

In a number of great international competitive tests Power's Cameragraph has received first honors, so that it is today universally recognized as a projector of the first class.

One of the most exacting and important international tests was made when the Power's projector won out against a great field of competitors at the time the King of Spain purchased the American Power's Cameragraph for the use of the royal family.

The details of the contract were arranged by J. Leo, vice-president of the Fox Film Corporation, and W. C. Smith, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, and they have made working arrangements which are already showing important practical results.

The Power's Pioneered.

The pioneer period of introducing American motion picture machines in foreign fields was almost exclusively the work of the makers of the Cameragraph, and the fact that today American motion picture machines dominate throughout the world is very largely the result of the aggressive export policy of Edward Earl, president of the Nicholas Power Company.

Typhoon Fan Company Acquires T. R. Wilson

THE former chief of Chicago's Commission on Ventilation, T. R. Wilson, is now in charge of the new offices of the Typhoon Fan Company at 64 West Randolph street, Chicago.

Mr. Wilson was also the test and survey engineer for the Chicago Commission on Ventilation, as practically all the tests and much of the research work of the commission were conducted by him.

The experience acquired during his former activities is now at the disposal of the Typhoon Company's clients.

Comfort Under Averse Conditions.

The Typhoon Fan Company is pleased to announce that the principle on which Typhoon cooling is made possible was demonstrated and proven by tests under the direction of the Chicago Commission on Ventilation conducted under actual working conditions with numerous subjects and widely varied conditions of temperature and humidity.

These tests demonstrated that it is possible to maintain perfect comfort even under the most adverse temperature conditions obtained in the warmest parts of the United States, provided air is supplied at a sufficient velocity.

This principle is perfectly demonstrated by the Typhoon cooling system which delivers air to the audiences or patrons with an air motion of sufficient velocity to break up the aerial envelope surrounding the body, thus allowing a natural dissipation of the excess heat generated by the body.

Motion-picture-theatre owners, as well as projectionists, who are using WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMPS for motion picture projection, are highly elated with the results.

Not only does the use of this light source mean better pictures and therefore more pleased patrons, but it also means a considerable saving in dollars and cents in the operating cost. Furthermore, it does away with the injurious carbon gas and dust produced by carbon arc lamps, and simplifies projection.

Write for pamphlet which describes in detail the use as well as the advantages of these lamps.

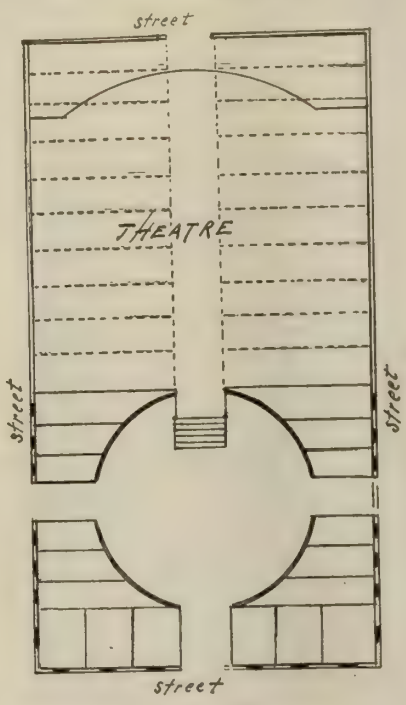
Sam Spedon Butts Into the Architectural Game

WE ARE indebted to Sam Spedon for the following suggestion.

The use of the arcade in many of our western cities suggests a new plan of building a theatre that would combine a profitable investment and a very beautiful structure.

A rotunda at one end or, if desired, at both ends would serve as lobbies to the theatre, stores being built with entrances from both street and rotunda.



Suggested Plan.

If the theatre were built on a second story, approached by a spacious and artistic stairway, the arcade could run the whole length of the building and allow of stores, suggested by dotted lines, being built the whole length, with entrances from both street and arcade. The attraction of a plan of this kind is evident, as it permits of shopping, dining and promenading in the arcade.

Motion Picture Producing Company Has New Plant

ANOTHER stride in the advancement of the Motion Picture Producing Company of America is evidenced in the completion of a new machine shop at 121 West Fifty-second street, New York, in which will be manufactured Stereospeed cameras.

The new shop will house the mechanical department of Stereospeed Productions, Inc., and is being opened in anticipation of the demand for this camera. It is planned to have at least five of these cameras in operation within six months.

One Month to Build Camera.

Mr. Emlay's invention is a camera of such perfect balance that the variation of a thousandth of an inch would prove disastrous to its mechanism. Such care is required in the making and assembling of the various parts, that the building of one Stereospeed camera necessitates a month of time.

To superintend this work, the Motion Picture Producing Company has secured the services of Maxmilian Veith, formerly supervisor of the mechanical department of the Automatic Motion Picture Corporation and rated as one of the greatest experts on precision camera construction.

A Nice Order.

Paramount Theatres, Ltd., a subsidiary company of the Famous Lasky Film Service and Regal Films, Ltd., Toronto, has placed an order for $45,000 worth of equipment for present and prospective moving picture theatres which it controls. The order includes Simplex projection machines, Hertner Transverters, Simplex ticker vendors, Caille ticket choppers, Lightning coin changers, Crescent spotlights, Kinarko and Speer carbons, etc. The order was placed with the Perkins Electric Company of Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg.

George F. Perkins recently bought 250 Lightning coin changers at Chicago but delivery of these machines has been delayed because it is necessary to change them to accommodate the various sizes of Canadian currency. Mr. Perkins has also announced that he recently sold 275,000 Kinarko carbons to a Chicago supply house for sale in the United States.

The collecting of emulsion from "green" films on aperture plate and tension springs of the projector is in many cases causing untold damage to the film and excessive wear to the projector as well as marring the presentation on the screen by jumping.

Proper Waxing of New Films—

Prolongs the life of the Film.
Eliminates excessive wear on Projecting Machine.

THEATRE LIGHTING

AUDITORIUM: X-Ray indirect lighting with ceiling fixtures, coves, cornices or wall boxes produces illumination results demanded in the finest auditoriums. The newest effects in color lighting are satisfactorily secured only with X-Ray indirect illumination.

STAGE: The powerful X-Ray reflector, with color screen, has revolutionized stage lighting methods. Better color values and light control are to be had with this system; with reduced current.

EXTERIOR: The theatre front must be flood-lighted with X-Ray projectors to show its beauty at night. Outline lighting with studded lamps is an expensive way to hide the theatre beautiful; flood-lighting with powerful X-Ray projectors an economical way to enhance its beauty.

Crimson Shoals

The Freakiest, Wierdest, most Mysterious Film ever placed on any screen - anywhere.

"Remarkable the way the star tackles the job of four men. --- it offers melodrama -- with action ever traveling at a furious pace as one incident of struggle and strife rushes its predecessor off the screen ------ notable feature is trick photography which in scene after scene shows the three characters enacted by the star in the same room, talking to and at each other as though they each had an actor of their own."

"— fights and scuffles galore -- pronounce it as one of the most amazing examples of triple exposure that the camera has ever accomplished."

MOTION PICTURE NEWS

"------ melodramatic production, -- triple exposure introduced into this picture, and this alone should serve to put the picture over. Many will marvel when they see the star appear as father, son and grandson, in one scene and converse with one another. -- Happy ending is reached after a most spectacular free for all fight."

"— novel feature. Dual roles are uncommon but a triple characterization is a novelty. -- meritorious -- camera work is especially good--."

"YOU love your country enough to die for her, Milt; but do you love her enough to live for her? It means to be odious in every eye, to eat out your heart alone—for you can't tell your wife, nor boy, nor friend."

And in that black day when it became too late to tell, in all the United States, in all the world just one man wrote to Milt Shanks—his friend Abraham Lincoln.

Here's the beat of the human heart translated into a dramatic entertainment that has never been equalled in the history of pictures! No man, woman or child can look at "The Copperhead" and fail to feel its tender pathos, its vital appeal, its uplift of emotion.

Truly it is the one great American picture of today! And now is the time to show it!

Through all the years—they live!

As real, as fresh, as appealingly human today as when Mark Twain—his eyes a-twinkle—called them from his heart and wrote them down forever in the world's greatest romance of youth..

Freckle-faced Huckleberry Finn; Tom Sawyer with his heart of adventure; "Pap" Finn and his jug of rum; those seedy old rapscallions, the "King" and the "Duke"; Black Jim, the widow Douglas, Aunt Polly, and sweet-faced Mary Jane.

Now, in this irresistible photoplay, they live before your very eyes, with all their charm, their escapades, their lovable, laughable ways.

A tale of other days on the Mississippi pulsing with a hundred immortal adventures—mellowed with much laughter—softened by a few tears.

A Picture as Great as the Story!

"Too Much Johnson"

"My Name's Johnson"

Here's a "laughing-room-only" picture such as you don't meet up with in a month of holidays. It's just about as legitimate, bona-fide, unadulterated, full-ply comedy as the screen has been able to accomplish so far. And it came from a story that the last generation used to roar at regularly at least once a year. William Gillette's "Too Much Johnson" has been a synonym for the perfect stage farce for many years. And it hasn't lost an inch in pictures! It's all there and a lot funnier. It's full five reels of laughter without a let-down from beginning to end. You can go the limit with "Too Much Johnson." It's a box-office winner if ever there was one!

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

New York City, January 6th, 1920.

My dear Mr. Zukor:

Congratulations!

Paramount Artcraft has scored a notable achievement among really notable Motion Picture Dramas in the production of "Behind the Door."

I doubt whether any screen melodrama ever made has been packed with such terrific power and heart-stirring action, and at the same time has exemplified so well the highest standards of artistic and novel presentation.

It was nothing short of a delight to watch the audiences at the Broadway Theatre and to observe how thoroughly amazed everyone was at the sensational story unfolded.

There was always prolonged applause throughout the showing of "Behind the Door," and applause, as you know, is indeed, all too rare in the theatres devoted to the silent drama.

Mr. Ince, Mr. Willat, Mr. Bosworth and your organization are to be congratulated again for having been responsible for such a triumph among superlative photo-plays.

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) B. S. MOSS.

News is news only while it's new, and when the-man-at-the-movies sees a news-reel serving the world's big events fresh and hot from Time's griddle, with Scoops—those exclusive big-news pictures he sees nowhere else—he naturally goes out and talks about it. It took enterprise, experience and money to make International Film Service the most talked of news reels in the world—to make Scoop and International synonymous—but the outlay is amply justified by the prevailing nation-wide demand for that service at every Universal Exchange.

Heart Tugs

FOLKS will like "JUDY OF ROGUES' HARBOR." They will laugh over it and cry over it. It's a big kindly story about every-day people who live in the sweet, clean, wholesome country atmosphere that you and everybody knows and loves. There's meanness here, too, perhaps, but it is smothered, by and by, with kindness.

"JUDY OF ROGUES' HARBOR" tugs at human heart strings. There are times when one's heart even wells up into his throat and the sobs come in spite of all the trying in the world to stop them. It is a picture you will want to play on and on, because of the pleasure it will give and the money it will bring.

REALART

And Thrills, Too!

THERE'S big dramatic action in "JUDY OF ROGUES' HARBOR"—the sort that grips and thrills! And it is all logically and smoothly developed right out of the story. No ranting—no tearing of hair—no forced situations—just powerful action that befits the narrative and saves the play from cheap melodramatic effects!

Of course, "JUDY OF ROGUES' HARBOR" is a love story, else Grace Miller White would not have been its author. And it's all the sweeter in pictures from the fact that

MARY MILES MINTER

Contrast in suitors—the play of man against man—contributes mightily to the suspense and interest of January 2nd, 1923.

Dear Mr. Goldwyn and dear Mr. Beach:

It is hard for me to praise the picture you have made of "The Cup of Fury" without seeming to boast of my own share in it, for the picture is true to the spirit and book, and the actors are those that I selected myself.

dramatic feeling have been shown in condensing the story for the screen it, and in developing it when it offered the chance, that I did, without conceit, express my profound admiration.

Yet so much art and inspiration and critic the picture could have; but when I saw it I forgot that it was mine, I was so swept along from emotion to emotion and climax to climax in a current of beauty, splendor, suspense, laughter, pity, hatred, and at the end, satisfaction.

Perhaps I should be the most severe ship whose launching gives so noble a start, it was fine to realize that the great christened by my heroine, so beautifully impersonated by Miss Malone Shedman.

It was fine to realize that the picture was actually more perfect photography. The direction of A. Hayes Hunter reveals him as one of the foremost masters of the new craft.

Never have I seen a truer cast. To must feel who had laid a foundation and later seen a cathedral built upon it.

Indeed, I felt something as a mason

what you have done with, and for, the story, and I can thank you for public will feel quite as great a thrill as I have felt.

In all sincerity, I thank you for

Mr. Rupert Hughes,

New York City. N.Y.

My dear Rupert Hughes:-

I have seen "The Cup of Fury" and it is a great picture. Permit me to compliment you upon achieving such a splendid result with your first Eminent Authors production.

In "The Cup of Fury" you have accomplished the end Mr. Goldwyn and I had in mind in organizing the Eminent Authors Pictures Co.; viz. you have told a great story upon the screen with the same force, the same directness, the same artistry that marks your writings.

We contend that the screen needs famous plays told in the language of their creators. And "The Cup of Fury" is a great, a significant story for it, aside from its clean, strong love interest and swift, absorbing action it deals with perhaps the most vital problem of our national life, the relation of Capital and Labor.

It is not a war story but a story of conditions arising from the war. Above all it is timely. It is a story of today, a story of American determination to overcome odds and accomplish the impossible. Technical detail, cast and direction are splendid and I feel sure it will meet with a tremendous popular response.

I beg to remain.

Again with hearty congratulations

Sincerely yours,

Rex Beach

UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY
1600 BROADWAY
No. 12374
New York January 8th, 1920 191
Pay to the order of Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc. $ 404.50
FOUR HUNDRED FOUR DOLLARS FIFTY CENTS Dollars
UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY
TO THE COLUMBIA BANK

TO THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS:—

The money represented by the above check is the first ever paid to exhibitors for the showing of educational and industrial pictures which they have received without charge. This amount was paid to be distributed among exhibitors for the showing of HEADS WIN in Chicago and vicinity.

The arrangement between the UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY and the MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA, INC., under which this money was paid is NOT AN EXCLUSIVE ONE AND NEVER HAS BEEN. ANY OTHER PRODUCER OF MOTION PICTURES IS AT LIBERTY TO ENJOY THE SAME PRIVILEGES THAT THE UNIVERSAL HAS AND DOES ENJOY IN REGARD TO EDUCATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL FILMS.

IN REPLY TO SLURRING CHARGES MADE IN RECENT TRADE PAPER ADVERTISEMENTS

1—First, the so-called Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association has failed to answer any of the pertinent questions, evidently for reasons best known to themselves.

2—Mr. H. A. Mintz ranks as one of the high-grade attorneys of New England. .The contract as proposed was arranged so that the Association in the event of any slip-up would not be involved with heavy legal fees.

3—As a matter of fact no contract was ever executed. It was submitted to the Cleveland gentleman in a tentative form and he promptly turned it over the men who were trying to tear down one big exhibitors' movement for personal reasons. It was decided best not to further consult Mr. Lustig, and as president I am only too pleased that this gentleman has tendered his resignation. It would have shown better business ethics to have resigned first than to have used a committee membership against the best interests of the Association.

4—The League would have made a large sum of money had the New York Tribune seen fit to continue negotiations. Under the proposed contract the League would have received the first $10,000 earned and continuous profits thereafter.

5—If this so-called Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association's idea of commercial independence means the censorship of the screen by a self constituted committee, then I am very glad that I stand for open competition whereby each and every exhibitor will receive direct remuneration for the use of his screen for advertising purposes.

6—As to comparison of records, we are glad to have the Exhibitors of the country decide as to the calibre of the men concerned in this controversy, and to their honest intent for the best interests of the industry.

ANOTHER GREAT SPECIAL PRODUCTION

MOTION PICTURE NEWS: "Wonderful" is the word that accurately describes this screenization of Emerson Hough's great story "The Sagebrusher." A photoplay masterpiece demands many essentials and Benjamin B. Hampton's picture qualifies in every respect. First it has an appealing story and a notable cast.... Box-office angle: Metropolitan, big puller and tremendously pleasing; Elite, strong puller and exceptionally pleasing; Family, big puller and wonderfully pleasing; Workers, strong puller and tremendously pleasing.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD: Benjamin B. Hampton's newest Great Authors' special, Emerson Hough's "The Sagebrusher" is the story of a rough diamond with a big heart. It will please the great majority of screen patrons. Replete with dramatic intensity with much of the spectacular and melodramatic elements.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW: Benjamin B Hampton's big new production "The Sagebrusher" brings another powerful author to the screen in the person of Emerson Hough. This picture has a following booked in advance on the author's popularity.

WID'S DAILY: In his story of love and faith Emerson Hough has the truly human touch containing all of the emotions expected in such a fine theme. There are enough thrills to flavor and they will keep the interest sustained. Be sure and tell your audience this is the first Emerson Hough novel ever screened.

NEW YORK TELEGRAPH: "The Sagebrusher" is highly commendable and worth seeing from every angle. It combines story, director and players in a strong attraction; a worthy successor to "The Westerners" and "Desert Gold."

THE THEATRES

OPERA HOUSE

"Alma Where Do You Live" opened at the Opera House yesterday to large and enthusiastic audiences who gave their whole hearted approval to this new form of entertainment. It is described as "a synchronized production."

The original score of "Alma Where Do You Live as produced for two years on Broadway is used. The plot, story and exteriors are shown in six reels of film, while the picture is cut where the musical song and dance numbers come and real performers are introduced.

Miss Delphia Daughn the featured dancer is wonderful and won rounds of applause. Mr. Robert Hall Russell has a pleasing voice of rare sweetness and was no small part of the production's entertainment.

The chorus is modest, capable and gorgeously costumed. The stage settings are entirely adequate and breathe a simple elegance that gives the artistic atmosphere so necessary for this class of production. The electric lighting effects are beautiful in the last degree.

"Alma Where Do You Live" appeals to every class of people and it's subtle sweetness comes like the breath of a spring flower.

"Alma Where Do You Live" will appear at the Opera House today and tomorrow, both afternoon and evening.

It has always been my policy to play only the best of pictures procurable at my Strand and New Orpheum Theatres, but in your Harold Lloyds "Bumping into Broadway" I believe that I have obtained not only the very best from a comedy point of view but the very best from the box office stand point as well.

From present indications the New Lloyd Comedies are going to be as big a box office attraction as any star in dramatic or comedy acting upon the screen today. This is my opinion based on the business we are doing on "Bumping into Broadway" and I do not hesitate in recommending the New Harold Lloyd Comedies to all exhibitors.

WARNING

The entire Motion Picture Industry is hereby warned of an attempt by certain distributing agencies to offer a series of productions as being the works of David Wark Griffith.

For the protection of all—AND ESPECIALLY EXHIBITORS—and that they may not be misled by these offerings, Mr. Griffith has issued the following statement:

"TO THE MOTION PICTURE INDUSTRY:

"All genuine Griffith prouctions carry the initials D. G. and the written name GRIFFITH on the main title and on all important sub-titles, and any motion picture offered without these trademarks not only is unauthentic, but is being fostered on the exhibitors and the public in an effort to give the impression that it was personally directed.

"In justice to all concerned I hereby ask all exhibitors, for the protection of themselves and their patrons, not to advertise any picture as a Griffith production unless it carries the above trademarks stamped in the film."

NOTE The picture called "Tiger Girl," recently advertised as a Griffith production, was not directed by Mr. Griffith, but by Paul Powell, and it is an injustice to Mr. Powell as well as to Mr. Griffith to call it a Griffith picture. As a matter of record, the picture is an old print formerly called "The Lily and the Rose" and is now being resurrected presumably for the purpose of trading on Mr. Griffith's name.

The cave man lived an uncertain life.

He depended entirely upon his own prowess.

Most Exhibitors are mighty uncertain about their futures. They have to fight each other and they have to fight the predatory producer-distributor gang.

The Big Idea is for the independent exhibitor to get into a gang of his own, a gang that won't skin him alive, a gang in which he can be as big as any other man.

WE ARE MAKING THEM PAY

The sensation of the week, we might say of the year, or indeed, of all motion picture history, is the payment of money to exhibitors for use of their screens by film producers who have trespassed on those screens in the past.

BEAT THE TOM TOM!
SOUND THE BUGLES!!
SET OFF THE FIREWORKS!!!

To celebrate this great event of the exhibitor actually getting something for the use of his own property.

THE WHY AND WHEREFORE OF IT ALL

The Screen Protection Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America through their exposure of the screen "snipers" are responsible—solely and entirely responsible—for this belated effort to pay the exhibitor for the use of his screen. But for the fight of the Screen Protection Committee the exhibitors would never have received a penny.

In contrast with this sudden, apparent willingness to pay, we ask you to read the letter sent by W. H. Linton, state treasurer of the New York exhibitors' league to the executive seecretary of that organization which was sent on January 5th, 1920. Here is the letter, which speaks for itself:

Utica, N. Y., Jan. 5, 1920.

Mr. S. I. BERMAN, Executive Secretary,
Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, State of New York,
708 Times Bldg., New York City.

Dear Mr. BERMAN:

This is to acknowledge the receipt of check on account, dated December 31st, 1919, and given to me at the executive committee meeting of our state league at Buffalo, N. Y., on Jan. 2, 1920, in payment for showing of reel "Dame Fashion Decrees."

Our members who have run this reel say that it was well liked by their patrons, especially the women. It seems to me an ideal production, in every way up to our standards, which provide that every such reel must have a predominant entertainment value and under no circumstances afford a cause of just complaint to any of our patrons.

Such being the case I want to go on record as saying that in my opinion it marks a new departure both as to exhibitor control of all screen advertising and as to the possibilities of financing exhibitors' organizaions. In our state at least no seat tax levy or other antiquated methods of taxing the exhibitors directly will be needed hereafter.

I am glad to note you have other films of the same standard ready for our exhibitors.

No one in this state knows better than we do here in Utica what the right kind of an exhibitors' organization can do. It was through the efforts of the organization that we were enabled to open our theatres on Sunday.

I expect to see you and the balance of the boys at Albany about the middle of the month to take up legislative matters.

Sincerely yours,
WM. H. LINTON,
Treasurer, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, State of New York.

The activities of the Screen Protection Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have started the ball rolling, and if you will guard your screen so that no industrial films or advertising inserts appear without your being paid for them through your state league it will not be very long before every state league in the country will have sufficient funds to carry on the important work that is necessary this year to safeguard the interests and investments of the exhibitor.

Bear in mind that under our plan the control of all screen advertising remains in exhibitors' hands.

EVERY CENT OF MONEY DERIVED FOR SCREEN ADVERTISING GOES TO YOUR STATE LEAGUE to do with as they see fit. No part of the revenue is diverted to any more or less mythical or nominal "national" organization which does not know your local problems and which as far as the record shows, has never done anything to benefit the exhibitor in a national way.

The Screen Protection Committee has just begun to fight and will keep up its activities to get a full return to the exhibitor for the use of his screen.

No doubt about the exhibitors of the country being with us heart and soul.

Here is the evidence.

The following exhibitors' organizations have endorsed the activities of the Screen Protection Committee, and are co-operating with us:

Lane and Americanization

NO man could have listened for more than an hour to the talk of Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, at the Waldorf last Sunday without being a better American for it. The speech proved to be a dispassionate analysis of what America stood for, what it had stood for for a century and half, to itself and to the world at large. The secretary pointed out how the fathers so builded that control came from below, and he most sharply contrasted that doctrine with the scheme of government which vests authority in those at the top.

Probably three-fourths of Mr. Lane's talk was devoted to democracy as exemplified by the progress of the United States. Barely a quarter of it was given over to a discussion of what the motion picture industry could do to make the country a better place in which to live. The secretary was not sparing of his praise in telling what had been accomplished in less than twenty years. He pointed out new avenues of usefulness, new fields of entertainment—among these a portrayal of the achievements of more notable Americans, the telling of the story of men who had begun life with few advantages and many disadvantages and risen to eminence.

The response on the part of the industry to the invitation of the Americanization committee, through Mr. Lane, its chairman, was such that probably never before were there so many prominent and influential of its representatives assembled under one roof. It was a compliment to Secretary Lane, a tribute to the great movement of which he seems so easily and so naturally to be the spokesman. Every one who had been stirred and exalted by the words of the secretary could be pardoned a feeling of pride that to the motion picture industry had been offered such leadership.

The secretary's suggestion that the industry make a beginning on Lincoln's Birthday is one that is practical and one that undoubtedly exhibitors everywhere will welcome. Sight should not be lost, however, of the accompanying warning that the work to be done was not for a day or a year, but should be maintained so long as there was a boy or a girl in the United States who could not read or write.

The Two-Cent Piece and the Triple-Nickel

If the bill which the National Association of the Moving Picture Industry has succeeded in having introduced in Congress goes into effect the bulky but welcome two-cent piece of the days of fourteen cent porterhouse and cabbage at eight cents a head will be put in circulation to facilitate the collection of the revenue tax on theatre tickets. Those of us that can recall the appearance of those greasy old coppers which looked heavy enough to be used as paper weights and whose chief virtue in the eyes of the young was their ability to purchase two sticks of candy in place of one, are wondering what the new coins will look like and how many of them it will take to make a pound. Also how many pounds of them it will take to purchase a suit of clothes or even a good cigar, if the present high prices continue to soar.

A 15-cent piece is also asked of congress. This new coin will be of great convenience to the large number of moving picture houses where the standard price of admission if fifteen cents. There is a long line of other industries that will be able to use the triple-nickel to advantage.

"Best Sellers" and the Screen

It isn't every author of a "best seller" that can follow the example of the story writing editor of a certain magazine and print an article lauding the superiority of his novel over the screen version, when the changes made necessary by the new medium fail to meet his approval. Few writers of books are willing to believe that scenes of written description that are so effective on the printed page cannot always be made just as impressive on the screen—and are not always necessary. Vincente Blasco Ibanez is one of these. The author of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" took the trouble to inform himself at first hand by giving intelligent study to the matter in the company of directors and scenario writers before work of any sort was started on the screen version of his internationally famous novel. The Spanish writer is a wise man.

Selects Woman for Place on Ontario's Censor Board

THE Provincial Government of Ontario has made a radical departure from usual custom by appointing a woman to serve on the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors. The woman is Miss Caroline Cassels, who had been an employe of the provincial treasurer's department for a number of years and, previous to her appointment to the censor board by Peter Smith, the new provincial treasurer of the Farmers' Cabinet now in power, had been engaged as a spotter among the theatres of Ontario to see that the amusement tax was being collected. Despite Miss Cassels' service with the government, her initial salary as a censor has been fixed at $1,300 per year, or $25 per week.

Miss Cassels makes the fourth person to be serving as a moving picture censor in Ontario. In the past three men have been handling the work. With her appointment, the examination of pictures is to be divided, it is understood, so that the censors can work in shifts, projection equipment having been provided for this arrangement.

The Ontario government has decided to pass upon all moving picture posters to be used within the province. Hitherto, the Toronto police department has examined all posters for use in Toronto, but the police officials never knew what the censors had done to a picture with the result that posters depicting certain scenes were frequently approved when the actual scenes in the films had been deleted by the censors.

It is also interesting to note that previously only the posters used in Toronto have been censored, but, under the new plan, all posters for every centre in the jurisdiction of the Provincial Government will come under the official eye.

Indiana Theatreman Indicted.

Axel Pierson, proprietor of the Auditorium and Vaudette picture theatres at Connersville, Ind., has been indicted by the Fayette county grand jury for operating his theatres on Sundays. He was arraigned in city court and entered a plea of not guilty.

As to his keeping the theatres open on Sundays, there is no question, but he intends to leave to a jury the question of whether or not Sunday picture shows should be prohibited. The date of his trial has not been set, but it is expected his case will be heard in the near future.

Bill Protecting Film Trademarks Considered; To Investigate Pirating

THE House Committee on Patents will begin its investigations of trademark pirating in foreign lands when it opens hearings January 21 on the bill introduced some time ago by Congressman Schuyler Merritt, of Connecticut, extending the right of manufacturers to register trademarks in the United States and abroad.

There has been a great deal of activity of late in Washington, following out our program of entering foreign markets, for adequate trademark protection. The matter has become of very vital interest to manufacturers and business men everywhere, particularly in view of the reported wholesale scheme being carried on in foreign countries to appropriate American trademarks under certain technical provisions of the Berne convention.

A considerable number of manufacturers and others interested in this matter have signified their intention of attending the hearings. The committee also has before it a bill to give effect to certain provisions of the convention for the protection of trademarks and commercial names, made and signed at Buenos Ayres, Argentina, in 1910. At this convention the United States and the South and Central American countries agreed to the establishment of an international bureau, to be known as the International Trademark Bureau, in Havana, to protect all trademarks and tradenames. The United States, however, has not yet ratified the action.

Pirating Is Easy.

"It is possible in Europe and in several South American countries," said Mr. Merritt, "for any person to have a trademark or tradename issued in his favor without that person being in any way connected with the manufacture or exportation of the article. Under the regulations in many countries the trademark right is given to the first person applying for it, regardless of whether or not that person has any connection with the article.

"It has been reported that some unscrupulous persons in Europe have patented the trademark of many American concerns and can prevent the American from using their own trademark on goods they wish to export. The passage of this bill is imperative If we are to engage successfully in foreign business. LINZ.

Ned Wayburn Resigns as Capitol Revue Director

AN announcement, equivalent to forecasting enlarged and more ambitious activities for the new Capitol Theatre, New York, has come from Managing Director Edward Bowes of that institution. Ned Wayburn, who has staged the two revues that supplemented the motion picture and orchestral program, will withdraw as producing director because of his inability to devote the time essential to the frequent changes of bill contemplated in the Capitol policy. Expert producers, who will devote their time exclusively to this purpose, will hereafter control the actual staging of the offerings.

It has become known that Messmore Kendall, president of the Moredall Realty Corporation, owners and operators of the Capitol Theatre, has just purchased the two buildings at 231 and 233 West Fiftieth street, immediately adjoining the theatre, for scenic studios, rehearsal rooms, the costume department and to house its mechanical staff.

The rumor has revived that in addition to its fixed policy of picture presentation, the management aspires to make the Capitol one of the most conspicuous and prolific producing centers of the American stage, with facilities and a personnel permitting of successful producing in any of the several fields of public entertainment.

Carl Laemmle Threatens to Sue Dorothy Phillips

RUMORS regarding the Dorothy Phillips-Holubar controversy have at last been substantiated at the Universal offices in New York. Carl Laemmle has announced definitely that Miss Phillips and Allen Holubar, her husband, have left Universal City.

It is claimed that Miss Phillips and her husband are still under contract with the Universal and Mr. Laemmle intends to fight them to a finish and compel them to fulfill their contracts, it is announced.

"Allen Holubar and Dorothy Phillips have left Universal City," said Mr. Laemmle. "Both of them have always been given every consideration possible while with us. The have a contract with us which is as honest and fair an agreement as was ever written. This contract is legally binding. For the principle of the thing I am going to go to every extreme to see that both of them are forced to keep their written word. Their contracts have more than a year to run.

"If this matter is allowed to go without a fight, it will leave the film world in a very deplorable state, and it would be a very dangerous precedent to set for directors and players of the industry if this disregard of their legal agreement was allowed to go unchallenged."

Philadelphia Meeting Discusses Many Matters

THE appointment of an adjustment committee and the unanimous adoption of a set of trade rules governing the organization and the promulgation of an official announcement marked the second meeting of the Motion Picture Board of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce in the offices of the Select Pictures Corporation on January 8. Representatives of every exchange and every big theatre circuit in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware were in attendance.

Organized primarily for the purpose of co-operating with the National Committee on Censorship in curbing the policies of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, the board in its announcement asserts that its object is "to solve those problems common to all exchanges and all exhibitors and to adjust an equitable and more practical manner any difference that may arise between them.

The appointments to the adjustment committee representing the exchanges were as follows: George Ames, Pathe; V. R. Carrick, Interstate; Robert Lynch, Metro. The exhibitors were John McGuirk, Stanley Company of America, and George Bennethum of the Kline Bennethum Circuit.

While every phase of the distributing end of the business is covered in the board's trade rules, particular stress is laid on the matter of remittance. If close adherence to this rule is kept, large credit balances on the books of an exchange will be a thing of the past.

Another important rule for the unification of an exchange's affairs is the matter of changing dates. Requests for change in dates booked will not be considered unless the request is received more than fourteen days prior to the date originally scheduled, accompanied by a full payment of the rental and other charges on the feature in question and a new date that is satisfactory to the exchange, stipulated.

Harry M. White of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, who with George Dembow of Fox and John Clark of Paramount, were selected to head the organization, was chairman.

Indiana Operators Decline to Project Legion Slides

SOME members of the Moving Picture Operators Union, Local 194, at Indianapolis, have refused to throw slides advertising the American Legion on the screens of the theatres in which they work, because of what is said to be the Legion's attitude toward strikes.

J. O. Brenner, business manager of the union, said twenty-seven members of the union have decided individually on such a stand, but that action had not been official on the part of the union and that no suggestion had been made that such official action be taken. The operators, he added, were all overseas in the service during the war, and their decision in the matter was because of their individual feeling toward the Legion.

Gustave G. Schmidt, proprietor of the Crystal Theatre, and chairman of the committee of theatre owners which handled the operators strike recently, said no information had come to him regarding the reported stand taken by the operators. At a recent meeting of the Marion county organization of the American Legion, it was announced that the reported refusal of some of the moving picture operators in the city to handle slides advertising the Legion probably will be amicably adjusted by Legion officials and the operators.

Syndicate Plans Erection of Theatre in Bensonhurst

THE old homestead of the Benson family, founders of Bensonhurst, Brooklyn, situated at Eighty-sixth street and Twentieth avenue, has been torn down and in its place will be erected a motion picture theatre designed to rank as one of the most beautiful in Greater New York. It will be known as the Benson Theatre.

The theatre will be a one-story ornamental fireproof structure, having two stores on Eighty-sixth street and four stores on Twentieth avenue. It will have a seating capacity of 1,600 on one continuous floor, running into a balcony arrangement at the rear of the auditorium.

The theatre will be controlled by a syndicate known as the Benson Theatre Corporation, a subsidiary of a large New York concern, and will cost approximately $200,000. The date of opening will be September 1. Plans have been drawn and the work of building will begin when weather permits.

May Amend Revenue Act for Benefit of Salesman

FILM salesmen would be permitted to deduct expenses incurred for meals and lodgings while on the road, in computing their net income for income tax purposes, if the bill just introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Jacoway, of Arkansas, is made a law. There has been a great demand from traveling salesmen in all lines for an exemption of these expenses. They declare that this is just as much a part of their expense of doing business as any feature of the overhead expense of a business concern, and that to tax them in this regard is a discrimination.

The Jacoway bill provides for the amendment of paragraph (1), subdivision (a) of section 214 of the revenue act of 1918, to read as follows:

"All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered; traveling expenses including meals and lodging while away from home incurred in the pursuit of trade or business, and rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession, for purposes of the trade or business, of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity."

Indiana Pastors Want to Put an End to Sunday Shows

MEMBERS of the Ministerial Association at Plymouth, Ind., at a recent meeting in the public library, decided to take action to close the motion pictures theatres of the city on Sundays. They conferred with Mayor Holtzendorff and called his attention to the state law prohibiting such exhibitions.

Mayor Holtzendorff, it is understood, said that in his opinion the shows were a good thing, inasmuch as they provided good amusement for the young people and kept them in their home town instead of causing them to leave to find attractions in other places. He added, however, that if it was the wish of the people that the Sunday laws be enforced, he would see to it that the law is carried out.

Central Amusement Sues.

Damages of $5,000 are asked of the Central Amusement Company, Edward G. Sourbier, Charles M. Olson and the Charles E. Sheehan Company, all of Indianapolis, in a suit filed in one of the Marion county courts by the Sheehan Engineering Company.

The plaintiff company alleges it was engaged in building the Lyric theatre in April and completed its part of the work about May 1. At that time, it is alleged, the Charles E. Sheehan Company began additional work on the building, this company and the other defendants leasing from the Sheehan Construction Company the tools and equipment it had been using.

In August, the defendants, it is alleged, shipped the tools and equipment out of the state. The plaintiff says the value of the equipment, together with the money for the use of the equipment, is demanded in the suit.

The Reason for a Private Office in Filmland Is Just the Same as Everywhere Else.

Our architect (Sam Spedon) has drawn a birdseye view of the headquarters and home office of the Anyold Moving Picture and Photoplay Corporation, Ink., which we present for the benefit of exchangemen and film peddlers who can get a close-up from afar of the "works."

One's sense of proportions must be acute in order that the press agent's location may not be lost sight of. He is placed next to the shipping room of the home-office exchange. The jangle of flying film-cans as they hit one upon the other proves to him how peaceful life must be in a boiler factory.

The pufflicist is viewed by the big bosses as an evil that simply must be endured. He is only seriously considered when "the greatest photoplay of the year" takes a flop. Then, oh then, he's to blame for it.

Six then indicates where the body of the pufflicist is found after the aforesaid flop. Five is the target range, shooting gallery and film-can court of the shipping crew.

Figure 4 is the private office of the film-booker. Three is the private office of the exchange manager. Two is the private office of the assistant exchange manager. One is the private office of the stenographer-telephonist upon whom a cruel world ruthlessly breaks and gets stalled.

Gaze, next, upon 7—the private office of the President and Managing Director of the Anyold Moving Picture and Photoplay Corporation, Ink. The hallway is No Man's Land, a still, silent, impressive approach to the going-in end of the arrows. This completes the picture.

First National Exhibitors Organize At Momentous Atlantic City Meeting

Formation of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., Is Practically Completed at Capitalization of $10,000,000 and First National Theatres, Inc., Will Be Financed at Large Figure—Announce Officers Later

TWO score of the leading exhibitors of the United States and Canada gathered at the Hotel Traymore, Atlantic City, N. J., January 11 for the purpose of organizing the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and the

J. D. Williams.
First National's general manager, outside the convention hotel one half hour in three days.

First National Theatres, Inc. At 3.20 o'clock the following Thursday morning it was announced that the organization of the first named company was practically completed, that a board of directors, officers and trustees had been elected and that the remainder of the preliminary work would be done in the ensuing twenty-four hours. The names of the officers and trustees were withheld from publication pending their ratification by members throughout the country.

The proposed capitalization of the two companies was $10,000,000 for the Pictures company and $6,400,000 for the Theatre organization. The latter figure will be substantially increased. The new bodies are the outgrowth of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, established more than two years ago.

While the full story of the four days conferences will not be told until next week it was announced that the expectations of the promoters had been fully met and that no exhibitors who had come to Atlantic City for the purpose of "signing up" had departed without doing so. It was stated on Thursday morning that members of the new companies already have seventy-five houses under construction. The further declaration was made that a search among the members of the new corporations failed to reveal one that was not prepared to finance his own building operations. One of the members had announced his readiness to take over any houses any member cared to place in the market.

Directors Elected.

The directors elected by the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., are: Robert H. Lieber, Indianapolis; Harry O. Schwalbe, Philadelphia; N. H. Gordon, Boston; J. G. Von Herberg, Seattle; Jacob Fabian, Paterson, N. J.; Moe Mark, New York; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh; E. B. Johnson, San Francisco; John H. Kunsky, Detroit; Colonel Fred Levy, Louisville; Jay J. Picture and Theatre Companies.

The Pictures Company will deal only with productions and producers—in other words, it is a purchasing organization. The Theatres Company will have jurisdiction over the financing of local exhibitors, employing in a measure the mechanics of the building and loan companies, and also will devise ways and means of filling any vacant franchise in case the exhibitor or exhibitors in that territory for any reason do not care to affiliate with the body.

First National's treasurer pushed big things at session.

The plan of organization of the two companies is briefly an extension of the percentage territorial allotment system employed by the First National Exhibitors. Where, under the old basis a franchise holder paid a certain percentage of the cost of a negative for his jurisdiction, under the new form the grouped exhibitors in a given territory will take over a picture instead of the franchise holder. These separate corporations will pay a duly determined portion of the cost of the picture, in turn alloting among their individual members the cost of a picture, the percentage being based upon the size of theatre, clientele, etc. There will be a first run franchise, a second run franchise and others in a declining scale, according to the amount paid in by the theatre to the territorial corporation.

Star Booking System a Problem.

"The specific problem presented to the organizers of the Circuit in the beginning was the star system of booking," said an officer of the new company. "We believe we have succeeded in breaking up that system and also in scattering the stars. During the last year it became apparent that the small exhibitor was being so crowded and in some cases squeezed that it became imperative he should have the identical protection which the organization offered to its franchise holders.

"It has been our experience that by virtue of our collective purchasing power we can do many things in the way of strengthening and solidifying. One of the things at which we have aimed is the giving to an exhibitor, no matter how small, absolute control of a picture in his neighborhood. It will belong to him and he need be under no continuing apprehension that he is going to lose a booking.

"The new companies will not restrict producers to an outright purchase. If a manufacturer believes he has got a big picture we will play him on a percentage basis—that is, we will guarantee a satisfactory minimum and split with him on a determined ratio on all the money the picture makes above that sum. Wherever this percentage basis may obtain, means will be taken to protect exhibitors small and large.

Could Learn Showman's Business.

"Heretofore a producer by playing an exhibitor on a percentage basis could uncover the business a certain showman was doing if it should happen that for any reason he wanted to know—if, perhaps, he might later want to buy his house or to build another in the same section. Under our plan the figures on percentages, so far as individual theatre business is concerned will be retained within the books of each subsidiary corporation.

"The sales force of the present exchanges will be converted into exploitation staffs. All the men will go out—that is, such as may not be concerned in covering the minor parts of a district as are unsold—and do their utmost to show exhibitors how to get the most out of the pictures on their screens.

"The present organization hardly can be called an experiment. The basic plans on which we are to start at work on January 19 have been tried out the past year in Ohio, where E. M. Mandelbaum is the franchise holder. It may not be out of place to say that Mr. Mandelbaum is one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the two new companies."

Seen Around the Traymore

The high cost of rum has hit Atlantic City. One of the New Yorkers had promised his friends a bottle of Scotch as a table decoration for dinner Tuesday evening. The smoky liquid was present as stipulated, but the annexing of it cost the host a lot of sleuthing around town and $40 as well.

Earl J. Hudson was in charge of the First National publicity forces during the convention. He had intended returning to New York Wednesday afternoon, but he got word from "J. D." to postpone the departure "till further orders." It may have been this tip that caused the trade press representatives to cancel reservations for the same train and "stick around."

One of the unusual incidents of the convention was the disinclination to face a camera manifested by a number of the delegates.

The convention was notable for the talking that was not done in the lobby. The great majority of the exhibitors present had traveled a distance to do an important piece of business. The sessions practically were continuous day and evening. As a result little was seen of the more prominent delegates. The World man had been in town nearly two days before he collided with Harry Schwalbe, the secretary-treasurer of the Circuit, and then the Philadelphian was on his way to the elevator.

It was First National weather right from the start. On Tuesday the temperature was up to 40, but Wednesday saw a drop below freezing with a young gale blowing. The sun, however, shone throughout the day.

W. P. Dewees, of Canada, was smiling in the lobby Wednesday afternoon. He had just got word from Vancouver that "Auction of Souls" was going over big, "cleaning up," as he expressed it. "I refused to run the picture until I could secure the attendance of Aurora Mardiganian," said Mr. Dewees," and the result proves I was right."

Watterson R. Rothacker was host at a dinner party on Tuesday evening. His guests were William Sievers, Leslie Mason, Paul C. Mooney, Harry Koplar, J. R. Grainger, Mr. Cunningham, of Tom Moore's enterprises, Washington, and George Blaisdell.

A mid-western exchangeman and theatre owner was suffering from a severe cold. Watterson Rothacker advised him to try a half-hour's immersion in a hot salt water bath, in the meantime freely lathering himself with soap. The mid-westerner tried to follow instructions. When the soap failed to create

"Wet" and "Dry" Propaganda To Be Kept from Pictures, Says Cochrane

MOVING picture producers are going to stay on the fence in the liquor-prohibition fight," it was announced recently by R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal. Moving picture men are determined that their products will not be used as vehicles for propaganda, either for or against prohibition.

"I want to make myself plain on this point," said Mr. Cochrane, "because there have been many complaints recently from people who think they see in certain pictures or scenes, propaganda one way or the other. To accuse the big film companies of lending themselves either to the liquor interests or to the 'drys' is utterly foolish. They are big business firms manufacturing products for all people, not for any one class or creed.

Belief Spreading in Foreign Lands.

"In all my experience in the moving picture field, I never have known of a film company being used for proaganda of this kind. In fact, I do not know of but one case in which a film company ever was approached concerning the liquor question. That case was one in which the liquor interests asked that whenever a saloon scene was necessary in film stories, they would like to supply the fixtures and fit up the bar-room the way they thought saloons should look. It is needless to say that the film company which received this offer refused it."

"The feeling that American films contain 'dry' propaganda rapidly is assuming alarming proportions in foreign countries, especially in England, but also in the wine drinking countries, France, Italy, Spain and Portugal, as well as the Latin-American countries. Nothing could be more erroneous, of course, but it is a natural feeling growing out of the antagonism felt toward 'dry' America.

"As a matter of fact, moving pictures are built from scenarios and stories written by accredited authors, who never give a thought to propaganda of any kind. Sometime, they take advantage of the dramatic license which enables them to utilize certain cases of over indulgence in drinking. In doing this, they only portray true types, here and there, from life.

Is Not Trying to Inject Propaganda.

"I venture to say that a poll of the picture world would find film men about equally divided on the question of prohibition. The sooner the picture-going public learns that the film companies are business organizations, bent upon the manufacture of products that will sell to all classes of people, the sooner it will generally be realized that the film world is not trying to "force" any particular style of picture or to insinuate propaganda into its reels.

"It is more or less natural that the two great opposing interests on the liquor question should be suspicious of propaganda on every hand. It is ridiculous, however, for them to intimate that the moving picture companies are permitting anyone to use them as tools.

Such Pictures Would Be Rejected.

"The film companies could not afford it, to begin with. They could not sell such one-sided pictures. The exhibitors would not buy them. The exhibitors of this country, the owners and operators of the thousands of photoplay houses, are shrewd business men. They form the backbone of the moving picture industry. They exhibit only those pictures their patrons want to see. They know only too well that you can't cram propaganda down the throat of the average American.

"I want to take occasion right here to silence that oft-repeated contention of the anti-prohibitionists that film interests favor 'dry' laws on the theory that closed saloons mean full moving picture theatres. That belief is a fallacy. Where the cafe haunting part of the population turned after last July, I do not know, but it is certain that the increase in photoplay patrons in the last six months doesn't indicate they turned en masse to moving pictures for stimulation and excitement.

Wants Concrete Evidence Shown.

"The increase in moving picture attendance the latter part of last year, while it was exceptionally encouraging, was a natural increase due to post-bellum causes and to the steady improvement in moving picture output.

"In conclusion, I challenge any prohibitionist or any 'wet' advocate, to produce concrete evidence that the Universal has permitted 'wet' or 'dry' propaganda to appear in any of its films. If any one wants to take me up on this, a neutral body of judges can be selected to pass on the picture in question. If no one cares to take issue with me on this subject, let there be an immediate end to the carping criticism insidiously directed at the moving picture interests."

Pathe Features Please Exhibitors in Indiana

PATHE'S progress in the field of motion picture features was made quite apparent to exhibitors of the Indianapolis territory, when two of the late Pathe releases were shown to the trade. More than two score of the leading Indiana exhibitors gathered in the showroom of Pathe's Indianapolis exchange and saw the screening of "My Husband's Other Wife" and "The Prince and Betty." The former is the third of J. Stuart Blackton's series of Pathe productions, while William Desmond is starred in "The Prince and Betty," made by Jesse D. Hampton.

Both features were shown without any advance heralding and took the audience of exhibitors by storm. Some went so far as to assert that "My Husband's Other Wife" was the best feature released in six months. Bookings on the Blackton picture have been heavy on the strength of the trade showing.

Pathe's product was never received with better favor in the Indianapolis territory than it is today. R. S. Schrader, manager of the Indianapolis Pathe office, won the $1,000 prize offered by Hal Roach, producer of the Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies, to the manager recording the largest business on Lloyd's attractions during November, "Quimby Tribute Month."

The Strand Theatre of Evansville booked "My Husband's Other Wife" for a big run; the Isis of Kokomo, and the Victoria of Peru were among the prominent theatres signing up for the third Blackton offering.

Start Work on O. Henry Story.

An O. Henry story, "The Memento," has been selected by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as the next Corinne Griffith feature. Work on the new play will be begun at once under the direction of Edward Griffith. This will be the fourth time that Vitagraph has presented an O. Henry story as a five-reel feature.

"The Memento" has two separate themes, with urban and suburban settings. Lucien Hubbard wrote the scenario for the "small town" scenes while Graham Baker did the same for the city scenes, which have much to do with theatrical life.

Finishes "Law-Bringers."

Edward J. Montagne has just completed the script of the "Law-Bringers," a gripping tale of the Northwest, which will serve as a starring vehicle for Ralph Ince under the Selznick banner.

Mr. Montague has written and picturized over one hundred features in the past few years. Twenty-five adaptations were made in 1919 alone, twelve of which have already been released.

Famous Players-Lasky's Attitude Made Clear Through Adolph Zukor

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of Famous Players-Lasky, invited representatives of the trade papers to call upon him the other morning at his office and hear about the "Wall Street" connection of his firm, and to be told by Mr. Zukor all about its plans as applied to the exhibition as well as production of moving pictures. Mr. Zukor made it clear that Famous Players-Lasky is not going to build or operate theatres as a specific enterprise.

Digesting Mr. Zukor's remarks, the story of "Wall Street" and picture exhibition, as concerns Famous Players-Lasky, may thus be set forth:

Mr. Zukor determined more than a year ago that combinations of exhibitors could restrict the distribution of any specific product, and to protect Famous Players-Lasky he determined to enter into an arrangement whereby its pictures would be sure of circulation.

Thereupon the directors of Famous Players-Lasky decided to issue stock to add resources to the original capital and surplus of the organization. This stock was handled by Dominick & Dominick and underwritten by Kuhn-Loeb. It was placed upon the market and is listed on the New York Stock Exchange.

Stock Sales Increase Resources.

The $10,000,000 thus obtained is to be used in facilitating the operations of Famous Players-Lasky in the matter of production and distribution. Mr. Zukor intends to have a source of exhibition for his pictures in all of the justly celebrated "key cities" of the country.

By making arrangements with established showmen, who own or control theatres or chains of theatres, Mr. Zukor is assuring distribution. Just how this concentration of the exhibitor interest in Famous Player-Lasky product may be obtained is a result of varying methods in various circumstances.

"We feel that it is better to have a permanent arrangement with exhibitors in towns of 500,000 or more," said Mr. Zukor. "This will insure us distribution and will not require an annual bargaining for the renewal of contracts in the big centers of population.

"'Wall Street' does not control Famous Players-Lasky," he continued. "I am still in charge of the business, with Mr. Lasky in charge of production. I started this organization and will continue managing it until I shall decide it is time to turn it over to my son.

Decries Attempts at Monopoly.

"There never has been any intention to monopolize the picture business, and it would be foolish to try. Good pictures, and only good pictures, will control the picture business, and whoever makes good pictures can sell them. Every good picture that is made helps everybody in the business.

"The idea of crowding out an exhibitor in any town by threat of building against him and ruining him is all 'small stuff' and we never have and never will undertake such methods. The exhibitor we make an agreement with will own his own theatre, and we will not attempt to run it.

"We will simply go on making good pictures and protecting ourselves by insuring their distribution. How this shall be done will be left to each individual instance to be decided for itself."

Thus it would seem "Wall Street" does not own Famous Players-Lasky and Mr. Zukor is not going to retire from his control. The company is going to make good pictures and going to be sure that it has a place to show them after they are made.

This, at least, is the conclusion of the Moving Picture World representative who accepted Mr. Zukor's invitation to "sit in" at the meeting the Famous Players-Lasky chief had arranged as above detailed.

Give Much Publicity to Triangle's Recreated Plays

TRIANGLE recreated productions are receiving unusual publicity by managers of first run houses. Exhibitors are realizing that these productions of well known directors and popular stars are equal to the best being produced today. Many of these recreated features contain two or more stars, each of whom has recognized drawing power. In "The Weaker Sex," a Triangle production which is meeting with such marked success, Dorothy Dalton, Louise Glaum and Charles Ray are featured. In "A Gamble in Souls," which Triangle is releasing on January 25, Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond, each a popular drawing card in making this Thomas H. Ince production profitable for exhibitors. Besides being treated by exhibitors as new pictures of the better kind, critics in the metropolitan daily press are treating these productions as new first run films never before seen.

Mitchell Lewis to Take His Mother West

Mitchell Lewis, who is in New York for the purpose of taking his mother back to California, is expected to return to the Pacific Coast about January 15, and will start production at once on "Burning Daylight," the first of the Jack London stories that Metro will make and distribute for C. E. Shurtleff, Inc.

Fox New York Exchange to Have House Warming

EVERYTHING and everybody will be present at the formal opening of the new quarters for the Fox exchange in New York. As announced recently, this department of Fox Film Corporation will remain in the building at 130 West Forty-sixth street when all the other departments move to the corporation's new home in the fine West Fifty-fifth street building, just completed.

While remaining behind, however, the New York exchange will move, though this may sound paradoxical. It will move from its present space on the seventh floor to more pretentious and ample quarters. The entire tenth floor of the Forty-sixth street building has been secured by the exchange, and it will then have more than 8,500 square feet of floor space.

An interesting program has been arranged for the formal opening of the new quarters. The big reception room will be tastefully decorated and the entire sales staff of the branch will devote itself to the entertainment of visiting exhibitors and friends. The big feature will be a real jazz band. February 1 is the officially announced date, although the exchange manager expects to have his entire suite of offices transplanted to the tenth floor before that time.

Unique Triple Exposure in "Monopol Production

OFFERING a dramatic story with what is claimed to be the first successful example of a consistant triple characterization running throughout a story is "Crimson Shoals," one of Monopol Pictures Company's novelty features.

The story is a tale of feud between father, son and grandson, the two former being unaware of the identity of the third. It takes place on an island, where vast wealths of coral are found. There is a romantic theme and the ever- present novelty of one actor seen repeatedly in three characterizations at the same time in the same scene.

Cast Is Named for O'Brien Feature.

Following the announcement in last week's issues of the trade press that Eugene O'Brien had begun work on a new Selznick picture, "A Fool and His Money," it was made known from the Selznick offices this week that the cast has been fully chosen.

Appearing with Mr. O'Brien, as leading woman, is Ruby DeRemer, who has the role of Countess Aline in the production. Prominent in the supporting cast are Arthur Housman, Charles Craig, Jules Cowless, Frank Goldsmith, Wray Page, Emile LaCroix, George Dowling, Eric Finnstrom, Ned Hay, Louise Prussing, Betty Hutchinson, Baby Mary Carroll and Marguerite Forrest.

Crime Lags On Sunday In Southern Cities Where No Blue Laws Prevail

By Samuel E. Johnstone

LEGITIMATE amusement for the entertainment of humanity, when humanity has the time and inclination to avail itself of it, is one of the crying needs of the hour. Bodies worn by the strenuous labors of the week, and minds fagged with the tedious routine of professional activity are pleading at the bar of public opinion for some form of Sunday amusement, wherein the diversion supplied will conduce to the recreation of mind and body and replenish the energy the week has exacted as its toll for the livelihood given.

"Blue Laws" are a barrier standing obstinately between man and his Sunday amusement. In the South they are not general, as the majority of the states do not have such statutes. Georgia and South Carolina are the most extreme in their enforcement of such legislation and restriction. Motion picture houses and all other forms of amusement are prohibited. In South Carolina a movement is now on foot to even make it a misdemeanor to sell soft drinks, cigars, etc., on Sunday.

Florida Police Loaf Sundays.

Florida operates picture houses on the Sabbath and the records of the police courts show a comparatively small number of cases appearing in the docket on Monday morning. As one prominent citizen of Jacksonville remarked: "The number of cases tried for offenses committed on Sunday is trivial, and I attribute this very desirable condition to the fact that our people are given some place to go where there is no mischief."

Let us look at the "Lone Star State." Texas operates its theatres on Sunday. Here is how a prominent citizen of Dallas, a man in no way connected with the moving picture business, summed up the situation: "I have carefully observed the effect of Sunday amusement in my own city, and in other cities as well, for I have traveled extensively for the past fifty years. Invariably I have found more infractions of laws in the cities where amusements were barred on Sunday than in the cities where they were not. It is the motto of this city to keep its citizens busy through the week, and wholesomely entertained on Sunday.

Church Attendance Not Impaired.

"It is paying dividends, too. Church attendance has not been lessened; the morals of the city are high, and this section of the country is blessed with a scarcity of dives such as are not infrequently found in cities of this size. All things considered, and not going into the workingman's lack of time to frequent a playhouse during the week. I can honestly say that this city of Dallas has less crime than any other city of equal size that closes its playhouses on Sunday. I speak of crime on this day only."

Let us observe the "Volunteer State." There are no "Blue Laws" in Tennessee. Memphis, the largest city, operates its moving picture houses and legitimate theatres on Sunday. It is situated at the juncture of Arkansas and Mississippi. Thousands from these nearby states throng to this city for Sunday amusement, and in addition to the strangers in its midst Memphis has a navigable water front, always the abode of a certain crude element that follows this calling.

No "Lid" for Memphis.

Here is what a prominent citizen of Memphis had to say in an interview concerning the situation: "Not long ago a so-called uplift league was formed for the purpose of closing our theatres on Sunday. They carefully investigated the conditions in Memphis on Sunday and in five other cities of proportionate size where the Sunday lid was in effect. The conclusion reached was so 'discouraging' that the league abandoned its idea.

"In proportion, the church attendance in Memphis is higher than it is in any other city of this size in the South. Though our population is nearly 150,000, our police court dockets are practically without cases on Monday morning. The number of offenses committed on Sunday is negligible. This is doubtless because the city has entertainment on Sunday and even those inclined to be a little derelict adjust themselves to a peaceable Sabbath, the same as they adjust themselves to a law-abiding week day."

What Baker Said.

During the war a certain ministerial union presented a petition to the secretary of war praying for the discontinuance on Sunday of the army theatres at a certain cantonment. Here is Secretary Baker's reply to that petition: "I do not believe that the entertainment should be discontinued on Sunday because its discontinuance would, in many cases, cause officers and enlisted men to seek means of recreation that would not be morally equal to that supplied in the army."

If the war department, in which was vested that great responsibility occasioned by the war, approved of the Sunday operation of picture houses at a time when the enemies of America were leaping at the throat of the nation, taxing every energy, straining every nerve to equip an army to go upon the field and face Hun bullets, it behooves the reformers to take off their stamp of disapproval.

The Day of the Working Class.

If moving pictures are immoral, illegal, corrupt and inimical to good on Sunday, then they are wrong for the same reason any day of the week. The fact that they can operate on week days is all the more reason why they should operate on Sundays, when men and women of the working class—those whose care-worn faces and tired bodies are numbered among the toiling millions—have an opportunity to witness a performance without having to pay half a night's sleep in addition to the price of admission.

Atlanta has the lid clamped on tight. Yet, that there is a strong tendency there for some form of Sunday amusement, is evidenced by the following quotations from its daily papers:

"Atlanta's desire for some form of amusement on Sunday was forcibly demonstrated Sunday afternoon when approximately 5,000 persons went to the Auditorium for the first showing of feature moving pictures here on Sunday under the auspices of the Atlanta Community Service."

Hungry for Recreation.

The pictures referred to were identically of the same kind as shown every day in the week in the high-class picture houses. Here is another statement quoted from the same paper setting forth the remarks of a prominent Atlanta citizen:

"The way people flocked to the Auditorium Sunday afternoon shows how hungry they are for something to do on Sunday. They were present from the grandparents to the boy and girl, and many parents who couldn't come unless they brought the baby, were there with the baby."

Will anyone say that there was anything demoralizing about such a performance?

Not very long ago four young men were arrested on the outskirts of the city for shooting "craps" on Sunday. They were members of a very good family, of high social standing in the community. In police court on Monday morning they were asked what excuse they had to offer for their conduct. One of them said they didn't have anything else to do on Sunday. These very same boys are among the best patrons the picture houses have on week nights. They may shoot dice during the week but it is secondary to their fondness for the screen.

Not Wholly a Theological Question.

Those who are endeavoring to suppress the operation of playhouses, especially the moving picture theatres, should approach the matter in another light than theological. There is doubt in the minds of many whether or not the Father of all men intended Sunday to be a morgue. Nothing is more wearing on the nerve energy of a human being than idleness. You have got to let out and acquire anew that which you have lost. It will not come from a day of religious meditation and parlor indolence.

Would you close the covers of the countless books that have been written on the "Life of Christ?" Would you deny youth the opportunity to peruse the pages containing the biographical sketches of such American characters as Lincoln, Grant, Lee and Jackson? Would you deny to them the privilege of reading the life of Roosevelt or Wilson? Would you discourage them from reading the fiction of Harold Bell Wright? This list could be continued but enough has been recited to suffice.

"Morally and Ethically Right."

If you would not deny to them the right to read such books, then you

Selznick Adds Serial Production To Long List of Film Activities

FURTHER indication that the producing activities of Selznick Enterprises are to include all classes of films that have proven money makers for the exhibitors of the country is evidenced in the announcement that Albert Payson Terhune has been engaged to write the first serial to be produced by the Selznick organization.

This interesting news to exhibitors and the public came from Myron Selznick, who reserved the name and theme of the serial for a later announcement. Mr. Selznick accented the fact, however, that in its first serial production, as in all its other motion picture activities, greatest care would be taken to make the picture exactly what exhibitors want, which is another way of saying that it will also be what the general public wants.

It is deemed significant that Selznick has decided to enter the serial production field. For several weeks exhibitors have noticed daily that the Selznick forces were getting into a stride for the new year which promises to eclipse the pace in picture making that has been set in the past. The serial announcement is but another link in the strong chain being forged.

Terhune's Wide Experience.

Robert Ellis has been chosen to direct the Select serial.

As usual, Myron Selznick took great care in selecting an author. Albert Payson Terhune has traveled over the entire world as an explorer, he has studied and written historical books, was at one time a newspaper man and has contributed fiction and non-fiction articles to practically every one of America's leading publications. He is a consistent contributor to the Saturday Evening Post. It is therefore apparent that Terhune is entirely capable of writing a plot of unusual interest and one that will have a wide appeal to the public.

Although no definite announcement has been made regarding the actual producing of the serial, it is probable that it will be made at the eastern studios of Selznick.

To Start Work on Leonard Serial.

Wally Van, supervising director for the Benny Leonard serial and J. Gordon Cooper, director, expect to shoot the first scenes of the Leonard serial next week. Work will be commenced at the Hallmark Studio at Thirty-eighth street, New York.

Third Scenic Release.

"I and the Mountain" is the name of the third scenic adventure production to be released by Robertson-Cole. It is the story of the adventure of a young man who found himself in the mountains. The story is true and Jock Rantz, who is the main character, is the director and art title man for the Adventure Scenics. Mr. Rantz is a college graduate and in the picture Mr. Rantz against the background of the scenic beauty brings home the fact that everything cannot be learned in a college. Adventure Scenics were all booked by the Capitol Theatre in New York and leading exhibitors throughout the country have successfully displayed them.

Allens' New Theatre in Winnipeg Has Oil Furnace and Signal System

MESSRS. JULE and J. J. ALLEN of Toronto will open their brand new theatre at Yorkton, Saskatchewan, in a few days, it is officially announced. This is the second of the new theatres to be opened in the Canadian West by the Allens since the first of the year, the other new house being the Allen Theatre, Winnipeg. The Allens also opened the fine new St. Clair Theatre, Toronto, a handsome suburban theatre, on January 12. The Allens now have fifty theatres in actual operation throughout Canada, with eight or more large houses well under way or ready to be built.

New Allen theatres are planned for St. John, N. B.; Halifax, N. S.; Montreal, Toronto, St. Catharines, Ontario; Calgary, Alberta; Vancouver, B. C., and other cities. It was only thirteen years ago that Bernard Allen and his two sons, Jule and J. J. Allen, opened their first moving picture theatre in Brantford, Ontario. It was not long before they had a circuit of store shows, but they disposed of these in order to go to Calgary, Alberta, where they eventually erected what was considered to be a very handsome moving picture theatre.

Allens Remember Brantford.

The Allens recently returned to Brantford, Ontario, the city where they made their first start, and bought the Brant Theatre, the largest local house, seating 1,200. They decided to close this for four weeks, during which time it is to be remodelled. An organ has been installed as one of the new features.

Announcement has also been made that the Allens have acquired the Classic Theatre, Stratford, Ontario, which has 700 seats. This house, too, was closed for a re-decoration, and for the installation of a new heating system. The new manager of the Classic is Gilbert Smith, a returned soldier. W. I. Kemp was formerly in charge of this house.

Miss Bessie Barriscale Finishes Her Latest Robertson-Cole Film

AFTER a notable success in "Beckoning Roads," which was released during the holidays, Bessie Barriscale, the Robertson-Cole star, has just completed "The Luck of Geraldine Laird" which will be released in January. In this picture, the blonde star will achieve a new triumph, according to reports from her studios where everybody is enthusiastic over the new production. It is the first picture in which Miss Barriscale has been directed by Edward Sloman, who came to the B. B. studios with an enviable record for artistic work.

"The Luck of Geraldine Laird" will mark the third of a series of Kathleen Norris stories which Miss Barriscale has been putting on the screen. The first of these pictures was "The Heart of Rachael," which proved so successful that the star went on to "Josselyn's Wife" which she followed with the present picture.

A Two-Type Story.

The picture gives Miss Barriscale opportunity to offer a number of widely varying pictures of episodes in the life of Geraldine Laird, the leading character. Two of the chief ones show Mrs. Laird as a small town woman, greatly devoted to her two babies and rather careless of her personal appearance; and later, she goes to New York as a gloriously clad revue star, who, by a clever characterization on the stage, wins a wide following in the metropolis.

Miss Barriscale has selected a strong cast to support her. It is larger than the usual supporting cast. Opposite the star will be seen Niles Welch, who was engaged by Miss Barriscale after a career with a number of other big stars. The second man in the company is Boyd Irwin, who plays a friend of Geraldine Laird. William Mong undertakes a role new to his repertoire, the theatrical manager, a Jewish-American type, who gives Geraldine Laird her chance on the stage. Rosetta Marstini, a French actress, plays the part of a Fifth avenue modiste.

Nannine Wright, one of the famous "mothers" of the screen, has opportunity for another of her characterizations. She is a grandmother, as usual, for Geraldine Laird has two children, played by Mary Jane Irving and Theo-Alice Carpenter, two of the screen's most capable "baby" actors. George Hall, as a young New York man, Dorcas Matthews, who was with Miss Barriscale in "Beckoning Roads," Maggie Halloway Fisher, Ashton Dearholt and Sisks Swanson round out a fine cast.

Richmond Is Sweet on Piedmonts, Prices, and Moving Picture World

By Nat Bregstein

His story below, an informal talk-fest with the exhibitors of Richmond, Va., will be followed by opinions of exhibitors in every city he visits. Richmond is located on our map as 100 per cent subscribed to Moving Picture World.)

THE newest and most up-to-the-day theatre in Richmond is the Broadway, seating 800, owned by the Pryor Circuit of Danville, Virginia, and managed by Ken E. Finlay. "A twelve-piece orchestra is not exactly what the natives of Richmond have been used to hearing. We have it here," quotes Mr. Finlay. His orchestra is an innovation in town and helps to get the business.

Within a stone's throw of the Broadway is the Colonial, where H. Bernstein holds court for the Jake Wells interests, and guides the destinies of the following theatres: The Colonial, Bijou, Isis, Victor, Odeon, Strand and has this to say: "I believe that the producer, when placing his national advertising, should arrange to have the local exhibitor mentioned.

"Regarding business," Mr. Bernstein continued, "we are holding our own. We have increased prices five cents. Our admisions are now 20 and 25 cents, excepting the Bijou and Isis, which are 25 cents and 30 cents. There are too many theatres in Richmond. I base my statement on these statistics: Richmond has a population of 200,000—of which 125,000 are white. Total theatres in town are fourteen—total seating capacty of all theatres about 8,000. Only 30 per cent. of the population visit the show houses. Now figure out for yourself whether I am right or not."

The Contract Puzzle.

After this mathematical problem, I wandered into the Rex Theatre, owned by W. Hoover and managed by J. F. Lay. The latter was indulging in the gentle pastime of trying to fathom a contract. "They always seem to be making mistakes," said Mr. Lay. "Oh, yes, we have raised our prices from 10 cents to 11 cents."

The Theato is another down-town second run house, also charging tax—now 11 cents, thank you. C. Vaden has been the boss here for ten years, and while it is the oldest theatre in the city, it is still getting new business. Western stuff hits on all cylinders at the Theato.

While at the Theato, I met A. R. Cass, proprietor of the Star Theatre, a 200 seater. Mr. Cass was showing Mr. Vaden some slides when I came in with M. P. W., and in one minute and forty-five seconds secured the decision—verdict—$3.00 to M. P. W.—one year's subscription for Star Theatre, 512½ Louisiana street. Mr. Cass conducts the Star Theatre as a side line—his regular business is confectionery and he is sweet on making the Star a winner.

Gives the "Gang" a Chance.

Well, here we are in the presence treasurer of the Blue Bird Theatre—a pretty little house doing a good business. Mr. Klein wishes it to be known that he is an old subscriber to M. P. W., and that he lets the "gang" look it over. Some philanthropist!

We are now in the colored section. "Look at us now," chirps Charles A. Somma, owner of the Hipp & Dixie theatres. "Take a peep at the balcony of the Hipp. I spent $35,000 fixing things up so that the colored folks would have a regular show house."

It certainly looked it. Mr. Somma is to be commended for bringing 135th street and Eighth avenue, New York near to Second street, Richmond. He claims doing business with the film boys is like playing with good poker players—they keep on raising you all the time.

Another exhibitor in the colored section and old friend of M. P. W. is none other than R. M. Hollinger, owner of the Globe Theatre, seating 350. Mr. Hollinger is a young man blessed with a fine personality and would make a crackerjack salesman. He has a kick coming in the way the prints reach him. He believes some exhibtors from the Carolinas don't take proper care of them. He wishes to offer a suggestion regarding the handling of prints, and that is: the old method of putting them in boxes is best.

Batting Like Babe Ruth.

Still another exhibitor in town is K. E. Boyle, manager of the Victoria Theatre, South Richmond. After getting Mr. Boyle's $3.00, I asked him if he also intended raising his price. "After looking at my contracts," said Mr. Boyle, "I think I will and then some. My admission is now 17 cents."

Having called on all theatres and every exhibitor having subscribed and re-subscribed, your truly met Carl F. Senning, formerly manager of Fox's office, Washington and now First National manager in Richmond. "Conditions are exceedingly bright for the exhibitors throughout the South, especially through the Carolinas and Virginia," said Mr. Sennig, "and the boys are all making money. They are enthused over our new franchise arrangement. We are sharpening our pencils. As for myself, I have a hunch—Old Man Censor is about to get on the job, and I am getting my fighting togs on."

Bregstein will give, next week, his talk-fest held with the picture-folk of Roanoke, Va.

Runs Three Pathe Serials Same Day.

The New American Theatre at Alliance, Ohio, has established the unusual record of running three Pathe serials on the same day each week. This innovation was started on January 6, on which day the New American's program contained Episode No. 1 of "The Adventures of Ruth," starring Ruth Roland; episode No. 6 of "The Black Secret," starring Pearl White, and Episode No. 7 of "Bound and Gagged," starring George B. Seitz.

Gladys Brockwell Begins Her Thirty-First for Fox

FOLLOWING a vacation of three weeks, her first in more than ten months, Gladys Brockwell has started work on her thirty-first feature for Fox Film Corporation. It is called "The Mother of His Children" and is the first of a series of six stories which Barbara LeMarr Deely will write for "the girl of a thousand expressions." Edward J. LeSaint is directing Miss Brockwell in this feature. William Scott again is leading man with the popular star, this being the twelfth picture he has made with Miss Brockwell. Frank Leigh, Nigel de Brullierre and two small children, Jean Eaton, aged 3, and Nancy Caswell, aged 6, round out the cast.

There is a taste of the Occident and a taste of the Orient in this drama. Gladys Brockwell has scored some of her greatest success in "mother roles" and the author has given her in this story one of the most appealing parts she ever had. Incidently, it is a role that will give Miss Brockwell an opportunity to show her remarkable versatility.

William Scott always makes an excellent hero and his work with Miss Brockwell has been of the highest order. The author in writing the story had Mr. Scott in mind, and Director Le Saint is of the opinion that in "The Mother of His Children" the popular leading man will score one of the greatest successes of his career.

Cradle Rocking for an Infant Industry

Glancing Into Moving Picture World Ten Years Ago

TEN years ago San Antonio was being "discovered" as a fitting "location" for producing photodramas. Wallace McCutcheon, a pioneer in the business, was then manager of the production department of George Melies, of Paris, and Paul G. Melies, with Mr. McCutcheon, had gone to the Texas city to produce.

During the past summer Leopold Wharton has been producing pictures in San Antonio, several others, at odd times, having also visited the Alamo to make pictures. San Antonio has lately revived the effort originally put forth in 1910.

Before Days of Strands and Capitols.

In all 176 theatres for the showing of pictures were projected as per issue dated January 22, 1910. They were scattered all over the country were the Cozys, Uniques, Vaudettes, Familys, Electrics, Scenics, Nickelets and Pastimes of days before the Rivolis, Rialtos and States of these modern times had suggested a line of "titles" for picture showmen to copy.

As an indication of the times Moving Picture World, of the date before us, included 34 pages, cover and all. In it were 15 pages of advertising, five pages of editorial expression, 5 pages of "film stories," 3 of film comment, 1 of releases and a page of news. The rest was odds and ends. The moving picture publicist was a rara avis ten years ago!

A. C. Clapham had purchased the interests of his partners, F. C. Aiken and S. S. Hutchinson, becoming sole owner of the Theatre Film Service Company, of San Francisco.

"Signs of the Times."

Under this caption it was stated that the Gem Theatre, Baltimore, had discontinued vaudeville and "substituted in its place three reels of first class pictures with trap drum and effects and the latest illustrated songs." Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld would have a tough time getting away with such entertainment now-times.

Newark (N. J.) officials served notice on eighty moving picture theatres in that town that celluloid films must be abolished and "non-flam" substituted as a fire-prevention measure. January 11, 1910, was set as the date to start the exodus of celluloid.

Exit Lubin's General Manager.

"A Stolen Rose" and "Reunited at the Gallows" were films canceled by a Philadelphia "exhibitor" for the reason: "I don't want to flash such names in front of my place." The words "stolen" and "gallows" were too suggestive of crime.

Dr. Berthold A. Baer, manager of Lubin's interest for twelve years, tendered his resignation and proposed to embark in business for himself. Ten years later we find Dr. Baer writing "sob stuff" for Frank Campbell's undertaking establishment and printing it in New York dailies at paid advertising rates.

"High grade drums and sound effects for moving pictures" were being advertised by the Yerkes Manufacturing Company, Inc., of New York.

The Paramount Film Company was doing a renting business at 61 West Fourteenth Street. We search in vain for the name of Adolph Zukor, but find, instead, F. Pennino, F. Graf and I. Goetz as the announced officials.

Bewailing "Foreign Invasion."

"Out of about forty features commented on in the last issue," said an editorial, "exactly half were foreign subjects and were made abroad."

F. H. Richardson was just getting his "projection department" under way and thus commented: "We all know the aggravation caused by ladies who persistently refuse to remove their headgear, even though it be a cross between a washtub and an aeroplane in size." More signs of the times!

The Vitagraph entertainment was "reviewed," in paragraph reading: "Messrs. Albert E. Smith and J. Stuart Blackton supplied two of the numbers, the former showing how he used to mystify audiences with sleight-of-hand work, and in one of his tricks he used the silk flag used in making the first Vitagraph picture."

The Amusement Association of Massachusetts was organized in Boston by New England moving picture exhibitors. Nat Burgess, Walter E. Greene, Frank J. Howard, Nathan H. Gordon and Ernest H. Horstmann were mentioned among the incorporators.

F. H. Stewart was appointed traveling representative of Edison. His was a sales promotion and machine inspection mission, Mr. Stewart being rated as an experienced operator.

Films were beginning to tread upon the toes of the churches. T. W. Lamb filed plans for remodeling the German Evangelical Church, is East Houston Street, New York, into a moving picture theatre. There was a petition entered in Boston by seventy-one citizens who objected to changing the Day Street Church into a picture show.

Suffering Circus Men!

Moving pictures took possession of the New York Roof Garden "and were applauded by the spectators who attended the opening."

In a story of the film, "The Call," it is related: "There is possibly no profession so alluring as that of the circus. . . . Once you have capered and cavorted around the country with a circus you become innoculated with the germ of 'Febris Circensis.'"

Now we know what's the matter with Harry Raver, Tom North, Wells Hawks, et al. They get that way through suffering from "Febris Circensis." Glad "The Call" wasn't that socialistic sheet Burleson won't let through the mails at a cent-a-pound.

"News," we'll say, "was scarce" ten years ago. Better luck with Moving Picture World dated January 29—to be "reviewed" next week.

Powerful Appeal in "Marked Men" Universal Picture With Harry Carey

By Robert C. McElravy

THERE is "much in little" in the new Universal Harry Carey Production, entitled "Marked Men." Which is merely to say that it is not an involved or complicated story, but one of the simple, direct kind which goes straight to the heart. There will perhaps always be a quarrel between different minds as to what constitutes the best art, the brilliant and showy or the simpler plots, and the answer might well be that people want both in judicious quantities. Whereas such a story as "The Great Air Robbery" thrills and astounds the spectator almost beyond measure, a production like "Marked Men" warms up the finer emotions with its human touch.

Story by Peter B. Kyne.

The history of "Marked Men" is brief but interesting. It appeared first as a short story, entitled "The Three Godfathers," in the Saturday Evening Post, Peter B. Kyne being the author. As a short story it attracted much comment. Later the Universal company brought it out as a short screen production for the regular program. Here again it caused much talk. The new version in six reels, under the present title, was adapted in scenario form by Tipton Steck and produced by Jack Ford. The writer agrees with many people who are inclined to rank it with the several best productions of the year.

The Rise of Jack Ford.

It is pleasing to note, in this connection, the strides made by Jack Ford, the young director who brought out this production. He has been co-operating with Harry Carey, the leading player of the cast, in previous subjects, and has before shown unusual skill in bringing out this performer's best abilities. In "Marked Men" he has passed all previous efforts—not only is Jack Ford's eye for pleasing locations in evidence, but he demonstrates a capacity for getting real drama out of situations that might easily have been skimped.

The story of "Marked Men" can be told in a few words. It follows the fortunes of three escaped convicts who have entered the small desert town of Trade Rat. Here the leader, Harry, befriends a girl in a dance hall. He is planning to marry her and reform, when one of his pals informs him that the sheriff is wise and that they must make a speedy getaway. "Just one more job before we go," is the plea of his pals, and Harry finds himself unwillingly taking part in a bank robbery.

The Desert Tragedy.

With the stolen funds in their possession the men escape to the desert. Here they encounter a sand storm, their food and water run low, and they wander aimlessly on in the scorching heat. In time they chance upon a covered wagon, which contains a dying woman with a newborn child. The mother, in her last moments thinking only of the baby's future, appoints these three rough men as its godfathers. The men accept the charge with wondering eyes, marveling at the trust imposed upon them.

Back over the long desert trail the men struggle, carrying the child in its swaddling clothes, feeding it the last of the store of milk the mother had given them. One of Harry's pals drops on the sand and dies; then the second does likewise, and Harry alone reaches the desert town. He staggers into the dance hall carrying the baby and the stolen money. He is returned to the penitentiary, but granted a quick pardon, on request of the sheriff to the governor. Then Harry and his girl marry and make a home for the baby.

Interest Which Rises Steadily.

Three contrasting forms of life are brought out in this picture in vivid style. The penitentiary scenes at the beginning are exciting and done with skill. The escape of the three pals is the result of a carefully devised scheme, which the spectator is able to follow intelligently in every detail. Then come the scenes depicting life in the desert town, which are equally convincing. Harry's interest in the girl and the awakening desire to lead a better life are admirably shown, and this gives added force to the evil circumstances which draw him back temporarily into criminal ways. Then come the desert scenes, which carry a steadily rising interest.

The Great Outstanding Feature.

It has been stated by someone that the most dramatic moment in all literature is that describing the manner in which Robinson Crusoe and his man Friday first discovered human footprints in the sand of their island home.

But it could scarcely have been more astonishing, or more freighted with consequence than the moment when the three convicts looked into the covered wagon and found a mother with a newborn child.

The development of this particular crisis is the great outstanding feature of this simple story. It has been accomplished with reverence and conviction. The influence of the child upon the rough natures of the men is immediate and leads them to sacrifice life itself, with the single exception of Harry, in order to carry out the promise made to the dying mother.

Suppose This Horse Would Have Galloped Away If Richard III Had Cried "My Kingdom"—and All That?
Nope. This horse is a real thinker. He is sticking with dainty Shirley Mason in her first Fox production, "Her Elephant Man."

should encourage them to witness a visualization of these characters. If these books are readable on Sunday, then the portrayal of the characters are morally and ethically right on Sunday. What would be more inspiring than the picturization of these characters?

Sunday motion pictures were approved by the war department; they are approved by public opinion. The flower of American manhood, 50,000 in number, sleeping today beneath the sod of another hemisphere, the pride of all Europe whom they died to serve, the glory of America whom they died to save, had it provided for them on the Sabbath Day, and none went to the tribunal of the Almighty with greater assurance of immortality than did they.

Elaborate Interior Sets Used In Holmes' "Nothing But the Truth"

SEVERAL of the scenes in Taylor Holmes' first independent production, "Nothing But the Truth," which is a current release by Metro, portray the interior of a magnificent Long Island country home, and have been carried out in the most luxurious manner. The play was adapted to the screen from the novel by Frederic Isham and William Collier's laugh comedy by James Montgomery.

One of the principal scenes is in the hall of the house. The set was planned by Director David Kirkland in collaboration with one of New York's leading interior decorators. Genuine Gobelin tapestries, which tell the story of a medieval hunt, done in rich weaving and design, are a particular feature of this set.

Louis Quinze chairs and a table are placed in artistic arrangement about the hall, together with a rosewood grand piano. Leading to the hall, is a series of three steps, at each side of which stands a great Ming vase, in height equal to that of the average man. These vases represent an ancient period in Chinese art and were obtained from one of Fifth avenue's exclusive galleries.

Beautiful Bedroom Set.

Another scene represent the dining room in the country house. It was planned along the lines of the traditional English barional dining hall. The walls were paneled with oak and hung with oil paintings. Through the center of the room ran a long carved table with high backed oak chairs, all of the Tudor period.

Still another interesting set was built for the incident where Taylor Holmes, in the character of Bob Bennett, is discovered in the bedroom of one of the girls who is a guest at the home party in the country home. He has walked into her room to escape detection, thinking the room was empty.

When the light is turned on it reveals an exquisite bedroom done in soft greys, and the owner of the female voice, who asked who was in the room, sits upright in a large four-poster bed.

Strong Cast.

The picture was made by Taylor Holmes Production, Inc., and Mr. Holmes appears as star in the production as well. He has surrounded himself with a Broadway cast of players, which includes Elsie Mackay, as leading woman, who is now playing the leading female role in Booth Tarkington's great comedy hit of the season, "Clarence," at the Hudson Theatre.

Ned Sparks, a well-known farceur, plays the role of the Monocle Man, which he created in the original stage production. Dolly, the "little old pal" of the story, is created for the screen by Marcelle Carroll, wife of Earl Carroll, the songwriter. Others in the cast include Ben Hendricks, Edna Phillips, Radcliffe Steele, Elizabeth Garrison, Charles Craig, Colin Campbell and Beth Franklyn.

Would Stop Crime Films.

Three of the eight members of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress, Senator Thomas P. Gore and Representatives John W. Harreld and William W. Hastings, on January 7, introduced identical bills in both branches of Conress "prohibiting the bringing into the United States and the carrying and transporting therein from one state, territory, or district to another state, territoy, or distict of pictures, films, moving picture film or films purporting to show or to stimulate the acts and conduct of ex-convicts, desperadoes, bandits, train robbers, bank robbers, or outlaws in the commission or attempted commission of crime or acts of violence, and to prohibit the use of the mails in carrying communications relating to the same, and providing punishment therefor."

New Freight Rates on Films.

The United State Shipping Board has announced new freight rates on celluloid scrap and moving picture films between North Atlantic ports and Lisbon and Oporto, Portugal.

The rates on celluloid scrap have been set at 90 cents per cubic foot to Lisbon and $1.05 per cubic foot to Oporto; moving picture films will be carried to Lisbon at the rate of $1.40 per cubic foot or two per cent. ad valorem, and to Oporto at $1.60 per cubic foot or two per cent. ad valorem.

The advertising pages of Moving Picture World tell the story of picture production as it progresses week by week. The text pages give the minute details. Louisville, Ministers Unearth Blue Laws to Thwart Sunday Shows

FOR the first time in ten years a real fight has been launched in Louisville, Ky., against Sunday theatres, amusements, etc., and the fight came out of a clear sky. The Louisville Ministerial Association approved resolutions adopted by the Baptist Ministerial Association, and the resolutions were presented to the mayor with a request that he enforce the old statutes known as the "Kentucky Blue Laws" for this purpose.

The mayor's mind is open on the subject and so far he has made no decision. Mayor Smith is a Republican and the state recently passed into Republican control. The house of representatives of the state legislature is Republican. In the event Mayor Smith supports amusements and the matter is carried to the state court of appeals, it would probably be easy to get through a new legislative enactment superseding the old laws.

Legislature May Act.

If the mayor decides to uphold the "Blue Laws," a bill will be introduced through the efforts of the amusement people and others affected, and in view of the fact that the legislature is now in session, it is believed that amusements will continue to operate regardless of the local outcome.

On the other hand it appears almost certain that new legislation may be enacted at the present session of the legislature that will disqualify the "Blue Laws," to prevent further troubles during the next two years.

Mayor Smith in discussing the subject said: "My mind is made up on one point, namely that if the ministers must see the amusements closed on Sunday, they will also have to walk to church or ride the street cars. Telephones will only be used for calling doctors, and in real emergencies; there will be no Sunday papers; automobiles will not be permitted to operate on the Sabbath, and every retail establishment in the city will close on Saturday night for twenty-four hours. If we are to revert to the old 'Blue Laws' to support the church, then we will operate everything on the same basis."

Would Enforce Law in Entirety.

The mayor also said: "If Sunday shows must be prohibited to fill legal requirements, the law must be enforced in its entirety. I can't make fish of one and flesh of the others. If a man desired to play golf on Sunday he would have to do so without a caddie. There would be no baseball, no open filling stations, no taxicabs, drug stores would sell drugs only, and only for missions of charity would autos be permitted to operate."

While thirty-four ministers went on record in the matter, there are a number who take different views. The Rev. E. L. Powell, who was not at the meeting but who is one of the men to be reckoned with, is bitterly opposed to the movement, stating that he did not believe people could be driven to religion and that it would do more harm than good.

Ministers Disagree.

Other ministers have taken the same stand. The Rev. C. W. Welch, of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, said: "The institution of the Sabbath must be protected. But, let's not treat moving picture patrons as we did saloon patrons, by closing down their playhouses and furnishing no substitute."

The Rev. Dunbar Ogden, Second Presbyterian Church, said: "Closing the theatres will not fill the churches. We must give the patrons a substitute if we take their pleasure away."

Fred Dolle, of the Broadway Amusement Enterprises, controlling a number of local theatres, said: "I don't believe the theatrical men will take any legislative action, as such an effort failed two years ago. We believe that Sunday shows are of such vital interest that the people will safeguard their own interests, and it would do more good for the move to legalize Sunday theatres if it came from another source. Enforcement would make the law so odious that things would swing back to normal channels."

Diplomatically Censured.

The original resolutions stated that the mayor and city officials were violating their oath of office if the "Blue Laws" were not enforced, but this line was marked out before being presented, for fear that it would antagonize the mayor.

L. J. Ditmar, president of the old Kentucky Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, the Louisville Photo Play Association, Majestic Amusement Company and other picture enterprises, said: "Enforcement of an obsolete law of this kind would cut revenues materially and result in poorer films during the rest of the week, while it would deprive many residents of much needed pleasure. I don't believe it is anything to worry about, however, as general enforcement of the law would cause it to be repealed, or discarded locally at least."

Unitarian Dares Association.

The Rev. R. Ernst Akin, pastor of the Unitarian Church, is probably somewhat responsible for the movement, as he has been using pictures in his church for some weeks past with fine results, and has much displeased the ministerial association. Probably the action of the association is to force Akin to discontinue as well.

Akin, however, said that he would continue his picture shows in spite of any "Blue Law" enforcements.

"Unless the well meaning people who wish to deprive thousands of pleasure have something better to offer in its place," he said, "I'm opposed to depriving them of pleasure. That kind of thing is out of date. The Scriptures do not command people to be idle on Sunday, but merely enjoin the Sabbath as a day of rest. The few who are employed in actual operation of the theatres are doing a real service to a far greater number, and their work is a work of necessity and charity."

Mayor Smith in Earnest.

It is understood that the Ministerial Association's committee has arranged to take the matter before the legislature to secure enforcement of the law if Mayor Smith will not enforce it. In a movement to legalize pictures in the eastern section of the state, the legislature two years ago upheld the old laws as written.

Mayor Smith said: "I realize that we could close all theatres and everything else, and I would if I thought any harm was being done. The theatres are creating innocent amusement for hard-working people. I'd close them in a minute if I did not think they were valuable. I do not feel that it is my duty to club religion into the people of Louisville. It it comes to a show down, I'll use the police to close everything and will arrest the man who fixes his auto on Sunday, all chauffeurs, etc."

Anita Stewart Rests.

After a short rest following the completion of "The Fighting Shepherdess," Anita Stewart will begin work on her next production, "The Yellow Typhoon," Harold MacGrath's sensational story of the same name, which ran serially in the Saturday Evening Post and is now one of the big sellers in book form.

It will be produced at the Mayer Studios in Los Angeles and directed by Edward Jose, who also directed Miss Stewart's "The Fighting Shepherdess." It will be released as a Louis B. Mayer-First National attraction.

Keeping in Personal Touch

HOPP HADLEY'S new idea of a stage and picture combination called "movical comedy," entitled "The Wizard of Oz," according to Manager Brown of the Strand Theatre, White Plains, N. Y., is a box office attraction. At his matinees he doubled his business. Manager Bryant of Long Branch and Asbury Park, N J., credits it with 1,600 for the day at the Savoy. Hopp has secured the services of Frank F. Moore, of Morton and Moore, who played in the stage production and screen, to take part in his "movical." Mr. Moore will have full charge of the "revue" and will introduce all his original scarecrow business in the combination. The company opened with Frank Moore at the Trent Theatre, Trenton, N. J., on January 12. Hopp says Broadway will number it among the bright lights in the near future.

Goldwyn Adds "Stop Thief" to List of Stage Successes Bought

STILL another popular play added to the steadily growing list of stage successes secured by Goldwyn for reproduction on the screen is "Stop Thief," the celebrated mystery-farce, sponsored by Cohan & Harris in 1913. The acquisition of the motion picture rights to this play has just been announced by Goldwyn, making the fourth important buy since the first of the year, the others being "Madame X," "Milestones" and "Officer 666."

In common with "Officer 666," "Stop Thief" shares distinction of being one of Cohan & Harris's outstanding successes at the Gaiety Theatre, New York, where it was first presented in the fall of 1913. It ran for a full year and then became an equally popular road attraction with two companies touring the country. Since being released for stock, "Stop Thief" has been a strong favorite with the foremost organizations of the United States and Canada.

Good for Screen Use.

When presented at the Gaiety, the mystery-farce was hailed as a remarkably novel bit of stage-craft in several respects. It set a new mark for swiftness of movement and surprising developments. One house provides the scene for the action in each of the three acts, and the incidents all occur during the actual playing time of the piece. The author, Carlyle Moore, succeeded in cramming an unprecedented amount of action into a brief period. It is figured that "Stop Thief" carries just the sort of plot substance that may be developed into the most effective kind of screen entertainment. Particular pains will be taken in the preparation of the continuity in order to present the many complications at their full value and to preserve the element of mystery up to the conclusion. The play is logical in its construction and a skilled adapter, following the lead of the author, will find plenty of material for a photoplay as gripping as the stage production.

Universal Players Popular in South America and Cuba

UNIVERSAL favorites are not without honor in other countries. From Cuba comes the news of a popularity contest in which many prominent American screen stars were contestants. Eddie Polo was the winner. Priscilla Dean and Dorothy Phillips took second and third place respectively among the stars of the fair sex.

All Universal export records are being broken by the South American bookings on "Elmo the Mighty," featuring Elmo Lincoln.

Dorothy Phillips, because of her emotional acting, appeals to the Spaniard. In "The Right to Happiness," she is taking Porto Rico by storm, as the picture is booking a larger amount of business than any other single production put out by Universal. "The Heart of Humanity" is also enjoying a large popularity.

In Argentina, Priscilla Dean made a big hit with her portrayal in "The Silk Lined Burglar." Her pictures are displayed in all the local periodicals.

The South American likes breezy western pictures, but have tired of the blood and thunder variety of film. For his clean and brisk action in his Universal pictures, Harry Carey is "going big" in all photoplay houses.

Monroe Salisbury is well liked for his work in "The Savage" and in "The Desire of the Moth."

"Her Nearly Husband."

"Her Nearly Husband," the rip-roaring Supreme Comedy, is the Robertson-Cole offering for fun and frolic for the current week. The story is from the pen of Frank Roland Conklin, one of the best laugh-producing writers of the day. Teddy Sampson and Harry Depp are featured.

Scott Sidney directed the chaser of blues and Bert Wright was in charge of the camera. W. Scott Darling prepared the story for the screen. Officials of Robertson-Cole announce that so successfully have first-run exhibitors taken this class or refined comedy that extra prints are made necessary each week.

Industry's Leaders Pledge Support To Lane's Americanization Plan

LEADERS of the motion picture industry representing every division of the work discussed for more than two hours, Sunday, January 11, at the Waldorf Astoria, New York, plans for carrying forward the campaign for Americanization through the medium of the motion picture, under the direction of Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior.

The meeting was a continuation of a smaller conference held in Washington at Secretary Lane's invitation on December 11. The conference on Sunday started with a breakfast given to Secretary Lane by the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Those at Breakfast.

Those present included: Adolph Zukor, J. Stuart Blackton, William A. Brady, William Fox, Samuel Goldwyn, D. W. Griffith, Richard A. Rowland, Lewis J. Selznick, Albert E. Smith, Walter W. Irwin, Arthur S. Friend, B. N. Busch, Gabriel L. Hess, Lewis Innerarity, John M. Quinn, W. R. Sheehan, Percy L. Waters, Joseph F. Coufal, Walter J. Moore, E. M. Porter, Will C. Smith, John C. Flinn, Fred J. Beecroft, George Blaisdell, Paul Gulick, Lesley Mason, J. Robert Rubin, William M. Solomon, Jr., Thomas G. Wiley, Frederick H. Elliott, Major Raymond W. Pullman, Harry M. Crandall, Major Franklin D'Olier, Jack S. Connolly, C. C. Pettijohn, Col. Arthur H. Woods, Edward Earle, Royal K. Fuller, R. A. DeLayfield and Jesse L. Lasky.

The afternoon meeting was attended by about 200 men and women, including practically all of the leaders in the industry. Secretary Lane in an eloquent address outlined the proposed plan of using the screen as the most effective mode of combating Bolshevism. He said, in part:

No Ism But Americanism.

"The Americanization movement, as I interpret it, is not a movement to promote any ism except Americanism, it is not a movement to condemn any ism excepting a movement which is against the fundamentals of our government and we have but one fundamental and that is a supreme reverence for the united will of a united people.

"You are justifiably proud of the fact that as a man you have gotten into the fight for the Liberty Loan and that as a man you got into the fight in support of the morale of the nation at the time we entered the war and throughout the war. No single service was more valuable than yours. I do not know anyone that was perhaps as valuable.

"You did that and are proud of it because it was something big and noble and fine, because you were challenged on the noble side of your nature, and I want to tell you that you can produce just the same effect upon the people of the United States, 110,000,000 of them, by challenging them upon the noble side of their natures.

"We know that there are certain fundamental things to be done. We know we have 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 illiterates in the United States; we know that one-quarter of the boys that went in the first 1,600,000 men in the army could not write a letter home and could not read an order, and we know that that is a humiliation and a disgrace in a democracy such as ours.

"Do not preach the doctrine that America is a perfect land. It is not. Do not preach the doctrine that all men in America are upon an equality. They are not, excepting before the law. Do not preach the doctrine that the institutions of the United States are today what they will be 100 years from now. They are not. America is a growing country, because man is a growing thing, and as man expands, so this nation will expand.

Pure Propaganda Banned.

"I say that you can put into a moving picture the life of any man of achievement, of any man who has done well, of any man who has done things for which we are grateful, and you are preaching Americanism. Do not think that this thing must be put in the form of propaganda. The less formalistic it is the better. You want to show by the life of America what Americanism is. You want to show, I repeat, by the life of the American what Americanism is. You cannot cram dogma and doctrine down the throats of people and ask them to memorize Lincoln's Gettysburg speech and then declare themselves to be Americans.

"I would like to see you gentlemen take some serious action toward the celebration collectively of Lincoln Day this year. There is one way by which a religion can be preached, and practically only one, and that is not by abstraction but it is by visualizing a principle. Lincoln has become a principle. Why shouldn't there be a celebration of Lincoln's Birthday in every one of the 14,000 or 18,000 moving picture houses in the United States?"

Other Speakers.

Following the speech, President William A. Brady, of the National Association, who presided, called for suggestions from the various men of the industry.

D. W. Griffith was the first speaker and was greeted with much applause. He said that the industry had felt very keenly the subject of unrest as was outlined by Secretary Lane. He declared the industry would do everything within its power to further the cause of Americanism. He said that his own company and associates could be called upon at any time, day or night, and that they would gladly give the best that was in them for this cause.

Marcus Loew was the next speaker. He declared that it was only necessary for Secretary Lane's committee to command the motion picture exhibitors and they would gladly do everything in their power.

William Fox was called upon to outline a practical method of putting into operation in the 18,000 picture theatres Secretary Lane's suggestion for a Lincoln Day celebration. He urged the secretary to write a personal letter to the 18,000 exhibitors of the country, outlining a program, and he declared that if this were done practically every exhibitor in America would carry out his suggestions. He declared that all his theatres would gladly co-operate in this movement on Lincoln's Birthday.

Alfred S. Black, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, suggested that the American Legion co-operate with the Motion Picture Exhibitors in order to make a Lincoln's Day program a success. He declared that he represented a certain portion of the exhibitors of this country who would gladly do everything in their power to make the Americanization movement a success, and that all exhibitors would gladly co-operate.

Authors' Committee Proposed.

Samuel Goldwyn declared that as a producer he would gladly co-operate with the committee in making the necessary films. He suggested that a committee of ten or twenty of the most representative authors of the country be formed, in order to get them started in Americanizing the subjects that they are writing for the screen and for the periodicals.

William A. Johnston, of the Motion Picture News; George Blaisdell, of the Moving Picture World, and Lesley Mason, of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, spoke and pledged the support of the trade papers to the movement. Miss Louella Parsons, of the Morning Telegraph, also spoke.

Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, declared that his company dedicates itself to Americanism in the working out of any suggestions made by the committee.

A letter was read from President Laemmle in which he announced that the entire resources of the Universal Film Company are at the service of this committee.

Operators Unanimous.

Samuel Kaplan, head of the New York local of the Motion Picture Operators' Union, declared that the operators are behind any movement that is sanctioned by the National Association and that they will support Secretary Lane in his Americanization program.

John Flinn spoke in behalf of the Motion Picture Advertisers' Association.

Jesse L. Lasky declared that he was both thrilled and inspired by Secretary Lane's speech and pledged himself to speak to each of the score of directors and authors employed by Famous Players to put into every picture that they make some patriotic thought of Americanism.

Among the others who spoke were Commodore J. Stuart Blackton, Edward Earl and Frank J. Marion.

After the meeting a conference was held at which the following participated: Franklin K. Lane, Lewis J. Selznick,

Second Mary Miles Minter Picture Will Be "Judy of Rogues' Harbor"

MARY MILES MINTER is completing "Judy of Rogues' Harbor," her second feature picture for Realart Pictures Corporation.

"It's a human story, lived on the screen by a tenderly human young actress, and it will not fail to earn Miss Minter an eternal place in the heart of human kind," wrote Oren F. Woody, Realart manager at Los Angeles, where the picture is being made.

Like other Realart productions, "Judy of Rogues' Harbor" is adapted from a popular novel, and this is said to be the definite policy followed by the company since its very beginning, when "pictures based on successful stories and plays" was promulgated as the official slogan.

In announcing this second offering for Mary Miles Minter, President Morris Kohn, of Realart, emphasized particularly the story background, saying:

Has Been Widely Read.

"The dramatization of this classic is designed especially for the millions of American young men and women who have read the story in book form, who have lived with its human characters and who will grasp at the opportunity t- see it well done on the screen. 'Judy of Rogues' Harbor' is a particularly suitable vehicle for Miss Minter, the actress who appeals to hearts of high and low estate. One proof of the wide range of the novel and of the fact that it is not limited to any one locality or territory is that Grosset and Dunlap have followed the original publishers with a special edition, at a reasonable price, which will be sold broadcast throughout the country.

"In her first Realart offering, 'Anne of Green Gables,' Miss Minter established the reputation among showmen everywhere of being a consistent box-office attraction. Here is Miss Minter again in a story that brings out the best of her. In the character of Judy, Miss Minter is a tender-hearted country lass, wrongfully held by a sour old farmer who is supposed to be her grandfather."

"The production of 'Judy of Rogues' Harbor' will everlastingly establish Mary Miles Minter," declared Director William Desmond Taylor in a statement to Realart Pictures Corporation. "The story has more marked dramatic possibilities than anything in which she has previously been cast."

Royal Film Service Buys Rights to "Atonement"

WHAT is claimed to be one of the largest prices ever paid for a six-reel production was received by the Pioneer for its production "Atonement," in which Grace Davison and Conway Tearle divide honors.

The Royal Film Service, of London, through L. L. Lorie, was the purchaser. Two days after the sale was made, Mr. Lorie closed in New York, deals for several important continental and South American territories.

Mr. Lorie, who had looked over the entire independent output since he had been in America, voiced himself as being convinced that "Atonement" ranks among the best pictures he had seen.

It is expected that "Atonement" will shortly be exploited in Great Britain through the exchanges of the Royal Film Service.

Another Large Theatre May Rise in Baltimore

ANOTHER large moving picture theatre will be erected in Baltimore which will be equipped also to show vaudeville acts to be furnished by the Marcus Loew Circuit, according to a story which has gained circulation in the last few days in Baltimore.

This theatre will be located on the property known as the Shriner lot, at North avenue and Charles street, diagonally across from the Parkway, which is one of the largest photoplay house in the city. The property has been purchased by interests which are as yet unnamed and the price is said to have been $165,000.

Howard W. Jackson, register of wills of Baltimore City, is said to be interested in the transaction. He has admitted that certain interests in Baltimore are represented by him. Whether or not a motion picture theatre is to be built on the lot, he would not say.

The lease on the Marston school, which is now located on the lot said to have been purchased, does not expire until next July. This would seem to mean that no building operations could start until after that time.

National Not Connected With Any Other Company.

The National Film Corporation of America, through its president, Harry M. Rubey, announces that it is in no way connected with any other motion picture producing firm.

"There has been much confusion, resulting from similarity in the name of the National Film Corporation of America and other producing and releasing firms," stated Capt. Rubey, "so I think that it is best for all concerned that I reiterate and state that the National Film Corporation of America has never been, and never will be, allied with any other concern. We are independent producers and intend so to remain."

Michigan Picture Fans Stimulate Longer Runs

MICHIGAN towns with a population of 3,000 are upsetting all precedent by running a film two days, according to the report of Cornelius Kingsley, Realart's manager in Detroit, who paid a visit to the home offices last week. Motion picture attendance in Michigan has been on the increase during the last few years, says Mr. Kingsley, and the proof of the statement is in higher priced admissions and the extended runs at local theatres.

"Two years ago," declared Mr. Kingsley, "a one-day stand was sufficient to take care of the smaller towns. There was a distinct body of motion picture fans that made it a habit to come to the theatre, and outside of this patronage there was a larger body that never went at all.

"The phenomenal strides in the business, the raising of the standard of pictures, and the adaptation of well-known stories to the screen account for a much wider interest in the pictures. The skeptics have come down to take a look at the much talked of motion picture and they like it. Results: the consistent body of fans expands into a larger patronage which cannot be accommodated in one day, and runs must be extended to two and more days, according to the circumstances."

Lopez to Direct Kaufman Series.

John Lopez has been named to direct the remaining pictures in the Herbert Kaufman series being made by Selznick Pictures at Fort Lee, N. J., it was announced this week by Myron Selznick. Two of the Kaufman Weekly releases had been directed by Burton George, who has been delgated to take over the megaphone on "Prince O' Pines," a special. The two are "Little Red Riding Hood," which has been fully completed and "The Faded Butterfly," which is announced as nearly ready for the screen. The first release of the Kaufman editorial subjects is expected about March 1.

Director Lopez is being assisted in the work of preparing the scripts by Merle Johnson, story and continuity writer in the Selznick scenario department.

Ellis to Direct O'Brien.

Robert Ellis, who added to his directorial popularity through the direction of Elsie Janis in "The Imp," which has been completed by Myron Selznick for Selznick Enterprises through Select distribution, has been selected by Mr. Selznick to direct Eugene O'Brien in "A Fool and His Money," which was scheduled to be put into production this week at the Fort Lee studios.

The scenario of the feature, which in book form was one of the most successful stories written by George Barr McCutcheon, was done by R. Cecil Smith.

Rubbernecking in Filmland

West Coast Publicists Plan Bon Mot Distribution—How Sennett Girls Keep Scenic.

By Giebler

HO, HO, HUM!" These words, accompanied by expressive and expansive yawns, was about all I got when I tried to collect a little information about New Year's celebrations. But short and sweet as the words are, they express pretty well how Filmland is feeling, and so I will leave them as keynotes to the rich memory and imagination of others who assisted in bidding a farewell to 1919 and helped to spread a welcome door mat to 1920, and pass on to other things.

It looks like a big year this year. There is not a producer on the Coast who has not declared his intention of making bigger and better pictures, and enough new studios are threatened to cover Hollywood three deep from Western avenue to Beverly Hills.

The "Studio Publicists" has just been hatched from the egos of the West Coast press agents, and the object of the new organization is to strengthen the recognition of publicity as a molder of public opinion, to eliminate faking, to improve the quality of individual work, to remove the odium from the term, "press agent," and other things.

A Bon Mot Committee.

All of which seems very good. More power to their elbows—more ink to their mimeographs!

The Studio Publicists have appointed Emily Squires, Ted Taylor of Metro and Jimmy Tynan of Ince as a temporary executive committee.

I hope the first execution they stage is to bump off the bird that sends out carbon sheets of his startling stories and marks them "important," "rush" and "exclusive." I hope they also appoint a committee to look after the matter of jokes and witty sayings of the stars. It is extremely annoying and confusing to get the same "bon mot" from two or three stars the same week.

The committee could go over the Ladies Home Journal, the Literary Digest and all of the publications that run joke and witty sayings columns and apportion so many gags to each studio. In this way the sad affair that occurred a few weeks ago, when four different press agents grabbed the venerable goldfish-goldfinch gag and put it in the mouths of their stars, would be avoided.

Undulating Vegetables.

The same sort of arrangement should also be made as to the age of jokes. Just because a press agent has no respect for old age, it is no sign that editors have not.

I have visited the Mack Sennett studio many times, but I never realized what a whale of a place it was until I went down there again this week.

Eph Ascher, who is personally representing Mack, took me to the top of the hill back of the studio and waved a lily-white hand athwart the scene to the west and said "Behold!"

I looked and "beheld" twenty-seven acres covered with buildings, stages, offices, dressing rooms, carpenter shops, tanks, panarams and other comedy making paraphernalia.

Then Eph turned and waved a hand in another direction, and there, spread out on the gentle slope of the undulating landscape, were rows upon rows of cauliflower, tomatoes, peas, beans, onions and other garden truck growing and thriving in the gentle and celebrated California sunshine.

Garden Truck Did It.

The vegetable has always held an honored place in movie comedy, but the vegetables raised on the Sennett ranch are not used as weapons of offense and defence by the comedians; instead, they are used to wallop the H. C. L., and —this is deep stuff, and given to the world for the first time—to keep the Sennett players up on their toes in a physical way.

Have you noticed the beautiful faces and forms of the Sennett Bathing Girls? Sennett garden truck did it. Have you lamped the looks of Louise Fazenda (when she hasn't got her make-up on)? Sennett cauliflower, corn and cabbage. Did you ever notice that Marie Prevost was "some gal?" Punkin pies from Sennett punkins. Have you ever marveled at the marvelous complexion of Marvel Rea; the bright eyes of Phillis Haver; the lines of Harriet Hammond; the grace of Katherine Maguire? Sennett garden "sass." Have you admired the deep chest and the robust limbs of Kala Pasha? Onions from the Sennett patch.

Turpin Turns Temperamental.

And that is not all. In addition to the garden, there is a chicken farm with 5,000 hens, roosters, pullets and cockerels to furnish eggs, friers, broilers and dumpling flavorers to the Sennett players and others connected with the plant.

After looking at the rural part of the plant we went down on the stages and saw Mack Sennett directing a comedy, and he told me about his latest big effort, "Down on the Farm," and how handy his own farm was in shooting some of the outside stuff, and about Louise Fazenda's part in the picture, and how quickly she learned to operate a hand-power bean cultivator.

I also saw Ben Turpin, who was complaining bitterly because the action of the piece he was working in required a house to fall on him; and Charlie Murray, who was between pictures, and Ford Sterling, who was doping out stuff with Dick Jones, and Billy Bevan, and Kala Pasha, and Mildred June, and Eva Thatcher, and wound up the visit by paying my respects to Pepper, the cat.

Al's Itinerary.

Anther day I went out to see Al St. John, who is shooting a two-reel comedy for the Paramount program, just in time to hear Jack Warner, one of Al's managers, telling him a few of the things yet to be done in the picture.

Three "Different" Shots of California's Sennett-Land.

"You invent a flivver and a milking machine, and try them both out, the flivver on a rocky road and the milking machine on a skittish cow. You tear down a lot of fences and two or three houses with the flivver, but it is not yet recorded what the cow will do; that will come later.

"You get caught in a blast of wind and you're blown to the top of a building; you try to get down by sliding down a flag pole; the pole cracks; you are thrown into the open window of a hangar; you get in an airplane, touch the starting lever accidently and go up a mile or so; you see the villains below with the girl; you drop down, land on one of the horses, chase the gang, clean them up and save the girl."

Al listened to all of this with a sad eye.

Every Prospect Pleases—But One.

"How do you like the prospect?" Jack asked.

"Fine," said Al. "But there's one little suggestion. I wish you'd see if you can pick up a prop cow somewhere."

Then we went out on the lot, where Al's director, Frank Griffin, had a bunch of bathing girls grouped around a big tank just ready to make the jump-off, and we all felt chered up. We watched the girls dive, and Al and his leading lady, Betty Brown, posed for a picture, and I met William "Bull" Durham, the heavy of the piece, who used to be a pitcher on the N. Y. Giants, and watched the girls some more until time for lunch.

If this installment of Rubbernecking seems somewhat jumpy and jerky—if the word paintings for which it is so justly celebrated seem a little smudgy, it is because the second finger on my right hand is sticking high above its jeweled fellows adorned with a dark complicated rag and throbbing with pain as I beat out this thrilling piece. Any writer who affects the one-finger movement and hunt-and-peck-system of typing will appreciate my difficulty.

Digital Damage.

The accident that disabled my digit occurred while "Mack" MacArthur and I were being piloted around the Lasky lot by Adam Hull Shirk.

As we crossed a stage I was startled by a low rumbling sound issuing from a closed-in set. Thinking that the sound was the voice of Old Friday, the fiercest lion in the movies, I called a halt with the intention of altering our route so that we could invade the closed-in set and I could show Old Friday to Mack.

I halted in the wrong place, a place selected by a stage carpenter as a resting place for lumber he was throwing from the roof of a set he was wrecking. I saw the lumber coming and heard the carpenter's "Hi, there! Look out below!" and by a hasty and agile step, I removed all of my person but the end of one finger, which was mashed, bruised and otherwise contused by the contact with the boards.

Maybe a Lion Among the Ladies.

Adam Shirk was deeply concerned and conducted me to the Studio Hospital, to which place I walked with firm and fearless tread, sprinkling the floor of the stage with rich, red gore as I went.

"Doc" Graham, the studio surgeon, fixed the finger by putting some nice red-hot stuff and a bandage on it, and then, in spite of the fact that I know that lions are enraged and made unmanageable by the smell of blood, I said, "Come on," in a fearless voice, "we will now go and beard Old Friday in his lair."

Adam Shirk looked at me in a queer way and said something to Doctor Graham about examining my dome because I seemed to be talking balmy.

"Balmy nothing!" I retorted, "I'm not afraid of any lion in the movies."

"Where do you get that lion stuff?" said Adam. "There's no lion here."

"What then," I demanded, "is that noise—that low rumbling sound like a fog horn with a turnip in its throat?"

"Oh, that," said Adam. "That's Wallie Reid playing a saxophone."

Reports from numerous theatres where Will Rogers in his latest Goldwyn release "Jubilo" has been the attraction, have invariably referred to the appropriateness of the "Jubilo" song which has been made the main theme of the musical accompaniment. It suits the story and the personality of the happy-go-lucky tramp portrayed by Rogers as though it had been composed expressly for the production, whereas as a matter of fact, it was listed among the three best sellers of sheet music some weeks before the picture was distributed.

Gets Big "Flying A" Contract.

The Idle Hour of Grand Rapids, Mich., is running American Film Company features exclusively from January 4 to February 16. This contract, secured by John McFarland, "Flying A" salesman, begins with "Trixie from Broadway," which is booked for three days.

Many Exhibitors Unite in Praise of Mary Miles Minter Production

WITH Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome Theatre, Buffalo, reporting "tremendous business" on Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables," and his sentiments being echoed by Dave Harding, the Kansas City exhibitor, reporting "capacity business against keenest opposition of the year," the Realart film concluded another week of strong business in many houses, from Fayetteville, N. C. to Alhambra, Cal.

The story of American girlhood was put over at Shea's Hipodrome with Mr. Franklin's customary insistence on dignity and refusal to boost the picture before his patrons could decide for themselves. Neat advertisements of small size were used in the Buffalo newspapers throughout the run. This is particularly characteristic of Mr. Franklin's procedure and applies well to his patronage, where, perhaps, it would not suffice for a different clientele.

After the usual Christmas day matinee, the evening houses swelled to a large total, the receipts being about $2,300.

"Hooray! There Goes the Red 'Ark'"!

On Friday, business was reported to have maintained its high mark and on Saturday it was standing room only.

Praise from the Reticent.

Miss Minter's picture had the distinction of evoking praise in the same week from two showmen who are noted for their reticence in publishing their views of a photoplay. Realart was gratified to get from A. Karzas, of the Woodlawn Theatre, Chicago, a very congratulatory message.

Mr. Harding, whose Liberty Theatre is known throughout the Middle West as a structure of beauty and simplicity, sent the following telegram to Realart: "'Anne of Green Gables,' featuring Mary Miles Minter, did capacity business against keenest opposition of the year. We are fortunate in having Realart series. Your success assured on productions of this kind."

The smashing of a year's record with the run of the Realart film was reported by O. H. Schleusener, proprietor of the Superb Theatre, Alhambra, Cal. Miss Minter's recent activities on the Coast in behalf of her first Realart production are cited by western representatives of the producing company as definite causes of a widespread interest by fans in the star's new film.

Exhibitors Co-operate.

Another echo of Miss Minter's western popularity is heard in the following report from C. M. Epperson, Star Theatre, Lamar, Col.: "Accept my congratulations on your splendid production, 'Anne of Green Gables.' This picture is a winner. Went over big for us and everybody well pleased."

The first showing of the Minter picture in Michigan resulted in co-operation between W. S. McLaren, manager of the Majestic Theatre, and S. A. Moran, of the Arcade Theatre, Ann Arbor, whereby a telegram from the former to the latter, praising the film, featured an effective lobby display.

Below the Mason-Dixon line sentiment for Mary Miles Minter was equally congratulatory. The showing of the film at Fayetteville, N. C., by William C. McIntire, manager of the Rose Theatre, resulted in congratulations for Realart.

Laemmle and Berman Reach Chicago; Universal Has Big Plans for 1920

H. M. BERMAN, general manager of Universal exchanges, arrived in the city Monday, January 5, after a five weeks' trip throughout the Far West, during which Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Tacoma and Seattle were visited. Butte City, Salt Lake, Denver, Kansas City and Minneapolis were also included in the itinerary. The main object of the tour was to investigate conditions at the various points and to look over superproductions recently finished at Universal City. Three of these have just been completed and will be released in the near future.

"Ambition," recently finished by Allan Holubar, will press "Heart of Humanity" hard for first place in the estimation of exhibitors and the public, Mr. Berman believes. It has a great heart appeal and a compelling story, and Mr. Berman confidently predicts a phenomenal success for it.

"The Devil's Pass Key," directed by Eric Von Stroheim, who also directed "Blind Husbands," is another of the completed superfeatures. This is a modern picture, based on a romantic Parisian story, which has been very delicately handled by the director and well acted by a strong cast. The settings are exceptionally fine, Mr. Berman assured me.

"The Breath of the Gods" is another of the big pictures just finished. Mme. Hayawaka is the star, and she is ably supported by a worthy cast. This picture lends itself particularly to fine accompanying music during its presentation, Mr. Berman says.

Completing Fourth Big Picture.

The fourth superfeature is now receiving its finishing touches. Priscilla Dean appears in the principal role and, when completed, Mr. Berman holds that it will prove one of the most powerful pictures yet produced at Universal City. "The Beautiful Beggar" will be the title for this. The cost will be over the $200,000 mark. Extra special care has been devoted to the selection of the cast and the direction is in the care of Todd Browning, who has had directorial charge of all the Priscilla Dean pictures.

Another big production under way is "Overland Red," a Harry Carey, western superfeature, in which that actor is said to appear at his best.

In the cities visited, Mr. Berman met all the prominent exhibitors. He found that each was enjoying a prosperous business and looking forward to a record year in 1920. Without exception all these big exhibitors are demanding super-productions. The picture theatre going public have become educated in this respect and demand the best, and are willing to pay advanced admissions.

Seattle impressed Mr. Berman as being the most lively of all the cities visited, and he found that really great pictures are in high demand there.

"Lying Husbands" Plays to S. R. O.

While in Los Angeles, Mr. Berman was fortunate enough to view a presentation of "Lying Husbands" at the California Theatre, now managed by S. L. Rothapfel, the Belasco of moving picture presentations. During its run the picture played to S. R. O., without exception.

Eugene Roth, owner of the Imperial and California theatres, San Francisco, informed Mr. Berman that "Lying Husbands" had played to capacity for two weeks at the Imperial.

Jensen & Herberg, owners of a circuit of theatres in Portland, Tacoma, Seattle and Butte City, also reported tremendous business for the "Right to Happiness" and "Blind Husbands" in all their houses.

Laemmle Arrives in Windy City.

Mr. Berman referred, in gratified manner, to the cordial and hospitable way in which he had been received by the prominent exhibitors of the Pacific Coast. He summed it up all in the words, "I had a very pleasant time."

Just by chance Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, arrived in Chicago from Los Angeles on the same day that Mr. Berman came in. They left for New York, on the Broadway Limited, Tuesday afternoon, January 6.

Mr. Laemmle was seen for only a moment, but found time to say that he had spent ten days in Los Angeles.

"I saw two of our finished, big productions and part of another, and they were very wonderful—even beyond my expectations," he said with enthusiasm. "We have made some very big pictures in the past; but what we will do in 1920, will outshine anything we have ever done. I mean this seriously, and again repeat that Universal, during the year 1920, will beat any picture ever made by it previously—or by anybody else."

Dwelling for a moment on "Ambition," he said: "The story of 'Ambition' has a world-heart appeal that will make it a triumph wherever shown."

Don't Trust Him, Alice.
Jack Gilbert was beating Alice Lake two minutes later as the villain in Metro's great picture, "Should a Woman Tell?"

Capital Film Company Moves Into Spacious New Offices

THE Capital Film Company has moved its quarters from the sixth floor of the Consumers Building to the second floor, the entire space of which, comprising 12,00 square feet, is being used for executive offices. These, when completed, will rank with the finest in the country. The new quarters will be completed about the middle of this month.

B. J. Dasent, Capital's recently appointed head of the department of publicity, informed me that the new offices were necessitated by the extraordinary increase in the company's business, which has had a remarkably rapid growth.

S. L. Barnard, president, and E. C. Eckels, general manager of the company, left for New York Sunday, January 4, and will return early next week. While the object of their trip was not divulged, it is understood that it has to do with important matters connected with the company's interests, the details of which will be announced on their return.

Buying for London.

Last week, John MacKenzie, sole buyer of American films for the Clune Productions, for distribution in the British Isles, spent two days in Capital's Chicago office, looking over the product of the company and making selections for distribution from his London office. Capital's western pictures, of two-reel length, and other western subjects were especially favored by the Londoner.

Work Begun on Capitol Theatre.

Work on the great modern picture theatre (already named the Capitol) for Balaban & Katz, at State and Lake streets, began Monday, January 12. The building on the site is owned by five different estates, and the first of the fractional interests will be torn down on the date mentioned.

Even before the old buildings are removed, work will be begun on the foundations, so that much time will be saved. It is estimated that the cost of this new theatre will reach $4,000,000. That figure includes, of course, the cost of the valuable ground, in addition to the money invested in the building itself, which will be exclusively a moving picture theatre. It is expected that this theatre, when completed, will be one of the famous sightseeing spots of the city. The theatre will be constructed so as to seat 5,000 persons. In addition to the ground floor seats there will be a balcony and a tier of mezzanine boxes.

A. S. Hyman is Gradually Extending His Exchanges

ARTHUR S. HYMAN, vice president and general manager of A. S. Hyman Attractions, Inc., announces that "The Penny Philanthropist" will be released Thursday, January 15, throughout the territory covered by his state rights. This includes West Virginia, Kentucky, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio and Illinois, and all pictures purchased by him are shown personally in these states.

Mr. Hyman is now buying world rights only to big pictures, and he plans to open exchanges gradually in all the leading cities of the United States. He will open an office in Cleveland and Cincinnati about February 1, and in May he will open one in Minneapolis.

During the current week he purchased the exclusive rights, for a certain period, to "Quo Vadis," from George Kleine, and will handle that superfeature in the states already mentioned as a road show.

P. C. Braun in New York.

Mr. Hyman states that P. C. Braun has been appointed special representative in New York of A. S. Hyman Attractions, Inc., where he will give private showings of "The Penny Philanthropist" to state rights buyers.

Mr. Hyman has been in the moving picture business for six years. He received his first lesson from Louis J. Selznick, in 1914, at Atlanta, Ga., when he was installed as manager of the World exchange there. In 1916, he was appointed manager of the New York office of the General Film Company by Percy L. Waters, whom he considers one of the finest men in the film business. He remained there until the close of 1917, when he engaged in the business for himself, starting in Detroit around the closing days of that year.

He opened with state rights to "Redemption," "The Whip," "Hearts of the World," "Raffles," etc.

The Chicago office was opened in 1919. W. G. McCoy is the manager, in Room 1314, Consumers Building.

Big Theatre for State Street.

The rumor is goin the rounds that Jones, Linick & Schaefer and Marcus Loew will build a great modern picture theatre and office building on State street, at Monroe, in the near future.

This seems likely, as Jones, Linick & Schaefer are interested with Mr. Loew in a chain of southern theatres covering New Orleans, Augusta, Ga., Atlanta, Memphis, Houston, San Antonio, Waco and Oklahoma City, in addition to Cleveland, Toledo and Detroit. No member of the firm could be reached to confirm the rumor, as all three were out of the city at the time of writing.

Saturday, January 3, the Robertson-Cole Company took over the Hallmark Exchange, in the Consumers Building, this city, and from that date will handle the physical distribution of the Hallmark product.

On Saturday, January 10, the Republic Exchange, in the Film Exchange Building 207 S. Wabash avenue, will take over the physical distribution of the twelve Chaplin classics for Clark-Cornelius, Inc., and will distribute these films in Chicago territory, from that date on.

"Great Air Robbery" Excites Wonder.

"The Great Air Robbery," the title given Universal's production of Lieut. Omer Locklear's first motion picture in the air, was given a private showing in Universal's projection room, in the Consumers Building, last weeks to members of the Aero Club of Illinois. The marvelous stunts in this feature excited the wonderment of all present.

Hyperion Productions Enters Field Will Produce Six Features a Year

WITH the incorporation last week of the Hyperion Productions, Inc., of which George H. Wiley is named as president, it is announced the new company's policy is to produce six special super-features a year.

Mr. Wiley states, it is the company's intention to produce only the works of noted authors who will work in close association with the director and continuity writer, and supervise the production of their play or story, and that each production is to be staged on an elaborate scale with expense as a secondary matter.

"It is our plan," says Mr. Wiley, "to give the exhibitors a class of productions that will establish a new precedent. No single star's name will top the productions but instead each picture will carry the services of a group of stars. Thereby giving the exhibitor three or four big artists in each production.

"The rights to several Broadway 'successes' as well as two 'best sellers,' have been acquired and work on the adaptations started."

James Vincent Will Direct.

The productions will be staged under the direction of James Vincent who handled several Fox Productions starring Theda Bara, Virginia Pearson and Bertha Kalish as well as producing the C. N. & A. M. Williamson's mystery serial, "A Woman in Grey."

Walter Richard Hall will make the screen adaptations while Joseph W. Farnham will have charge of the editing and titling.

Jesse J. Goldberg Resigns from Sherrill Organization

ALONG with recent announcement of changes in the executive personnel of producing organizations comes the announcement that Jesse J. Goldburg, secretary and general manager of the Frohman Amusement Corporation, of which William L. Sherrill is president, has tendered his resignation to take effect January 17th.

Mr. Goldburg is a proficient and versatile executive and a pioneer independent producer. He organized one of the first independent producing organization in the United States, the Life Photo Film Corporation.

Among the many features produced and exploited by Mr. Goldburg are "The Bankers' Daughter," "Captain Swift," "Northern Lights," "The Avalanche," "The Greyhound," and others, such productions numbering among the stars Lionel Barrymore, Mary Nash, Florence Nash and Lillian Walker.

Mr. Goldberg states: "It was only after weeks of deliberation that I determined not to renew my contract with Mr. Sherrill. Our relationship has been exceedingly pleasant but I feel that the opportunities in the motion picture industry are so great that my experiences could be devoted to better advantages and that I should have a broader opportunity to develop my ideas.

"As to my future adventures, I have not determined upon what connections finally I shall make, excepting that I shall immediately leave for a tour of the United States to study conditions. I shall also visit Los Angeles, at which place I hope to be able to announce definitely my plans for the future.

Mr. Goldburg leaves January 18th, and will stop in Chicago, and will visit the various exchange centers on his return trip.

Rolfe Announces Cast for "Love Without Question"

THE entire cast has been selected by B. A. Rolfe, producer for Jans Pictures, Inc., and is engaged in making C. Wadsworth Camp's novel, "The Abandoned Room" under the title of "Love Without Question."

Those who have been selected to support Olive Tell, starring in this production, are James Morrison, who plays opposite Miss Tell, Peggy Parr, Mario Majeroni, Ivo Dawson, George S. Stevens, Floyd Buckley, Charles Mackay, and Gordon Hamilton.

Care has been exercised by Mr. Rolfé in selecting this aggregation of film players and, it is understood, that each have been chosen for their respective parts owing to their own particular abilities. Inasmuch as these characters have been selected by Mr. Rolfe, the producers have placed great faith in their initial release and feel that because of his experience as a producer and his judgment regarding types, ability, and the technical knowledge, he can be depended upon to bring the very best of the motion picture profession together in this first effort of Jans Pictures, Inc., to present exceptional pictures to the exhibitors.

Six More "Reds" Bit the Dirt.
Shooting with George Chesboro in Warner Brothers' serial, "The Lost City," with Juanita Hansen.

Author of "Lost City" Tells of Writing Story

FREDERICK CHAPIN, author of "The Lost City," tells an interesting story of his writing of the scenario for this serial which is being distributed by Warner Brothers. "A few days after completing 'The Auction of Souls,'" says Mr. Chapin, "Colonel Selig asked me to write an animal serial that would give him a chance to utilize many of the animals in his zoo. I asked what they could do, and he said to figure out what they must do and he would have them do it.

"I therefore set to work and soon evolved a unique plot, in which at the end of each episode the various animals come into play in dramatic and thrilling scenes. The serial is now complete and Colonel Selig made good on his promise. The story called for a dancing elephant who upon hearing a mouth organ would jazz, and one of the elephants was trained to do the stunts I called for, keeping time to the strains played by the Irish ex-prize fighter who is a new character in serials.

"When you figure that this serial deals with crocodiles, chimpanzees, lions, tigers, leopards, elephants, pigmies, camels, Arabs, Moors, gorillas, water-buffaloes and other interesting animals and people, it can be understood that it has reached a high standard.

Matthias Radin of Tyrad En Route to California

MATTHIAS RADIN, President of Tyrad Pictures, Inc., left New York a few days ago for Chicago, where he will spend several days in the interest of his company. He will then continue on to Los Angeles, to complete final arrangements with producing companies for the marketing of their productions.

Mr. Radin will also arrange for a studio for the production of a dramatic spectacle by a prominent American novelist. Jacques Tyrol, who has assumed charge of Tyrad's affairs during his partner's absence, will direct the photoplay and expects to have his cast selected by the time Mr. Radin returns East.

Novel Line of Exploitation Aids Prepared for "Lost City" Serial

WORD comes from the Warner Brothers office, where the territorial rights of the big animal serial, "The Lost City," are rapidly being disposed of, that the advertising matter available to assist the exhibitors in the exploitation of the serial is very complete and of the best material.

An advance reel of 350 feet, shows sensational scenes taken from the serial. The press book is said to be the most elaborate ever issued with a serial, and will be ready for the exhibitors within two weeks. It consists of sixteen pages, with colored covers of orange and black beautifully blended.

The lithographs are excellent. Every style of paper on each episode shows one or more wild animals in a dramatic situation. Some of the paper is so arranged that it can be used for cut-outs for the lobby.

The lobby display consists of eleven by fourteen photographs, eight to a set, and a title card, also twenty-two by twenty-eight photographs, three to a set, consisting of a photograph of the star and sensational scenes.

The heralds are of the circus variety and of various colors; they measure eleven by twenty-eight inches, with sensational pen-sketched drawings.

The window card is of six-play cardboard, strikingly colored and shows the head of a tiger with a photograph of Juanita Hansen between its teeth. The banners measure three by ten feet, and are of water-proof canvas, fitted with brass grommets, they are permanently printed in five colors, with wild animal drawings.

The slides are beautifully tinted and colored, every one showing a wild animal scene of a tense situation. The cuts and mats are from pen-sketched drawings, with a varied assortment; every style, from a thum cut to a three-column cut, is at the command of the exhibitors, attractive colored circular stickers, on which there is an animal drawing, announcing the coming of the serial.

There are all kinds of novelties for the children. Colored animal cards, six to a set, stating interesting facts about their mode of living, etc., a small book, beautifully illustrating wild animals of the jungle, titled "The Secrets of the Jungle,"—excellent material to work up a school children's matinee; mailing cards, showing a circus wagon with cut-outs of various animals enclosed, which can be set up to resemble a circus ring; and animal decalcomania pictures.

M. H. Hoffman of Pioneer Back from Canadian Tour

GENERAL MANAGER, M. H. Hoffman, of Pioneer, is back at the New York headquarters, after a tour to study conditions in the Eastern section of Canada.

In speaking of his observations Mr. Hoffman said, "Don't think for a moment that the American habit of push and energy is confined to the states. The next few years will see Canada one of the most progressive countries in the world.

"This spirit is particularly evident in film circles. The film business is going ahead by leaps and bounds, large theatres are being constructed, and if the plans of the Canadians are only half realized we may look for results that will be second to none.

"I had heard that Canada was on the forward march, but not until I went there did I realize the great extent of this progressive movement. The man in the street as well as those in high authority all seem inspired with this grim determination to secure a foremost place for Canada.

"I went to Canada for the purpose of determining how the Pioneer product could best be exploited, and my labors were rewarded with a long term contract with the Sterling Films, Ltd., which at present has exchanges in Toronto, Montreal and St. John, while arrangements are now under way for the locating of additional offices in the Western provinces.

Big Exploitation Planned for "Woman in Gray" Serial

THE Serico Productions Company, of which George H. Wiley is president, reports that extensive plans have been prepared for the exploitation of the mystery serial, "A Woman in Grey," starring Arline Pretty, supported by Harry G. Sell and directed by James Vincent. A big newspaper and billboard campaign will be launched, and an excellent press book has been prepared.

"A Woman in Grey," adapted from the story of the same name by C. N. & A. M. Williamson, has an exploitation and advertising campaign fashioned along the line of the story, which is founded on a baffling mystery. The art heralds in two colors carry out the mystic atmosphere.

The banners, which are waterproof, are in brilliant colors and can be used for the entire fifteen episodes. The window cards which are in five colors are said to be an innovation. There are also, slides, lobby photos, cuts, mats, and an assortment of one three and six sheets on each episode.

This serial is being rapidly sold on state rights basis, and the foreign rights have been secured by the Export and Import Film Company.

The subjects include the "A Burlesque on Carmen," in four parts; "The Champion," "Work," "Jitney Elopement," in two reels, and "By the Sea," a one-reel. "Carmen" will be presented the week of January 18th. A special musical setting will be written by Doctor Resenfeld.

"Carmen" will be followed at the Rialto by the showing of "The Champion" and "Work."

The bookings at the Rialto mark the initial presentation of these Chaplin productions in the State of New York since their reissue, and will be followed by first run bookings throughout the country.

"Cruel, Cruel Love" Now Known as "Lord Helpus"

THE single reel special comedy "Lord Helpus," featuring Charlie Chaplin, formerly entitled, "Cruel Cruel Love," is being released now on the state rights market by Tower Film Corporation. It is said to be proving a success with exhibitors, according to reports from Tower Film Corporation.

Aside from Chaplin himself and his antics, the story is voted a laugh generator. Theatre audiences who leave with a healthy smile, exhibitors find, come back, and boost the prestige of their theatre. Territorial rights are now being sold by Tower Film Corporation.

200,000 Feet Shot for Numa Film.

In the filming of the Numa Pictures Corporation's big special production, "The Return of Tarzan," based on Edgar Rice Burrough's story the cast is said to have travelled a total of 18,000 miles, including trips from New York to Charleston, S. C., Florida, New England, San Diego, Los Angeles, Balboa and Universal City, Cal., and cameramen John Holbrook and James Hutchinson have shot 200,000 feet of film.

Frohman Serial Company Filming Scenes in South

THE entire cast and directorial staff now engaged in the making of the Frohman Amusement Corporation serial, "The Invisible Ray," left recently for Jacksonville and Miami, to take the water episodes that appear in that production.

"The Invisible Ray" will have a wide variety of locations and a vital part to the story are the scenes laid on docks and in and on two steam yachts, motor launches, hydroplanes and aeroplanes. The closing scenes of three episodes call for hazardous stunts during the trip to Southern waters where water craft of a wide variety finds refuge for the winter.

It is expected that the company will remain South for about two weeks. A steam yacht, "Essex," has been chartered and most of the scenes on board will be taken in the open sea, in addition to which the interiors of the yacht will be used with the aid of portable lights.

Immediately upon the return of the company arrangements will be made for a trade showing of the first five episodes of "The Invisible Ray" with a full orchestra and a spoken prologue at a large Broadway theatre.

Dana Returns Pleased Over Western Business

P. B. DANA, sales manager of the Arrow Film Corporation, has returned from a three weeks trip through the middle west and reports the state rights business in a flourishing condition. This is especially true in Chicago, Minneapolis, Cleveland and Detroit, where independent exchanges have increased their office space, their sales force and their business.

"I was greatly impressed," says Dana. "Never have I seen such film activity as I saw in Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit. Every independent exchange man seems possessed with the idea that 1920 is going to be a big year and exchangemen and salesmen are going about business with determniation to make good the promise.

"I was also impressed with the fact that several independent exchanges have recently engaged managers of exceptional ability; business men of sound judgment, integrity and men who command large salaries and are getting them. This surely is a step ahead and means that the independent exchanges are progressing along intelligent lines."

Mr. Dana closed several big deals while in Chicago, as well as other deals in Detroit, Cleveland, Milwaukee, and Minneapolis.

Max Cohen of Monopol Pictures Talks of His Company's Plans

IT is the policy of Monopol Pictures Company," says Max Cohen, general manager of the organization, "to apportion state rights on such a basis that the independent exchange cannot lose. In carrying out this idea, it will always be our purpose to give buyers the benefit of the lowest possible price. Following out this idea, we are arranging territorial rights on 'Crimson Shoals' and 'Alma, Where Do You Live?' on a percentage basis, charging only the actual cost of the film plus overhead as we are satisfied to make our profit out of the business done by these productions."

The statement was made by Mr. Cohen to the writer in an interesting interview. He further divulged the fact that his company, if it receives the co-operation of state rights buyers on this plan, will produce twelve high class features yearly which will be handled on the same basis. The rights to three stories, "The Flaming Night," "The Idle Lover" and "The Wolf" have already been secured.

To Broaden Activities.

Mr. Cohen further explained that his company has under way plans which will mean an extensive broadening of the activities of the organization, and enable them to materially increase the number of productions which will be offered to exhibitors.

Max Cohen has the distinction of being one of the youngest executives in the motion picture industry, and, although he is still in the early twenties, he has been actively connected with films for nine years and has literally grown up with them.

Starting with the Apex Company, with which he remained for several years, he later worked in the film cutting department of the Metro organization and has since been identified with practically every phase of the business. He was one of the first to go on the road selling state right features, during his days with Apex, at which time he was still in short trousers. In 1916, after again becoming identified with the state right field, he established what he believes to be a record, the disposal of rights to the entire forty eight states of the United States in six weeks. The subject was entitled "America Is Ready."

Mr. Cohen is full of pep and enthusiasm and the Monopol Pictures Company should prosper under his leadership.

Character Company Will Film Two Popular Novels

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by A. W. Plummer, of the newly formed Character Pictures Corporation, of the purchase of the motion picture rights to two popular novels. "The Frameup," by Edward Everett Mathews and "The Stampede," by Mack Arthur. They are both rugged outdoor stories and are said to lend themselves admirably to the type of production which is planned by the company.

"The Frameup" concerns a young man who falls in with an unscrupulous band of men who decide to make him the goat of an illegitimate enterprise. He falls for the bait but he succeeds in turning the tables and makes the enterprise a success.

"The Stampede" is a stirring red-blooded western tale of a man who fights single handed a band of desperate outlaws. Mystery and romance figure strongly in "The Stampede."

Hall Room Boys Stories Booking Heavily in South

THAT exhibitors who run Hall Room Comedies find them in the favor of their patronage, is apparent in a letter received from W. Conn, manuager of Premier Pictures Corporation, Atlanta, by Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of this series.

Mr. Conn enclosed letters he had received from exhibitor customers of his company, all of which were voluntary requests for bookings of the Hall Room two reelers and most of which declared they had heard of the wholesomeness of these pictures. One letter, in particular, was from Albert Sottile, of the Pastime Amusement Company, Charlotte, S. C., one of the largest exhibiting concerns in the South and operators of the Garden Theatre of that city.

Among other things, Mr. Sottile said:

"We have shown five of them to date and must confess that we have found each of them to give excellent satisfaction. They possess good stories, good casts, elegance in sets and are well directed. While clean comedy is the predominant tendency of your subjects, we have noticed that they cause laughter in all parts of the house. We shall be pleased to have you to continue supplying us regularly as in the past."

Mr. Sottile, according to the Cohns, has expressed the very thing which the producers have been striving to weave into this series. Without the usual galaxy of half-clothed girls to put them over, they contain a certain elegance and winsomeness that sets them apart in the comedy field, with an appeal to the human side of an audience that cannot be ignored.

Jans Pictures Will State Right Entire Series of Super-Features

AN announcement of unsuual interest to state rights buyers is the statement of Herman F. Jans, president of the Jans Pictures, Inc., that his company will release its series of super-features on the States Rights basis.

The first of the series to be handled under this plan will be the pictures being produced by B. A. Rolfe, with Olive Tell as the star. The initial release will be "Love Without Question," a photodramatic adaption of C. Wadworth Camp's novel, "The Abandoned Room," following which Mr. Rolfe will produce a filmization of J. Belmont Davis', "Nothing a Year."

Says the company's statement:

"Because of the business like methods being pursued the painstaking production activities and the careful attention to box office values, the announcement that the company's product will be state righted should come as a most welcome surprise to the Independent exchange man.

"Probably never before has the independent exchange had the opportunity of acquiring for release a series of super-features. It is generally the opinion of such exchange men that they are fortunate to be able to sign contracts for one such feature at a time, but with the Jans pictures it is a case of being able to guarantee their customers a series of pictures that the producers have pledged to make decidedly out of the ordinary and real box-office attractions.

"Offers have come from many parts of the country from state rights buyers who are anxious to sign up for the Jans productions and it is expected that territory will quickly be sold. Mr. Jans states that those independent exchange men who want to contract for this series of super-features should lose no time in getting in touch with him, as territory will be disposed on the 'first come first serve' basis."

House Runs Christie Film for 1200 Consecutive Days

J. L. FRIEDMAN, of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, has just made a contract with the Playhouse, a prominent downtown theatre, in Chicago, whereby Christie Comedies will play continuously in that house beginning with the current new releases.

Celebrated lists 1,100 theatre in Illinois and Indiana as regular customers. Its hold on the Chicago territory is best indicated by the fact that 280 Chicago theatres in Chicago alone are now showing Christie one-reel comedies.

Celebrated also calls attention to what is claimed to be a record, the Christie short subjects having played 1,200 consecutive days at the Alcazar Theatre in Chicago, a period of time covering nearly three years without a break.

"Face to Face" Is Title of New Grossman Feature

HARRY GROSSMAN announces that the second of the series of feature productions starring Marguerite Marsh will have the title "Face to Face." The series, the first of which was "Wits vs Wits," is said to give to the screen a line of detective stories of a new order, produced on a lavish scale and with a cast of unusual prominence.

"Wits vs Wits," was sold to Hallmark Pictures Corporation at the first screening.

"Face to Face," the second of the stories, is now nearing completion at the company studios at Ithaca. It is said to be a feature of more elaborate proportions than the first, with a story remarkable from many angles.

The story for the third feature has been accepted and production will be begun as soon as the present picture is finished.

Mr. Grossman states that the serial production "$1,000,000 Reward," featuring Lillian Walker, gives promise of great popularity and broadcast bookings. The few open territories are being bought fast.

Daring Director Doubles for Stunt-Man in Serial

FRED W. SITTENHAM is directing the new Reeve and Grey serial, "The Mystery Mind," featuring J. Robert Pauline. The story deals with hypnotism as a science and is full of thrills and "daredevil" stunts.

The scenario calls for a scene in which a man climbs out of a window, drops to the roof of the house next door and from that roof to the street. A daredevil was engaged for the scene but when it came to facing the camera he balked, so Mr. Sittenham made the jump himself, and repeated it as the camera balked.

Mr. Sittenham is a new serial director.

At Princeton he gained a reputation in athletics. After leaving college he became an assistant director with the Metro company. For two years he served in the Naval Aviation Corps with the rank of lieutenant junior grade. He had been out of service only a few days when Reeve and Grey engaged him to direct "The Mystery Mind."

The comedies are two reels in length and will be released each month on the state rights basis commencing with "Some Mind Reader," scheduled for release January 15th.

"We will release the Johnny Dooley Comedies as specials," said Matthias Radin, president of the Tyrad Pictures, Inc. "An extensive advertising campaign, an attractive lobby display and exhibitors' aids that would do credit to features of longer length are being arranged and our company will spare no effort in making the name of Johnny Dooley a by-word with moving picture fans as is now the case with patrons of the speaking stage.

"As a fun maker, Johnny is in a class by himself, being one of the most versatile artists now appearing before the American public. Associated with Johnny in the making of these pictures are such well known Broadway stars as Sophie Tucker, Gilda Gray and Martha Mansfield, all of whom appear in his first release, in addition to the Dooley Beauty Brigade selected from a group of Follies beauties."

Schuchert was manager.

Laemmle to Return East.

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who returns to New York this week, has attended to many details and executed much business during his brief stay on the Coast. One of his announcements has to do with the new policy that will be adopted by Universal for 1920, in regard to stories and material for coming Universal productions. No expense is to be spared in the matter of staging a picture, or the price to be paid for stories, according to Mr. Laemmle, and although he would give no names of plays about to be produced, he admitted that a number of stories by famous writers are being purchased for future use.

Mr. Laemmle also stated that possibly in the spring he will make a tour of the principal European cities, with the hopes of seeing Universal distributing offices established in each city he visits.

The David Butler Films.

First National Franchise Owners in Ohio Plan Expansion of Power

RATIFICATION of the new policies launched on January 19 by First National Exhibitors Circuit and plans for increasing the exhibitor membership of their own state organization to include more than 300 additional theatres, with announcement of the names of exhibitors who have contracted for exclusive booking rights under the new plans, are among the important actions taken by 125 franchise owners representing 150 theatres in the First National Exhibitors Company of Ohio at a convention in Cleveland.

This special meeting was held to formally consider the expansion plans which became effective with the start of official activity by the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and the Associated First aNtional Theatres, Inc., the two new organizations formed recently by the circuit with a combined capital of $16,400,000, to determine their effect upon the present method of operation in Ohio, to appoint a committee of nine exhibitors to meet with the directors and executives of the circuit and to represent them at the general convention of all First National franchise owners at Atlantic City.

Personnel of Committee.

The committee of nine appointed a sub-committee whose members came to New York for a conference before they went to Atlantic City. I. Lisbon, of Cincinnati, was named chairman of the main committee of nine. Members serving with Mr. Lisbon were Gus Sun, proprietor of the Fairbanks and two other theatres in Springfield; C. E. Renner, of Youngstown, Charles K. Friedman, of the Valentine Theatre in Toledo; M. B. Horowitz, of the Fountain Theatre, Cleveland; William Slimm, of the Marquee Theatre, Cleveland; Fred Desberg, of Loew's Stillman, Cleveland; John Harris, associated with Mr. Lisbon, and Ben L. Herdingsfeld, attorney, for the Lisbon-Harris interests.

Operation of the First National franchise in Ohio for the last two years has been along lines similar to the form of activity which will be pursued by the newly created national organization, so that the exhibitor members of the First National Exhibitors' Company of Ohio actually have provided a test case of the efficacy and practicability of several important phases of the system that will be pursued by the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and the Associated First National Theatres, Inc.

Exhibitors' Circuit of Ohio.

Under the leadership of E. M. Mandelbaum as president of the Ohio Company, the state organization has grown from a small original membership, until today it includes every important first-run theatre in the state.

The Principle of Distribution.

"With unanimous adoption of the expansion plan advocated by First National Exhibitors Circuit," declares Mr. Mandelbaum, "the membership of sub-franchise owners will be increased until every theatre of consequence in the state will be included, without regard to the age of service used."

The Mandelbaum principle of distribution through a mutualization of exhibitor booking interests became famous more than a year ago when it was discovered that the plan enabled the First National first-run account in Cleveland to book the Chaplin productions for week stands at a rental of $600, with return engagements rental free. This, it was revealed then, was the first-run percentage equivalent of the total negative cost assessed by the national body to the Ohio franchise.

It is this method of mutualization which is an outstanding feature of the new distributing plan, and which virtually eliminates film rentals and rental speculations, translating them into terms of definite percentages that remain fixed and permanent, varying only accordig to the differences in negative valuations for attractions released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc.

Salesmen to Exploit.

A unique conversion of the time of the salesmen heretofore employed by the First National Exhibitors Company of Ohio will be made with the inauguration of the new national plan in that territory. The sub-franchise system will do away almost entirely with salesmen, with the disposal of the exhibitor in rights in each locality to specified theatres, but Mr. Mandelbaum announces that the sales staff will be retained, as salesmen to the public rather than to the exhibitors.

"Each salesman will become an exploitation man," he explains. "The staff will have the responsibility of working with every sub-franchise owner in the territory to increase the efficiency and results from advertising and publicity placed by the theatres in behalf of the Associated First National attractions. Instead of traveling the state armed with contracts and arguments for bookings, they will devote their entire time to conceiving new exploitation ideas that will enable the exhibitors to attract more patrons to their respective theatres."

"Everybody's Business" Will Aid Patriotic Drive

THE six reel feature, "Everybody's Business," released by W. H. Productions Co. on the state right market will play a prominent part in the "Americanization Drive" which Secretary Lane has inaugurated and in which he is specially enlisting the services of the motion picture screen through its producers. This production embodys the very ideas upon which the drive is founded.

The American Legion, now co-operating with the "Drive" committees, recognized possibilities in "Everybody's Business." The Chas. A. Learned Post No. 1, of Detroit, control the rights to this production for Michigan and expect to put over some unique exploitation and advertising when they release the photoplay in their territory.

"Everybody's Business" is a human story. It is not a propaganda picture, nor a "preaching" picture. But at the same time it has a true American spirit with a deep appeal to the patriotism of every man and woman.

Marshall Neilan Musters Eminent Technical Staff

ASSOCIATED with Marshall Neilan in the picturization of "The River's End," James Oliver Curwood's newest novel of the great outdoors, is one of the best technical staffs ever assembled by a director.

Victor Heernan, well known for his film achievements, is directing various scenes under Mr. Neilan's supervision. Marion Fairfax, who has had five years as a scenario writer for Lasky, adapted the book for screen presentation. Howard M. Ewing, inventor of many effects in motion picture lighting, is supervising the electrical features and some novel effects are promised. Other members of the producing staff are Ben Barre, known for his work in Tourneur pictures as art director; Henry Cronjager and Sam Landers, camera experts, and Tom Held and H. I. Peyton, assistant directors.

Mr. Neilan's initial First National attraction as an independent producer presents a theme of strong dramatic intensity. Lewis Stone, in the dual role of Conniston and Keith, is called upon to exert his best histronic ability, and other characters played by Majorie Daw. Jane Novak and Yami Mata, offer exceptional possibilities.

When Juanita Hansen, New Pathé Star First Met a Quintette of Lions

By Edward Weitzel

IF Texas Guinan hadn't accepted an offer to go to the West Coast to make a series of pictures for the Bulls Eye Film Corporation, Juanita Hansen would not have driven straight to a roomy and home-like studio apartment on the ground floor of one of those comfortable old dwellings near lower Fifth avenue when she came East to make serials for the Pathe Company. And if the fortunate and grateful Juanita had not been the owner of a handsome and home-like bungalow in the screen city of the West the likewise fortunate and grateful Miss Texas would now be paying heart-breaking sums for the privilege of having a place to hang her sombrero and her "chaps"—beg pardon, Miss Texas! I should have said hat and other feminine frills. Rents in New York, as is well known, are something ferocious; but in Los Angeles they are more so, multiplied many times. So the two screen stars swapped homes, and that is why I found myself, as the novelist puts it, seated at the side of a glowing grate fire in the front room of Miss Guinan's spacious apartment.

This interview is with Juanita Hansen, but I am going to steal enough space to tell about that front room. It was the abode of the "female Bill Hart"—but it didn't look it. Not a six-shooter, saddle or branding iron was in sight. There were exquisite bits of Japanese carving, rare vases and artistic curios from many lands. Oriental hangings in rich designs adorned the walls. A valuable old cabinet with many shelves and hinting of secret drawers and sliding panels stood in one corner of the room. The tables and chairs were odd pieces of fine workmanship. There were electric lights with shaded globes in all sorts of unexpected places. The effect of it all was a compliment to the owner's good taste; and not for an instant did it lose the atmosphere of a real home. Its treasures have all been gathered, piece by piece, by Texas Guinan herself. She may love the sports and pursuits of the cow-punchers of her native state, but she has an equal love for the refining influences of life, and when she crosses her own threshold is surrounded by the beauties that are the products of civilization in its most artistic forms.

Junaita Hansen Becomes a Star.

I must apologize to Miss Hansen for keeping her interview waiting, but I had an excellent opportunity to note the details I have just set down while she went into the next room to answer a telephone call. Coming back she brought with her a set of pictures showing scenes from "The Lost City," the Selig serial now being released by Warner Brothers, which lead to her engagement with the Pathe Company. As the heroine of "The Lost City" her work convinced the makers of the first fifteen-episode story that this blonde-haired graduate from the Sennett school of physical perfections was also an actress of the proper caliber to fill the vacant nitch in their serial star department.

"I had to wait over four years for my chance to show that I could be trusted with a leading part," explained Miss Hansen; "but my engagement with Pathe coming so soon after 'The Lost City' was finished makes me feel that my reward has really arrived."

"Coast Defense."

With Juanita Hansen, popular serial star, who has signed with Pathe.

Her Introduction to the Lions.

The picture among the collection of "stills" which attracted my attention at that moment showed an airily attired young woman in garments of a fantastic cut, playing with several lions—baby size.

"They're the cutest things you ever saw!" exclaimed the original of the lady in the center of the group; "just like little kittens, and so fat and funny when they tried to stand up! I loved to play with them."

Another Favorite Sport.

Juanita believes in changing the old line about "a lion among the ladies" to "a lady among the lions."

"How about their pa and ma and the rest of their grown-up relations," I asked; "did you become at all familiar with any of them while making the picture?"

"No; we weren't even on speaking terms. None of the keepers offered to introduce me and I never seemed to want to mingle in their set, anyway. There is one scene in the picture where I receive a visit from five lions in a bunch, and they didn't act at all friendly, and neither did I."

"What did you do—show them the front door?"

"No; but I came very near showing them my heels. When I was given the scenario of 'The Lost City' to read and discovered I should have to come to close quarters with all sorts of wild animals, I told myself that if the other members of the company could do it, so could I. The scenes are laid in the center of Africa, where the lost city of the story is situated. I am supposed to be a princess, the daughter of a proud race, and not afraid of man or beast—you know how wonderful all serial heroines are? It sounded fine to read how courageous my character was, but I found it no joke to live up to the heroine's reputation before the picture had more than started.

Leo and His Saucy Slap.

"It was a case of 'looking the part' in dead earnest, I should say."

Miss Hansen was kind enough to smile at my sally.

"The afternoon the five lions dropped in on me I did some of the best acting, trying not to look scared, I shall ever be capable of," she said. "In this scene two animals that have just been shot are lying on the ground. The lions break through the jungle when they scent the meal. I had been told to fire my revolver and stand my ground: the lions would be too busy with the dead animals to pay any attention to me. The moment I caught sight of them I was tempted to commence shooting, but I waited until they started to investigate the freshly killed beasts.

"As the action of the story did not call for a scene showing the lions feeding, the dead animals had been treated with disinfectant, and my uninvited guests stopped only long enough to take one whiff of the strange odor before heading for the jungle again—all except one old fellow; he broke up the show, so far as I was concerned. After taking his whiff he stood looking down very solemnly for an instant without moving. He then raised one of his front paws and gave the animal a regular saucy slap and walked off after his companions. To me that slap seemed to say, 'I wouldn't be bothered with you, anyway!' and the only thing I registered was a long string of laughs."

1920 Will Be Biggest Year In History of Industry, Says Berman

THIS year will be the biggest year the film industry has ever known. People want better pictures. Patrons are now play-educated and demand higher class productions and are willing to pay higher prices to see them. New York's theatres do not surpass the out-of-town houses. The other key cities play as large a part in determining the success of a picture as does the metropolis. These are a few of the statements made by Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal, upon his return from a tour of the country, made to complete plans for the handling of the increased business expected this year.

Beautiful Theatres Being Built.

"We are about to experience the biggest returns we ever knew of," says Mr. Berman. "A good part of the money turned loose by the enforcement of prohibition regulations is going to find its place in the pockets of exhibitors.

"The growing excellence and lavishness of photoplay productions is gradually educating and refining the people's taste as to what they may expect on the screen. They are now demanding higher class productions all the time. They know they cost more to produce and they are willing to pay higher prices to see them. 1920 will see the screening of the finest photoplays ever produced.

Harry M. Berman
General manager Universal exchanges.

"The picture theatres are keeping pace with the increasing quality in screen productions. New York cannot boast of any better playhouses than any other section of the country. With the exception of the Capitol, the West has theatres which rival any of New York's best. The West is not standing still. New theatres of elegant design and architecture, sumptuously fitted, are going up everywhere.

New York Not the Proof.

"Is New York the criterion of the success of the picture? Absolutely no! The other key cities stamp a picture a success or a failure in their respective territories regardless of whatever New York's verdict may be. It is nice to say, of course, that this or that picture played at the Capitol or the Rivoli or any other prominent house of New York. But this means nothing to the exhibitor out west or down south. He depends on the verdict of his key city.

Not Looking for Percentage Bookings.

"Will the percentage method of booking pictures become an actuality? I think not, although I am personally in favor of it and think the film business should be conducted along this line. Exhibitors are making too much money by buying pictures outright to be interested in changing their methods. The majority of successful exhibitors avoid reference to this subject altogether. There are enough good pictures on the market on which they can be sure of their profits and they do not care to enter into a plan whereby they would have to split their earnings in any way. Percentage may come eventually, but the exhibitors are certainly going to fight against it.

"A point which augurs well for the future of the industry is that all producers are given the same reception by the exhibitors. The exhibitor wants good pictures and he doesn't care who makes them. If they are good he will book them. A trade mark is a good thing for a reputation, but if a fine picture is shown an exhibitor with no mention of any name of the producer he will book it regardless. This is a healthy spot in the business. It allows for real competition and competition spurs the producers to beter efforts."

William Russell Has Virile Part In Scenic Production by American

AMERICAN FILM COMPANY, INC., will shortly issue another superfeature in which William Russell enacts the leading male role. It bears the title, "The Valley of Tomorrow," and is said by reviewers who have seen it at private advance showings to be fully as powerful if not even more gripping than was "Six Feet Four," the preceding Russell subject.

"The Valley of Tomorrow" is a story of life in the mountains and is enacted by a cast of specially selected players amid scenic backgrounds of a rather unusual nature. The majority of the exteriors were taken in and about Lake Tahoe, famous for its scenic grandeur. Some "shots" were obtained along the banks of the Truckee River that should attract much favorable comment.

The basic motif of the story is optimism, showing after many trials and dramatic situations, that to-morrow will, of a certainty, be a better day.

A Critic's Impressions.

"I am positive," says President Samuel S. Hutchinson, of American, "that every exhibitor who screened 'Six Feet Four' will find 'The Valley of Tomorrow' even more to his liking. It is a story that for suspense has seldom been equaled. The interest of the spectator is centered in the first reel on 'Dabney Morgan,' the hero, and from that point on to the very end there is never a let-down in the suspense element.

"A well known critic who looked at the film a week or two ago turned to me at the end of the exhibition and said, 'Mr. Hutchinson, I don't recall having seen a film in over a year in which the suspense was sustained over such a long period. When it goes on the theatre screen, I am certain it will hold any audience spell-bound. It builds up to a climax which continues through at least two full reels, and there is never an instant's let-down during all that period.'

Written by Stephen Fox.

"Stephen Fox, who has prepared several of the successful Russell productions, is the author of 'The Valley of Tomorrow,' and he himself adapted the story to the screen. William Russell is supported by a company of carefully chosen players, among whom are Mary Thurman, Harvey Clark, Fred Malatesta, Frank Brownlee, Pauline Curley, Frank Clark and Lewis King. Emmett J. Flynn directed the production. All the usual exhibitors aids are provided and can be secured from the American Film Company representative at any Pathe Exchange."

Exhibitors may view the picture at their nearest Pathe exchange and arrangements for booking can be made with the American Film Company representative stationed there.

Film Thousand Islands.

The Thousand Islands, and particularly that section in the vicinity of Alexandria Bay, will be featured in "A Fool and His Money," about twenty actors and actresses now being located at the well known summer resort. The presence of the little colony of film folk has brought joy to the village, but the weather has been against picture taking for the last few days.

Hart Island, which is better known in northern New York as "Boldt's Folly," representing an expenditure of over $1,000,000 and never completed as a summer home for the late proprietor of the Waldorf Astoria, is being used as one of the locations.

Exhibitor Books "Six Feet Four."

"Believing always that one who accomplishes great things is worthy of encouragement," writes H. H. Bosley, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., to the American Film Company, "I take this occasion to mention a few facts regarding 'Six Feet Four,' your feature from the book by Jackson Gregory, which we just finished playing a week's engagement at the Alhambra.

"In the face of the keenest kind of competition in the way of latest productions featuring the most prominent stars, playing in opposition houses, my box office receipts showed a surprising increase. My receipts from Monday on, increased each day, which indicates that the production is well liked."

Constance to Dabble in Love.

Joseph M. Schenck has purchased an original story by John Emerson and Anita Loos, "The Love Expert," for Constance Talmadge's fifth First National. This story will be directed by David Kirkland, and the exteriors will be made at Palm Beach, where Constance will spend the month of February.

This picture will follow the release of "In Search of a Sinner," which is now completed and is expected to have its initial showing in New York some time in March.

"The Love Experts" is a modern satirical comedy. Harry Wentworth, casting director of the Constance Talmadge Film Company, is now interviewing players for this film, and work will be started at the Forty-eighth street studio on January 15.

Jesse S. Bernstein Goes Abroad To Represent Trans-Regional Interests

HAVING always contended that it is the personal touch that steers any enterprise on to success, Jesse S. Bernstein, president of the Trans-Regional Trading Corporation, of New York, is again putting his theory into effect by sailing for England and the Continent, where, by coming into personal contact with theatre owners and exhibitors, he will introduce to them the Automaticket System.

Mr. Bernstein's trip, as planned, will take him to all of the more important capitals of Europe, from Spain and Portugal to non-Bolshevist Russia. His temporary headquarters in London will be at W. S. Crawfords, Ltd., Craven House, Kingsway, W. C. Within a short time, however, Trans-Regional will have its own London office. Branch offices will also be maintained in Paris, Madrid, Berlin and other cities.

A Stickler for Personal Contact.

Mr. Bernstein was asked before his departure if he eventually intended to enter the film trade. He laughed and said, "Who knows? I'll admit I'm interested, but as far as entering that field as an active trader is concerned, again I say 'Who knows.' I have no definite plans as yet in that direction, neither has my company, but, of course, we will consider taking up any staple article with actual money-making possibilities.

"You know I am a stickler for personal contact in business—the larger the business, the greater the necessity for that influence. The average buyer who comes to New York from London or Paris or South America wants to know something of the individuals to whom his money ultimately goes, and the deal hangs entirely upon his impression of them.

Jesse S Bernstein

Believes in Dignified Advertising.

"I really want Europe to appreciate the good things we have to offer, and there is no better way than by going to Europeans directly. In the case of the Automaticket system, the plan of procedure will be similar to that followed in the United States. Machines will be placed on trial.

"Our factory facilities are being strained to meet present demands from all quarters of the globe, and we have purposely held off until the present time before beginning to seek a wider market. I shall resort to no novel advertising medium, but will inform the foreign public of the Automaticket by means of dignified announcements in conservative cinema publications. The system will sell itself."

Chicago Adopts Statute Preventing Misrepresentation of Productions

WITH the passage by the Chicago City Council of an ordinance introduced by Alderman George M. Maypole, a movement has been started, with the endorsement of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, to prevent motion picture theatres from misrepresenting the character of an entertainment.

The ordinance adopted in Chicago follows:

Text of Ordinance.

"That it shall be the duty of the proprietor, operator or manager of every theatre or other place of amusement in the city of Chicago to open to the public in which motion pictures are produced, to exhibit on a billboard, placed in front of the building or other structure in which such show is given and such motion pictures are exhibited, the title to the pictures, which title shall be full enough to describe in general terms the nature and character of the picture or pictures to be shown.

"No such proprietor, operator or manager shall place, maintain or allow to be placed or maintained in front of or in connection with any such theatre or other place of public amusement any sign, picture or other announcement which in any manner misstates or misrepresents the pictures or other amusements which are being shown in said place, or which announces a picture or other form of amusement or entertainment which is not at the time such announcement is displayed being shown and exhibited in said theatre or other place of amusement.

Maximum Fine of $50.

"Any person being such proprietor, agent or manager of any theatre or other place of amusement in the city of Chicago, open to the public, failing to comply with the provisions of this section shall on conviction thereof be fined not less than $10 nor more than $50, and each day that any such theatre or other place of amusement is operated without the exhibition of such a statement of the title of the pictures being shown or that a sign is displayed which in any manner misrepresents the amusement being offered or announces amusements which are not at the time being offered, shall be a separate offense."

Gabriel L. Hess, chairman of the censorship committee of the National Association, believes the enactment of ordinances of the kind will have a salutary effect. It has been found that many of the men who have advocated censorship have gained their ideas of motion pictures from lurid signs and have no real knowledge of the entertainments given in the motion picture theatres of the country.

Alice Surprised the Natives.

Alice Eldridge, of Hopp Hadley's "Movical" comedy combining "The New Wizard of Oz" and "The Movie Girls' Revue," strolled into Asbury, N. J., last week and amused herself between shows by swimming in the big pool adjoining the boardwalk. Her work in the water was soon the talk of the town, the natives not knowing that she has won forty-eight cups and fifty-eight medals for high diving and swimming. Box office results were splendid, and the Savoy Theatre wants the "Movical" for a full week's return engagement.

Hopp Hadley announces the addition to the cast of "The Movie Girls' Revue" of a mule, a lion and a crow. The mule holds the record for laughs except when Frank F. Moore, who played the Palace, N. Y., thirteen times in one season, is on the stage.

Empey Has New Publication.

Guy Empey is not too busy with the filming of his new special production, "Oil," to have found time for the editing of a new publication which has recently appeared upon the newsstands. Uncle Sam is the title of the magazine and, for the present time, it is to appear monthly.

This is not Guy Empey's first venture in periodical publishing, as his monthly magazine, Treat 'Em Rough, made its appearance during the latter part of 1918.

Treat 'Em Rough has now been superseded by Uncle Sam, which is an unillustrated journal packed with meat from cover to cover.

Change Title of Pathe Serial.

A change in the title of the Arthur F. Beck serial co-starring Stuart Holmes and Frances Mann, which is to be released by Pathe is announced by Pathe Exchange, Inc. The title under which it has been known, "The Isle of Jewels," has been changed to "Trailed by Three," the latter conforming more accurately to the story that has been written by Charles Turner Dazey, its well known author.

The object of the chase about which the entire action of the fifteen-episode serial centers is a priceless rope of pearls which represents the ransom of a tribe of South Sea Islanders from their cruel oppressors. The oppressors are the villains of the story and they are three in number and they trail the heroine who is custodian of the jewels.

Anita Stewart Finishes "Fighting Shepherdess"

THE Louis B. Mayer-First National production, "The Fighting Shepherdess," Anita Stewart's new starring vehicle, has been completed at the Mayer Studios at Los Angeles. Edward Jose directed the picture, which is founded on the novel by Caroline Lockhart of the same name.

The cast includes a number of well known players. Noah Beery, who plays Mormon Joe, was featured in "The Sea Wolf" and "The Sagebrusher." Wallace MacDonald will be seen as Hughie Dissston. He has recently been leading man for Marguerite Clark, Madge Kennedy, Mary MacLaren and Bessie Love. Walter Long, who portrays the villain, has been in many D. W. Griffith's productions. Eugenie Besserer, who impersonated a roadhouse keeper, has also been with Griffith productions. Another member of the cast is John Hall, who previously co-starred with Al Jennings in a series of western productions. Gibson Gowland will take the part of Bowers, the loyal shepherder.

The scenario was written by Frank M. Dazey and Tony Gaudio was in charge of the camera work. "The Fighting Shepherdess" probably will not be released until the early part of February.

Lucy Cotton

Star of the Bacon production, "Blind Love," state right feature released by Nathan Hirsh.

Specialty Film Import to Release Weekly British Feature In Canada

A START has been made with arrangements for the threatening invasion of Canada by British moving picture producers, as intimated a few weeks ago in the report of a tour of Canada by J. B. MacKay, of Montreal, Canadian general manager of the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays. This company controls the Canadian rights for no less than fourteen different moving picture producers of Great Britain, and it has been declared that a considerable number of prospective releases have already been received at Montreal.

The latest development is that the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., with head office in Montreal and branch offices in five other cities of Canada, has signed a contract to distribute the British productions throughout the Dominion. The president of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd. is L. Ernest Ouimet, who is the Pathe franchise holder for Canada. His company also handles other releases and produces the British-Canadian Pathe News.

One British Film a Week.

By the initial contract with the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Ltd., one British feature will be released each week in Canada. Announcement is also made that the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., will release British-made scenics, comedies and educational films in addition to features.

The first British features to be released in Canada are: "The City of Beautiful Nonsense," starring Henry Edwards and Chrissie White; "The Forest on the Hill," by Eden Phillips, with Alma Taylor, Gerald Ames, Gwynne Herbert and James Carew; "The Gentleman Rider," a Hepworth production, and "The Nature of the Beast," also a Hepworth feature.

The official release of the first of the above pictures is scheduled for February 1, and before that date there will be trade showings in a number of Canadian cities.

Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen, of Toronto, have their British Films, Ltd., and will, of course, continue to import British productions for release in their own and other theatres in the Dominion. The Allens have had their representative at London for many months to select pictures that are considered suitable for the Canadian market. The Specialty Film Import, Ltd., and British Films, Ltd., are the only Canadian companies, however, which have made definite arrangements for the relaese of British pictures in Canada to date.

Finis Fox Making Screen Version of Drury Lane Play

FINIS FOX has been assigned to make the screen adaptation of "Hearts are Trumps," the third of the five Drury Lane melodramas purchased by Metro for screen production.

"Hearts Are Trumps," as its title suggests, is a drama in which men and women gamble for high stakes in love and fortune. Its rapid fire action transpires in England and Australia and then moves swiftly to the Swiss Alps, where the culminating thrill is furnished in a scene of power and audacious novelty.

Finis Fox refuses to disclose how he intends to handle the climactic situation of Cecil Raleigh's original melodrama.

The remaining two of the five Drury Lane plays bought by Metro are "The Great Millionaire" and "The Marriages of Mayfair."

Biblical Scenes a Feature of Mildred Harris Picture

ONE of the startling effects of "Polly of the Storm Country," Mildred Harris Chaplin's first Louis B. Mayer-First National production, is a sequence of biblical scenes in retrospection. From the homely squatter cabin where Polly sits at the knee of Granny Hopkins, the movie fan is transported to the Dark Ages, and with the little star sees the vision of Judith as Granny reads the worn Bible. This sequence shows the famous Bible heroine entreated by the mothers of Bethulia to save the city from the besieging army of the Assyrian commander, Holophernes. Weeping and imploring mothers are seen holding up their infants to Polly, who imagines herself the famous Judith.

Another scene shows the interior of Holophernes' tent with Judith entering to make the supreme sacrifice for her people.

In the story Polly is led to surrender herself to a man she does not love. This sacrifice, like the sacrifice of Judith, is prompted by love of an endangered town, the Squatter Village, where live the friends of the picture heroine.

John Barrymore Finishes "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

JOHN S. BARRYMORE, director, has finished the filming of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," which was adapted by Clara Beranger from Stevenson's classic of dual personality and has John Barrymore as the star. In the role which Richard Mansfield made famous on the stage, Mr. Barrymore does some of the highly dramatic acting for which he has achieved renown, and in the portrayal of the good and the evil man, he has rare opportunities to shew his versatility.

Martha Mansfield, of Midnight Frolic fame, is Mr. Barrymore's leading woman. Other members of the cast include Brandon Hurst, J. Malcolm Dunn, Cecil Clovelly, Charles Lane, George Stevens and Nita Naldi of the Century Midnight Whirl.

No exteriors were made for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," as it was impossible to find locations in New York like London of 1860, and so street after street, master pieces in studio sets, were built in the studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by the art decoration department. A music hall of London of 1860, accurate in every detail, was one of the most pretentious sets built. Roy Overbaugh was the cameraman and Lovett was assistant director.

New York Capitol Schedules Fourth Goldwyn Feature; Two Soon to Show

FROM the great number of current releases submitted each week for consideration, E. J. Bowes, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, New York, has selected two more Goldwyn pictures for presentation at an early date. They are "Pinto," starring Mabel Normand and "The Paliser Case," starring Pauline Frederick. This makes four Goldwyn productions chosen as feature attractions for the Capitol since it was opened in the fall. The others, which played to record-breaking crowds, were Rex Beach's "The Girl From Outside" and Mabel Normand in "Jinx."

Manager Bowes booked the pictures immediately after the private showings in the projection room at the Capitol and soon will decide on the weeks for their presentation.

Date to Be Selected.

"The Paliser Case," from the novel by Edgar Saltus and the first picture directed by William Parke for Goldwyn, promises to be classed among the powerful dramas of the season. The plot is a remarkable piece of adroit construction which maintains the elements of mystery and suspense through five reels of vital action in which Miss Frederick gives one of the most intense emotional character portrayals of her entire screen career. The question of who committed the murder around which the story centers is not answered until the close of the drama.

Unlike "Jinx," but equally strong in its comedy points, is Mabel Normand's "Pinto" written and produced by Victor Schertzinger, who gave the Goldwyn comedienne the role of a girl of the western plains. The opening scenes are laid in the west, but through a novel set of circumstances, the heroine is brought east where she rough-rides into high society.

Versatile Jimmy Becomes United Picture Manager

JAMES B. KELLY, "Smiling Jimmy," former special sales representative of General Manager Harry Berman, of Universal Film Exchange, Inc., recently resigned to accept the management of the northern and western part of New York State for the United Picture Theatres of America, with headquarters at Buffalo.

Although little is known of Mr. Kelly in the East, with the possible exception of the western Pennsylvania and Ohio territories, south of the Mason and Dixon line and west of the Mississippi River he is known to nearly every exhibitor, having managed exchanges for Universal, General and other concerns at Atlanta, Jacksonville, New Orleans, Dallas, Oklahoma City and St. Louis, also having had some experience as a special representative on the Coast.

In securing the services of Mr. Kelly, the United has obtained a man of wide experience, not only in the exchange end of the game, in which he has been for the past ten years, but also a successful exhibition. Previous to that, his experience as an executive with several well known commercial enterprises also gives him a "strangle hold" on nearly any condition that may arise.

Many readers have become interested in "Jimmy's" articles that have appeared in this paper along salesmanship and distribution lines, these being both enterprising, instructive and amusing, and we look forward to more "Kelly" stories in the near future.

Kaufman Resigns to Be Independent Producer

ALBERT A. KAUFMAN, who was one of the original officers and organizers in the Famous Players Film Company and a director in the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has resigned his connection with the corporation and will enter the field of independent producers.

The announcement was not altogether a surprise to Mr. Kaufman's many friends as they were aware that, upon the completion of his mission as a special representative of the corporation in Great Britain arranging for the British studios of the company, he had several times announced his inclination to enter the producing field upon his own resources.

Five Made Record in Army.

At the outbreak of the war, Mr. Kaufman was eastern studio manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. He enlisted for service and made a splendid record in the Signal Corps, leaving the service with the rank of captain. Mr. Kaufman was requested by Jesse L. Lasky to return to London and establish the British studios. A month ago Mr. Kaufman, having completed the preliminary work, returned to New York. Since then he has made a trip to California and intends leaving again for California in a few days.

Mr. Kaufman is a brother-in-law of Adolp Zukor. He has been associated with Mr. Zukor in different enterprises for fifteen years and always has been credited with a share in the success of the Famous Players Film Company. His acquaintance among artists and directors is very wide.

Mr. Kaufman explained that in severing his connection with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation he was leaving with the very best of feeling between himself and the officers of the company. He said that soon after his arrival in California he will make a more detailed announcement of his future plans.

Pathe Has New One-Sheet for Its Special Pictures

THE progressive exploitation policy of Pathe will take another step forward shortly when a novelty in the way of one sheets will be introduced to exhibitors. Beginnig with the release of "Other Men's Shoes," Edgar Lewis's first big production for Pathe distribution, which is set for release on February 1, Pathe will issue an additional rotogravure one sheet on each of its extra special offerings.

This poster will contain punch scenes from the picture, with a carefully written sales talk directed for public consumption. It will be artistically produced, so that it can take the place of costly and sometimes ineffective lobby displays, and will make a fine window display in addition. Many exhibitors have been suggesting such an arrangement, but owing to the cost Pathe was obliged to get the sentiments of a large portion of its patrons before embarking on its novel plan.

These posters will be issued only on extra specials, in which class of Pathe releases will be found attractions of the merit of "Oh, Boy," "The Thirteenth Chair," "A Woman of Pleasure," "Fighting Cressy," "The Gay Old Dog," "The Right to Lie," "The World Aflame" and "Other Men's Shoes." The captions for these one sheets will be written by men of proved showmanship capacity.

Christine Mayo Engaged With Marshall Neilan

CHRISTINE MAYO has been engaged by Marshall Neilan for a prominent part in his second independent production, which is now in the making at the Fairbanks' studio in Hollywood.

Miss Mayo has recently come to the front as one of the screen's best actresses, and in the coming picture she will have a part which will offer her exceptional opportunity to display her best talents as a vampire.

She has been cast for the part of a divorcee, who, because of her previous matrimonial troubles is not in favor of marrying again, and advises the hero of the story, who is her friend, against entering the bonds of wedlock. Because of her friendship for the young man, which is purely platonic, she is misunderstood by a small town community and ostracized from the social set.

Miss Mayo entered pictures after a short career on the stage, during which she played leading roles in "Excuse Me," "The Concert" and "Seven Keys to Baldpate."

Her best known pictures are "Mother's Confession," "A Fool's Paradise," "Two Men and a Woman" and "Who's Your Neighbor?"

Moore Star of Movical Comedy.

Following the launching of Movical comedy, the first of which "The New Wizard of Oz" and "Movie Girls' Revue" is now playing to capacity houses in New Jersey, preparatory to its introduction on Broadway, comes the announcement that Hopp Hadley, originator of the idea, and Frank F. Moore, star of the "Wizard of Oz" picture and well-known vaudeville and musical comedy favorite, have gotten together, with the result that the original Scarecrow of "Morton and Moore" will star in the Revue in connection with the picture.

Movical comedy holds the stage and screen at the Trent Theatre, Trenton, N. J. during the week of January 12, and Frank Moore, himself, leads the Revue and jumps from screen to stage at intervals during the performance.

Lasky Returns Enthusiastic Over New Paramount-Artcraft Specials

FULL of enthusiasm for the forthcoming Paramount Artcraft specials which he had seen in the making in California, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, has returned to New York following a stay of several months on the Pacific Coast, where he made a thorough inspection of the corporation's western producing organization.

"If we in the motion picture industry ever thought we had seen the limit of the big motion picture production," said Mr. Lasky, "we are destined to be pleasantly surprised in the next few months, for the rest of this season of 1920 will see the release of some of the most artistic, spectacular and dramatic pictures ever put on the screen. The hour of the big special has struck, and the vast army of motion picture lovers all over the country in the coming months will see the screen rise to new heights of artistic expression.

"This is not a generality. I have seen Cecil B. DeMille making 'Why Change Your Wife?' and I have seen this wonderful picture on the screen. It is a strong drama, beautifully done, and will prove a fitting successor to other big Cecil De Mille successes.

A New DeMille Picture.

"This picture has in its cast those splendid artists, Thomas Meighan and Gloria Swanson, and has been produced with the lavishness of setting and costuming which has come to be associated with Mr. DeMille's name. Some of the most beautiful gowns I have ever seen are in this production. The story was written by William DeMille and presents a phase of the married life problem.

"Then there is William D. Taylor's production, 'Huckleberry Finn.' Mr. Taylor is a lover of Mark Twain's books and he has closely followed the text of the story. Many of the scenes were photographed on the Mississippi River, on the actual scenes of Mark Twain's story.

"George Melford's production of Jack London's story, 'The Sea Wolf,' is another example of the big special productions which exhibitors can look forward to.

"Treasure Island" Finished.

"Maurice Tourneur has finished his production of 'Treasure Island,' and I promise every reader of Stevenson's book that the picture will contain all the thrills and picturesqueness that made the story a classic of English literature.

"George Melford has started his production of Roscoe Arbuckle in 'The Round-Up.' I predict that comedy fans will be delighted with the famous comedian's excursion into screen drama of feature length.

"William DeMille is busy on his special production of 'The Prince Chap,' with Thomas Meighan in the title role. Mr. Meighan's sterling abilities make him ideal for this role and Mr. DeMille is planning an extraordinarily lavish production.

"Sydney Chaplin has a surprise in store in his picture, 'One Hundred Million.' Mr. Chaplin has shown me some of the picture and has told me of things that have been done in the production of it. Some of it was made in France, some of it in England and some on shipboard. In fact it is an international picture and will have an international success.

"Lois Weber is busy producing the first of her big special productions which are to be released by Paramount Artcraft. The picture has not been titled yet. Miss Weber is one of the really big directors and her genius for interpreting life in the terms of the mass is unique.

"After completing 'The Copperhead' in the East, Charles Maigne went to California and started work on Robert W. Chambers' great story, 'The Fighting Chance.'"

Pays for Ford Weekly Full Year in Advance

THE first exhibitor in St. Louis to use the Ford Educational Weekly from the opening issue, and continue without a break is the distinction accorded to Jack Sweeny, manager of the Central Thetre.

Mr. Sweeny realized the value of the Ford Weekly immediately on its screening when it was first offered to exhibitors. Every issue from the first to the last release has been shown on the Central's screen, each for a seven-day period. As a matter of fact the patrons of the Central look for the Ford just as they look for a seat, and the absence of either would be an equal calamity.

As a further testimonial to the value of the Ford Educational Weekly, Mr. Sweeney visited the St. Louis office of Goldwyn, who distribute the film, early New Year's Day, with his check for the entire year's service in advance, and had the honor of affixing his signature to the first 1920 Ford contract issued by the St. Louis office.

Items of Interest to Exporters

Big Deal Closed by Howells for Circuit Films in South America

DAVID P. HOWELLS, INC., has closed one of the largest film deals recorded in the annals of Latin-American motion picture history. As a result of this contract the Howells organization has sold the exclusive rights for First National productions for South America, or, to be more explicit, for Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Paraguay, Brazil, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador, to the enterprising firm of Natalini & Company, with headquarters in Buenos Aires and Rio de Janeiro, and branches in every one of the important centers throughout South America.

The figures involved were possibly the largest single amount ever changing hands in one single Latin-American motion picture deal. Charles F. Hale, the Natalini New York representative, signed the contracts for his principal.

The aggressiveness and steady progress of the Howells organization has been one of the noteworthy developments of the past year in export. Roberto Natalini occupies a similar niche in the film history of Latin America. In the last few years he has conducted the film business in a way that has surprised some of the more conservative elements engaged in the film business throughout this territory.

Starting with Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay he soon became connected with the biggest in pictures. Among his earliest purchases were the First National Charlie Chapin productions, first for the three countries already cited and later for Brazil as well. In addition, he has exclusive rights to certain of the Fox special productions, such as "Les Miserables."

It is a distinct feather in his cap that he should now hold the exclusive rights for such well-known First National stars as Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Katherine McDonald, Jack Pickford, Charles Ray, the First National D. W. Griffith productions, the new King Vidor productions, the Marshall Neilan productions and the Henry Lehrman comedies.

The Howells organization announced the closing of this deal with a six-page splash in the advertising pages of this issue of Cine-Mundial.

Bernstein Delays Sailing.

Jesse Bernstein, general manager of the Trans-Regional Trading Corporation which controls, amongst other mechanism; the foreign rights on the Automaticket Register, has set back his sailing to Europe. He now has arranged to catch the January 28 steamer. While there, he will decide the firm which will handle this very important and necessary theatre ticket booth adjunct throughout the United Kingdom. France, Germany, Belgium, Switzerland and Spain will be taken up while he is on the continent, and he will also confer with the buyers who have already closed for his product elsewhere throughout Europe. While away, the Trans-Regional offices will be managed by Mr. Bosworth, his able lieutenant.

Bachmann Back from West.

J. G. Bachmann, who has done quite some buying of worlds rights for motion picture production from time to time, has returned to his New York office after a three week's trip to Los Angeles. Mr. Bachmann has other enterprises in addition to his film buying and will bear close watching from now on. Though he is familiar and has been connected with the industry since it early days it is a reasonable assumption that he will be more active in the film end of his enterprises than heretofore.

Ramms Makes Bow.

Joseph R. Miles, one of the best and most favorably known of American film exporters, now reaches the export trade under the film name of Ramms Inc.; this in addition to his several other enterprises. Associated with him in Ramms, is, among others, his brother Herbert. The firm now located in the Candler Building will shortly take offices in the Leavitt Building, independently of Joe Miles' quarters in the Candler Building.

Inter-Ocean to Spring Big News.

Though the Inter-Ocean Film Company is not ready yet to make a formal announcement, it will behoove the trade to keep an eagle eye on Gus Schlessinger, manager of the film export departments, and Gene Kaufman, manager of accessory department of this pioneer film export concern. There is much activity at 218 W. 42nd Street at this time, and in addition to news from President Paul Cromelin, now in London, there will be a weighty announcement shortly, from Mr. Newgass. This firm has at all times been a very fast mover but this time will make the biggest announcement of its career.

Glucksmann Moves Offices.

Jacobo Glucksmann is now occupying his new offices on the twelfth floor of the Candler Building. It is easy to understand how the expansion in his buying for the firm of Max Glucksmann as well as of his own increased personal world rights buying activities, have necessitated a larger office.

Rachmann Reaches Continent.

Samuel Rachmann, of the Atlantic Cinema Corporation, has cabled to headquarters in New York announcing safe arrival to the Continent. He has already joined Ben Blumenthal.

Smith Joining Goldwyn.

On February 1, A. George Smith for many years an important executive with the South African Film Trust and International Photoplays Corporation will join Goldwyn as British representative, with headquarters in London. A complete announcement regarding the future activities of Mr. Smith will no doubt soon emenate from the Goldwyn offices. In the meantime it will suffice to say that Mr. Smith leaves his former associates only because of the unusual opportunity and offer provided by the Goldwyn corporation.

Allen in New Quarters.

L. H. Allen is another exporter who is moving his business offices. He has secured half of the fourth floor of the Leavitt Building, formerly occupied by the Fox Film Company, and is gradually moving into this new location, where, in addition to a suite of offices, he has a private projection room. His successful selling record of Vitagraph productions in the foreign markets bespeaks the highest praise for Mr. Allen and it is a pleasure for the buyers to note that he is handling independent productions in increasing numbers for the foreign markets.

Gillespie Buying More.

J. M. de Aragon, head of the film export department of Gillespie Brothers & Co., is active buying the Latin-American rights to more film productions. His latest purchase is "The Bandbox" which features Doris Kenyon in its leading role. "The Bandbox," as a dramatic show, enjoyed an uncommonly popular vogue in New York, but is said to prove even more fascinating with Miss Kenyon as star. Gibraltar Productions made the feature.

New Mexican Buyer Arrives.

Rafael Cruz Blanco is the most recent film buyer to arrive from Mexico. Sr. Blanco has for a number of years been an exhibitor of prominence with headquarters in Mexico City, and has of late gone more and more heavily into the distribution of feature productions throughout Mexico. Since arriving in New York he has closed several deals and is making his headquarters in the office of Joseph P. Lamy.

Lamy Buying Serials.

Joseph P. Lamy this week closed for the complete Latin American exclusive rights to the new Helen Holmes serial, "The Danger Trail," produced by the Holmes Productions Inc., of which H. M. Warner is president. He also has secured exclusive Latin American rights to "The Screaming Shadow" which features Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber produced by Frank Hall. Met Mr. Lamy just after a private showing of the first three episodes of the latter productions and were impressed with his enthusiasm regarding it.

he now claims he did not particularly need.

The mid-westerner took it out on the Pacific coast, however. As he reached the lobby feeling like a prize fighter all set for stepping into the ring, he received a telegram from a nationally known Oregonian asking that a suite of rooms be reserved.

The mid-westerner turned to the clerk and inquired: "What's the damage on the best suite of rooms available?"

"Seventy-five dollars a day," was the response.

"Taken," said the mid-westerner.

Later, when the Oregonian arrived, a party of his friends accompanied him to his suite to observe the fireworks.

The exhibitor strolled through the series of rooms, his face wreathed in smiles.

"Blank," he said, "I don't know how I'll be able adequately to thank you for your kindness. This surely is mighty fine."

Siegmund ("Pop") Lubin has made daily calls on the visiting film men. "Pop" has been a resident of Atlantic City for thirty years. Asked as to his intentions for the future, he replied that he believed he'd have to get back in harness.

"Do you know I am the first man to use an orchestra to accompany pictures?" said the veteran. "It's a fact. I made pictures and built theatres when there were not many picture men anywhere. Yes, I was on the coast for a couple of weeks. It's a wonderful country out there for picture making—the only place for all-year work. Give my best regards to all the boys in New York."

Among the fellow veterans to greet "Pop" was Bill Swanson.

An exchangeman and an exhibitor were talking of recent pictures that had made hits. The World man remarked he had heard a party of New Jersey praise "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave."

"I'll tell you a story about that picture," said the exhibitor. "This is not just conversation. I saw all the documents that covered the case. The exchange offered the picture for $350 for a week's showing. The exhibitor said he would pay $250. The exchangeman made a counter proposal that the exhibitor set aside his week's expenses, that $350 be allotted to the exchange, and that after the two sums had been covered the two parties split fifty-fifty. The exhibitor agreed. I saw the check for $927 which the exhibitor gave the exchangeman in settlement above $350. I know exhibitors are afraid of the percentage stuff, but I'll bet there's one man I know whose ideas on the subject have changed."

Conference of Mayors Names Four Committees

up until the introduction of bills in the New York State Legislature, which will be of much importance to the motion picture industry, was made at the opening session of the special committee instigated by the State Conference of Mayors to investigate the further regulation of pictures, in this city on Thursday, January 15. The committee members met at the Waldorf-Astoria, the luncheon being followed by a short talk by Mayor Walter Stone, of Syracuse, and William P. Capes, of Albany.

The sub-committee as named were:

State censorship—Rex Beach, Ardsley-on-the-Hudson; R. Andrew Hamilton, of Rochester, and James P. Holland, of New York, president of the State Federation of Labor.

National Board of Review—Walter W. Nicholson, Syracuse; the Rev. Charles O. Judkins, Glens Falls; Mrs. N. B. Spalding, Schenectady.

Present laws—Gabriel L. Hess, New York; Mary G. Peck, New York, and A. E. Smith, New York.

Local regulations—Dr. Everett D. Martin, New York; Mrs. Howard Gans, representing the Federation of Child Study, and Walter Hayes, of Buffalo.

In his short talk to members of the committee, Mayor Stone said that he earnestly hoped that the committee would make a careful study of the situation in this state, and that it should be entirely free from all bias, if good was to be accomplished. The speaker emphasized the necessity of study from every angle, and when conclusions were reached, they should be reported to the conference with such recommendations as were deemed necessary in shaping bills that will be introduced in the legislature, backed by the conference. These will not only embrace state-wide regulation, but will also include such regulation of motion pictures as may be deemed necessary for cities themselves to act on.

During the morning Mayor Stone had a long talk with F. H. Richardson, editor of the projection department of Moving Picture World, relative to the projection part of the situation.

Thursday afternoon was spent visiting several of the larger studios. Friday was given over to committee meetings. Later sessions will be held in Albany.

Public Now Shops In Newspapers, Marshall Neilan Tells Exhibitors

MARSHALL NEILAN, in discussing the motion picture patron of today, points out that the day of "running around the corner to the movies" is rapidly disappearing, that the motion picture public is now going out of its way to see a good film and that there has become evident a tendency to "shop in the newspapers" for its entertainment the same as it does for its dry-goods bargains and sales, its choice of theatrical attractions, its base-ball games and its furniture.

"The motion picture public, to a very large extent, has become extremely discriminating in the selection of its entertainment just as it is in the purchase of merchandise," he says. "The day of running around the corner to the picture theatre is disappearing and people will gladly walk two or three blocks, yes, and take a car to go downtown, avoiding inferior shows, in order to get good entertainment.

Show Discrimination.

"Time was when any picture show was a picture show. Today they are looking for good picture shows. The public is selecting its entertainment and bases its selection on past performances of the director, the star, the author and even the lesser lights in the productions. This is the best thing that could happen for the industry, as it proves an incentive to those who desire to present their best efforts.

"People have become thoroughly educated in turning to the pages of the newspapers for their daily purchases—including the buying of screen entertainment. For many people it has become just as impracticable to walk into any motion picture theatre, sit down and expect a good show as it is to drop into a five-and-ten-cent store and expect to buy a baby grand piano.

Paper the First Medium.

"The newspaper is the first medium the exhibitor should consider. It should be the foundation of his advertising. Billboards, electric signs and other forms of outdoor advertising are effective, yes, highly essential. However, when the family at home in the evening wishes to see 'The River's End,' for instance, they don't send Sonny down the street to look at the billboards and see where the picture is playing, but they pick up the newspaper and find out.

"With this 'shopping instinct' so evident on the part of the great majority of the American people—particularly among the class which comprises the motion picture public—it is only natural that screen entertainment is being purchased to an ever-increasing extent through the channels of the daily press."

New Daylight Bill Introduced.

Another bill "to save daylight in the first zone so as to encourage the establishment of home gardening and for other purposes," has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Walter J. Edge, of New Jersey. This measure provides that within the first zone as established by the daylight saving law which was repealed last year the standard time shall be advanced one hour at two a. m. of the last Sunday in April of each year and retarded one hour at two a. m. of the last Sunday in September of each year. It has been referred to the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce for consideration.

Kunkel to Assist Cooper.

Wally Van, supervising director with the Benny Leonard serial, "The Evil Eye," written by Roy L. McCardell and J. Gordon Cooper, who will direct the Benny Leonard serial under Mr. Van's supervision, has engaged Glenn Kunkel to assist in directing.

Work on the serial has been started at the Thirty-eighth street studio. The first two episodes will be completed before Supervisor Van and Director Cooper take the Leonard company on its trip to the Coast, stopping off in every important city between here and Los Angeles for scenes.

Paul Allison Is Elected Chairman of Indianapolis Exchange Managers

PAUL ALLISON, of the Doll-Van Corporation, was elected chairman of the Indiana Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers for the year 1920 at a recent meeting of the board at the Indianapolis Chamber of Commerce. Claud Penrod, of Fox Film Corporation, will be vice-chairman, and Floyd Brown, of the First National exchange, was elected treasurer. Miss Elsie Green, assistant secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, will continue as secretary of the board.

The Indiana board was organized in August, 1918, to promote, elevate and advance the motion picture distributing business and to co-operate with exhibitors and exchanges in ironing out any difficulties that might arise between them. The year just closed has been an extremely successful one for the organization and much good has been accomplished.

Non-Attendance at Meetings Costly.

The board, which is affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce, was formed as a result of an idea conceived by J. Schnitzer, formerly head of the Universal exchange in Indianapolis. The first officers were J. G. Connor, of Mutual Film Corporation, president; H. M. White, of World Film Corporation, vice-president, and Floyd Brown, of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, treasurer.

In order to insure a good attendance at the meetings, which are held every Friday, the board has adopted a rule that any member who is absent without a legitimate excuse, which has to be passed on by the entire board, has to pay for the lunches of every member of the board. The member who fails to arrive at the meeting on scheduled time has to buy cigars for the others.

Compiled Valuable Information.

The members of the board are extremely enthusiastic in supporting the various activities of the board and have co-operated in every instance. Complaints and grievances of exhibitors have been solicited and adjusted to the satisfaction of all concerned. One of the last moves of the board was the sending out of a questionaire to all exhibitors, asking for detailed information regarding the various theatres in Indiana. This information will enable the board to compile an extensive mailing list and will also give it much valuable information concerning the moving picture business in Indiana.

The board of directors for the new year is composed of the newly elected officers and R. S. Schrader, of the Pathe exchange; R. W. Abbott, of Universal; G. W. Wilson, of Bee Hive Film Corporation, and Samuel Sax, of Select

Big First Run Houses Book Hodkinson's "The Capitol"

REPORTS of Tom Moore's week of capacity business at his Strand Theatre, Washington, with Leah Baird in Augustus Thomas' "The Capitol," has stimulated interest in the W. W. Hodkinson release, Harry Davis, the successful picture showman, having booked it for immediate presentation at his big first run house, the Lyric, and J. E. Pearce for his Tudor Theatre, New Orleans. The Poli organization, on the strength of the excellent results obtained with the picture at its Wilkes-Barre house, brought the Leah Baird production to the Poli house in Scranton, opening to crowded houses.

"The Capitol" was well received at exhibitor showings in all Hodkinson offices last week, the production's timeliness, its engrossing scenes of the national capitol and its interest-compelling story of politics in Washington just when the political pot is beginning to boil for the 1920 presidential campaign, impressing exhibitiors everywhere that "The Capitol," properly advertised and exploited, should prove one of the year's big money-getters as well as an attraction suitable for every class of picture devotees.

Allen Brothers Are Fast Opening New Theatres In the Canadian West

A NOTABLE event in the business progress of Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen of Toronto was the opening of the great new Allen Theatre at Winnipeg, Manitoba, on January 2, under the direct management of Will M. Elliott, who has been manager of the fine Regent Theatre, a Regal enterprise of Toronto, for fourteen months. The opening of the new house found the Allens in possession of five of the leading theatres of the Manitoba capital, including the Allen, Dominion, Province, Gaiety and Bijou theatres.

The opening of the new Allen was the occasion for many special activities in local theatre circles. Incidentally, the new theatre has a number of distinctive details. The house was formally dedicated by ex-Mayor Waugh, of Winnipeg, and the ceremony included the reading of a considerable number of telegrams from film celebrities, including Mabel Normand, whose feature, "Upstairs," was the opening attraction; Tom Moore, Samuel Goldwyn, W. W. Hodkinson, Clara Kimball Young, Jack Pickford, Louise Glaum, Madge Kennedy, Pauline Frederick and Will Rogers.

Has Oil Burning Furnace.

The new theatre is equipped with an oil burning furnace, which was installed by the Fess Oil Burning Systems of Toronto, and it is the first building in Winnipeg to be so fitted. A large underground reservoir in the rear of the structure is used to supply fuel for the furnace. A unique detail is an electric signalling system for the orchestra, which consists of a set of small red, white and blue bulbs in the music rack for each player, by means of which the director may transmit special instructions during the musical accompaniment.

The large Hilgrey-Lane pipe organ did not arrive in time for the opening and it was found impossible to install some of the aisle lights, but otherwise the theatre was practically complete. The new Allen has no less than four Powers 6B projecting machines, and other equipment includes a double Hertner transverter, Acme screen, two Simplex ticket sellers and two Lightning coin changers.

Seats 2,000 People.

The theatre accommodates 2,000 people and has a balcony. The latter feature was eliminated in a number of recent Allen houses by the adoption of the amphitheatre style of architecture. Prices for the Winnipeg house grade from 33 cents to 65 cents for evening performances, and from 22 cents to 35 cents for afternoon shows, tax included. A small portion of the seats are reserved for both matinee and evening performances.

Manager Elliott was presented with a handsome traveling bag, the gift of Toronto admirers, Phil Kauffman of Toronto, managing director of the Select Pictures Corporation, Ltd., making the presentation.

Universal City Has Most People On Its Payroll, Declares Laemmle

UNIVERSAL CITY is going ahead at full steam," said Carl Laemmle after he had returned to New York from the West Coast. He was enthusiastic over the prospects of the new year and spoke of extending his company's activities. His flying tour of inspection of the Universal studios made him very optimistic in so far as production progress is concerned.

"Contrary to certain unfounded reports," said Mr. Laemmle, "Universal City has more people on its payroll at the present time than any other individual film company in California. If that sounds as if Universal is slackening up, well, then you know more than I do about my own organization.

Many Companies Working.

"When I was out there I found the whole place working at high efficiency. Everything was being done to keep things going fast and big. Every department was working at full pressure to keep up with the unprecedented growth in business.

"As an indication of what we are doing, I found three serial companies working, one company turning out Jewel pictures and no less than six companies producing our special attractions. This is in addition to the numerous companies turning out the usual number of Universal comedies, westerns and other short-reel subjects If this sounds like laying down on the job, then it means that other companies have no job to lay down on.

"Proud of Productions."

"I had occasion to see three of our future feature pictures now in course of cutting. 'The Devil's Pass Key,' 'The Gorgeous Canary' and 'The Beautiful Beggar.' I can unhesitatingly say that I am very proud of these productions. Universal has never done anything better.

"Stroheim's masterful direction has made 'The Devil's Pass Key' a picture of unsurpassed beauty and power and puts him in the circle of the world's premier directors. Tod Browning, too, deserves special credit for his work on 'The Beautiful Beggar,' Priscilla Dean's latest picture. He may well be proud of his efforts, for his five months' work on this production are justified and the picture is his masterpiece.

"'The Georgeous Canary,' with Dorothy Phillips, surpasses even Universal's 'Hearts of Humanity' which made such an unusual record throughout the country."

J. Warren Kerrigan Has Big Support in "Live Sparks"

J. WARREN KERRIGAN'S latest Robert Brunton production, "Live Sparks," the W. W. Hodkinson release, is marked by a strong supporting cast.

Fritzie Brunette is again seen in the leading feminine role. Joseph J. Dowling, one of America's popular character actors, needs no introduction. His work as Dave Pratt in "Live Sparks" is equal to his characterization of The Patriarch in George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man."

John Steppling, playing the part of Jacob Abbott, is a former colleague of E. H. Sothern and Louis James. Before joining the Kerrigan company he starred in a series of Essanay comedies. Excellent work is also done by Roy Laidlaw, in the character of Hiram Craig. Laidlaw formerly supported Kitty Gordon and Bessie Barriscale.

The heavy role is taken by Arthur Millette, former grand opera star and one of the most talented character actors on the screen. Clyde Benson puts some clever comedy into the role of William Carpenter, the Sparks' butler. Beth Ivins, late of the Chauncey Olcott company, and Zelma Maja have important parts.

Others in the cast are Mary Jane Irving, the talented child actress, Mary Talbot and Joe Rotell.

Adams Circuit Books American Films.

W. H. Aiken, an American representative, reports booking "The Hellion" for fourteen Iowa theatres of the Adams circuit for February showing. "Six Feet Four" ran during Christmas week in the same string of theatres, Mr. Aiken says he does business with Mrs. J. W. Adams who, in this case, the "the man to see." While Mr. Adams is scouting up run-down theatres, buying up "lemons," his wife is on the job at their headquarters, transforming them into active money-makers. A year ago there were three Adams theatres. Today, they operate fourteen.

Rolin Comedy Has "Kick" to It.

One of the complications which arises from prohibition is shown in the new Rolin Comedy, "The Dippy Dentist," which Pathe releases January 25. Eddie Boland and "Sunshine Sammy," the diminutive chocolate drop, are prominent in the cast, as is the Rolin bulldog, who performs a delicious bit of comedy after lapping up some of the precious fluid.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" Is Praised by Showmen Everywhere

J. PARKER READ, JR.'S close knowledge of the dramatic materials demanded by exhibitors in a large measure accounts for the instant success of his second Louise Glaum special production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," by Louis Joseph Vance, and distributed by the Hodkinson organization. Exhibitors' own reports rank this as a dramatically and technically perfect production and reports likewise strongly fix it as one of the few really big productions of the past twelve months. The reception of it by first run exhibitors has been exceptionally enthusiastic and it has gone into the biggest theatres for immediate play dates.

Breaks Records at the Garden.

"The Lone Wolf's Daughter" is the first production released through the Hodkinson organization to play the New York Capitol Theatre, its opening being scheduled for January 18 after a city-wide billboard campaign and heavy newspaper advertising.

The production established a week's attendance at Tom Moore's Garden Theatre, Washington, D. C., last week, and the noted Capitol City showman reports capacity business on its second Sunday presentation which ushered in another week's run of the picture. Charles H. Miles, for whom "Sahara" shattered all house records at his Majestic Theatre, Detroit, has booked the production for early February presentation.

The Goodwin Theatre, Newark, N. J., began a two weeks' engagement of the J. Parker Reid, Jr., production on Sunday and a capacity audience was the rule at every performance.

Other first run bookings that have just been closed are the Colonial, Toledo, O.; the Strand, Nashville, Tenn.; the Apollo, Peoria, Ill.; the Dome, Newcastle, Pa.; the Orpheum, Galesbury, Ill.; the Majestic, La Salle, Ill.; the Fox, Aurora, Ill.; the Mirror, Moline, Ill.; the Pam, Rockford, Ill.; the Blacktone, Pittsburg; the U. S. Photoplay, Paterson, N. J.; the Majestic, Jackson, Mich.; the De Luxe, Hammond, Ind.; the Strand, Fort Dodge, Ia.

Many First Run Bookings Secured on "Live Sharks"

THOUGH but a week has elapsed since the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announced the mid-January release of J. Warren Kerrigan's fourth Robert Brunton production, "Live Sparks," sales reports from Hodkinson managers in nearly every territory reveal the same exhibitor interest that was manifested in the star's previous Brunton successes, despite the fact that in only one office—Pittsburgh—has a trade showing been held on the new Kerrigan picture.

That initial showing bore immediate fruit for the Rowland & Clark first-run house, the Regent, opened a prerelease presentation of "Live Sparks" on Sunday to capacity house, an engagement which will be followed during the month by six other Pittsburgh houses in the Rowland & Clark chain.

Among the first run contracts reported for the week on "Live Sparks" are The Strand, Nashville; the Sun, Omaha; the Plaza, Lansing, Mich.; the Park, Worcester, Mass.; Poli's Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; the William Penn, Chester, Pa.; the Signal, Chattanooga; the Regent, Wichita, Kans.; the Princess, Birmingham, Ala.; the Merrimac, Lowell, Mass.; the Isis, Cedar Rapids, Ia., and the Strand, Tulsa.

Juanita Hansen Begins Work on New Pathe Serial

JUANITA HANSEN has begun work on her first serial under the Pathe banner. She arrived in New York last week, accompanied by her personal representative, Don Meaney, and has taken an apartment here, prepared to become a permanent resident.

"The Mad Talon" is the working title of the serial in which Miss Hansen is being starred. The story is by George B. Seitz. Frank Leon Smith is writing the continuity, and the direction will be supervised by Mr. Seitz himself at the studio of George B. Seitz., Inc., Park avenue and 134th street, New York.

Warner Oland, famous as a screen serial villain, has been engaged to play the heavy lead opposite Miss Hansen. Henry G. Sell plays the juvenile hero. "The Mad Talon" is described as a mystery serial with a touch of the supernatural.

Kilgour in Cast of "Shore Acres."

Joseph Kilgour has been cast for the part of Josiah Blake in "Shore Acres," by James A. Hearne in which Alice Lake is to be featured by Screen Classics, Inc. Mr. Kilgour is one of the Metro stock players. He has just completed the part of Murray Van Allan in May Allison's latest Screen Classics, "The Walk-Offs," the Morosco stage success by Frederic and Fanny Hatton.

Miss Dalton and Charles Richman Begin Work On "Half An Hour"

DOROTHY DALTON, who recently changed her affiliation from Thomas H. Ince to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has commenced work on "Half an Hour," her first picture under the terms of her new contract. This is Miss Dalton's first picture to be made since she registered her success in "Aphrodite." That play is still running at the Century Theatre and every available minute of Miss Dalton's time will be taken up by her work on the stage and for the motion picture.

Harley Knoles has been selected to direct Miss Dalton. Mr. Knoles only recently completed "The Cost," featuring Violet Heming, and it was because of the excellence of his translation of the David Graham Phillips story that his services were secured by a long-term contract. Some of the other successes to his credit are "Little Women," "Stolen Orders," "Bought and Paid For" and "Stolen Paradise."

Sir James M. Barrie's story, "Half an Hour," lends itself particularly well to Miss Dalton. With the exception of the maid, who has a small but nevertheless an important part in the story, she will be the only feminine character.

No Elaborate Sets Necessary.

Charles Richman will play the part of Richard Carson, the enormously rich husband of Lady Lillian, Frank Losee will have the part of Dr. Brodie, friend of Carson, who has much to do with reuniting the unhappy couple. Albert Barrett plays the part of the man with whom Lady Lillian would elope, although married, and Cooper Cliffe as the Earl of Westford and Hazel Turney as Susie, the maid, complete the cast.

As is suggested by the title, the story of "Half an Hour" happens in a very short space of time. No elaborate sets will be necessary to bring out the action and suspense that are crammed into that half hour. Clara Beranger, who has made so many successful adaptations for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, wrote the scenario and is authority for the statement that not only will the original title of the story be preserved, but the photoplay will follow the book as closely as possible, regardless of the speculation in the New York newspapers to the contrary.

Moss Obtains Dyckman Theatre.

Through arrangement with John G. Jermon, who is now operating the Dyckman Theatre at 207th street, and Sherman avenue, New York City, B. S. Moss has assumed control of that theatre.

Extensive alterations will be made both in the interior and exterior of the Dyckman, which already has a seating capacity of approximately 1,800.

The Dyckman will continue temporarily to play motion pictures, but this policy will be changed soon to include vaudeville.

Cinema King Plans Theatre Chain To Cover India, Burma and Ceylon

By S. J. Banerjea

THE enterprising editor of "Business," published in Calcutta, has arranged a series of lectures to be illustrated by the cinematograph, with the object of assisting India to know herself industrially. The lectures will be delivered in the more important theatres and halls of the country. I trust that the lectures will be delivered in the vernacular, for then they will be sure to be very largely attended.

The other day Mr. Bulchand gave an exhibition of his cinema film, "Motherhood," at the Napier, Paona. Her excellency, Lady Lloyd, and many well-known Indian and European women were present. The film is being used in a "Better Babies" campaign. The proceeds of the shows will be used for free exhibitions of the picture to women of the poorer classes in Paona. They are held under the auspices of the Bombay Presidency Women's Council.

The following extract from an article in "East and West" will be read with interest:

Want Small Portable Machines

"Is the use of the cinema for matters of health, sanitation, etc., practicable in India? Small portable machines for itinerating work are now being manufactured at reasonable prices. Owing to the war, new machines are not available at present in India, but it is probable that used machines in good condition might be secured.

"The economic students of the colleges should be able to supply intelligent lectures. Indeed, such work opens a field for practical training in social economics which colleges, that wish to develop in their students a practical love for their motherland, might very well enter. Many of the films necessary might be secured from the West, but many others would have to be manufactured.

"However, photographing machines may be secured at comparatively small cost and the films be developed by the cinema houses. A demand for films of this nature will surely be met, as in Europe and America. In a comparatively short time, a library of films may be secured which may be made invaluable in the economic and industrial development of India."

Audience Shouts "Thief."

I have no doubt that American manufacturers will be able to meet every demand from India. I suggest that the advertising pages of Moving Picture World be studied by those who have the good of India at heart.

Messrs. Skippers & Co., of Calcutta, have secured the exclusive rights to the use of the figure of Charlie Chaplin in cartoon film ads. The first of the series to be shown in Calcutta cinemas is entitled "The Fire King." Who says India lags behind?

A cinema theatre under the name of the Picture House has been opened in Delphi in the Rink Theatre.

The Phoenix Bioscope Theatre, of Calcutta, has become a house for serials. "The Masked Rider," which is now being shown, is drawing crowds, but whenever the masked rider appears, people shout "chone" (thief), clearly showing that the mission of the rider is not understood. American manufacturers, therefore, should use plain English in their text, as the films will fly over the heads of the people. I regret to state that the Phoenix people are threatened with ejection in an involved case of law with a Maxwari chap.

Madan Plans Fifty Theatres.

J. F. Madan has turned his various bioscopes and theatres into a limited liability company, with a capital of one crone of rupees. He is chairman of the board of directors, which numbers 12, two of whom are Europeans. Within the next half year, Madan will have twenty-one theatres running, and by the autumn he will have established some fifty theatres in various parts of India, Burma and Ceylon. A film hiring business on a large scale will be carried on.

Madan holds the agency for Pathe serials and all big features, all the Chaplins, with exclusive rights, the agency for the Bioscope outfit of Messrs. Gaumont, etc. A producing department has been opened and arrangements are being made for the erection of a modern studio and the securing of artists.

Madan Theatres, Ltd., have filmed a well-known Indian play, "Bhakta Soordas," or "Bilwamangal." I am told it is in ten parts and 12,000 feet in length. I went to see the film and was disappointed. The heroine was wearing a wrist watch all the time, although the play is not modern. The nautches were very commonplace. The text was full of annotations from Shakespeare, and even "Lead Kindly Light" had found a place.

The acting was third-rate. The scene depicting certain incidents in the house of the heroine, an immoral woman, is very objectionable. There are other defects to which no reference is necessary. Fadke, of Bombay, produces better films and it would be well if his example be followed by other Indian film manufacturers. I trust Madan and his advisors will not feel annoyed with my friendly remarks and that the next Elphinstone film will be quite all right.

Good Stories Are Needed As Well as Good Acting

MOTION pictures will show almost unbelievable progress in the next two years," says T. Hayes Hunter, under whose direction the first Eminent Authors picture has just been completed, "The Cup of Fury," by Rupert Hughes. "The camera's resources are infinite. Not a phase of human life, not an emotion that stirs the human heart but can be flashed on the screen.

"Every effort is being made to improve the quality of screen stories. When an author like Rupert Hughes goes to the studio to confer on the production of a photoplay from his novel, we have sufficient evidence of the genuine contribution of writers to screen production. Gripping stories, effectively staged, with casts of uniform excellence and directing of the highest order are the promise of the year 1920 in motion pictures.

"The day is past when a picture will make a big success through the personality of the star, without a good story. That is a fact now recognized by the public and the producer. The intelligence of the American public will no longer be insulted by various and sundry screen offerings which have nothing to command them but the personality of an individual.

"People are not less interested, today, in capable, effective acting; they will enjoy the performance of Helene Chadwick and Rockliffe Fellowes in 'The Cup of Fury' aside from the story. But they are insisting that the actors have screen vehicles worth while. With the story the star in Eminent Authors Pictures, the writer has come into his own."

Complete Mildred Harris Picture.

"Polly of the Storm Country," which will be Mildred Harris Chaplin's first Louis B. Mayer production, has just been finished at the Louis B. Mayer Studios in Los Angeles.

The story was written especially for Mrs. Chaplin by Grace Miller White, author of "Tess of the Storm Country," and "The Secret of the Storm Country," in which Mary Pickford and Norma Talmadge scored their biggest successes.

After turning the script over to Mrs. Chaplin, Miss White wrote the story in novel form and it will be published by a Boston firm simultaneously with the appearance of the picture on the screen.

The production was directed by Arthur H. Rosson and the camera was operated by his brother, Harold Rosson.

It will be released through First National Exhibitors Circuit some time in February.

High Praise for "Cup of Fury."

Although the picture has been seen only at special showings prior to its release by Goldwyn as the first Eminent Authors production, Rupert Hughes has already received a quantity of letters from the highest authorities complimenting him on the drama made from his story, "The Cup of Fury." The most critical audiences of motion picture experts obtainable were invited to view "The Cup of Fury." They have pronounced it a photoplay certain to live as one of the greatest screen triumphs of the period.

Big Race Track Scenes in "The Sporting Duchess"

DESPITE the intervention of New Year holidays, the Alice Joyce company which is in New Orleans completing Vitagraph's production of "The Sporting Duchess," rapid progress is being made on it. The company, twenty-one strong, arrived here the Sunday preceding New Year's in charge of Frank Loomis, studio manager for Vitagraph, and George Terwilliger, who is directing Miss Joyce.

On a previous trip Mr. Loomis had been here and completed arrangements for using the Fair Grounds racetrack for the racing scenes that play so large a part in the picture.

Sunday and Monday were devoted to selecting locations and on Tuesday the director commenced "shooting," using the star and other principals. Wednesday the entire company worked at the track and on Thursday, the opening day of the season, Mr. Terwilliger, with two cameramen and Frank Bangs, studio photographer for Vitagraph, worked on actual racing scenes.

Friday and Saturday the company used several hundred persons in big paddock scenes, and among the extras were some of the most prominent society girls and young men in the city. The compan expects to work here for several days more.

Percy Marmont is playing the lead and G. V. Seyffertitz is the heavy. Others in the company here are Captain Paps, a noted English player who served with distinction in the Royal Flying Corps during the war, Robert Agnew, a popular young juvenile, May McAvoy, Edith Walker and "Bill" Turner.

George Eastman Is Disclosed As Mysterious Donor of $11,000,000

THE Mysterious Mr. Smith," who for more than seven years has baffled the curiosity of technical and educational circles, is George Eastman, president of the Eastman Kodak Company, of Rochester, N. Y. The secret was revealed by the announcement that it was Mr. Eastman who had so long been the fairy godfather of Massachussetts Institute of Technology, and who, at a cost of $11,000,000, had quietly fathered the institution in its work of fitting men to go forth to solve the technical problems confronting the modern industrial world.

Many in the "Running."

Many of the country's most prominent men have been mentioned for the honors of "Mr. Smith," among them Carnegie, Frick, Vail and Edison, and more recently a theory was worked up to the effect that "Mr. Smith" was a syndicate of rich men. It will be recalled, however, that a few weeks ago, when curiosity was at a fever heat and many men other than Mr. Eeastman were being identified as "Mr. Smith," Moving Picture World forcasted that Mr. Eastman was the mysterious one.

No Waste of Money.

Richard Cockburn MacLaurin, president of the institute in making known the identity of "Mr. Smith" told of the early interest of Mr. Eastman in the institute. He said that a number of years ago he visited the Eastman plants at Rochester and was so impressed with the marvelous technical science employed there that he later wrote to Mr. Eastman, explaining how the institute was striving to improve and add to that same technical science. He says that later when Mr. Eastman had decided to do big things for the institute he was deeply impressed with the manner in which the film king would get to the heart of a thing and then plan the expenditure of his money in such a way as to bring out the desired result most directly.

Mr. Eastman has previously made gifts totalling $7,000,000 to the institute. Some months ago he announced that if other friends of the institute would give $4,000,000 he would duplicate that amount. It was also stipulated that if the amount was raised by next June the identity of "The Mysterious Mr. Smith" would be revealed. So great was the curiosity of friends of the institute that a drive was made and the required amount raised long before the time limit, as a reward for which it was decided not to longer postpone the introducing of Mr. Eastman.

Stock Included in Gift.

Included in the latest gift to the institute are 5,000 shares of stock in the Eastman Kodak Company. The institute has placed a valuation of $4,000,000 on the stock, which it is worth on the basis of a 6 per cent annual earning capacity. Recent sales of Eastman stock have been at around $600 per share, although it has fluctuated up above $700 per share.

In connection with the gift of this stock it is worth mentioning that Mr. Eastman's endowment of the National Academy of Motion Pictures, which he is founding in Rochester, is also understood to be in common stock of the Eastman Kodak Company. In this way the vast wealth which he has accumulated through his invention of film and the rise of the motion picture industry is being gradually and in considerable portions being turned back to the improvement of the whole industry. These endowments will not only be permanent memorials to Mr. Eastman, but may also be expected with the passing of time to bring out many new and wonderful inovations in an industry that is still growing and "going some."

Western Film Buyers Visit New York Market for Capital Film Exchanges

BIG as it is the local film bourse was dented when a party of Western film buyers reached New York January 8 for a session of buying productions for independent production. S. L. Barnard, president of the Capital Film Company, Chicago, headed the party. With Mr. Barnard came his general manager, C. E. Eckels, and they were met at the train by H. E. Belford, their eastern representative.

The rest of the party was made up of independent exchange managers who handle productions released through or distributed by the Capital Film Company from Chicago headquarters. These buyers included:

Sam Werner, of United Film Service, St. Louis; Al Kahn, of Crescent Film Company, Kansas City; R. C. Cropper, of Bee Hive Exchanges, Chicago, Milwaukee and Indianapolis; H. E. Coffey, Empire Film Distributing Company, Washington; Millman & Brown, of Capital Film Exchange, Philadelphia; Dave Warner, of Warner Films, Cleveland; John MacKenzie, representing the United Kingdom and William Pizor and Herman Gluckman, of the Capital's New York exchange.

Made Many Film "Buys."

William Steiner's series of twelve five-reelers were closed for together with the "Tex" mystery plots that will be relased one a month as produced by Mr. Steiner. In this series Mr. Steiner will apply his long experience, producing what he believes is a product that will suit the majority of exhibitors. For twenty-three years Mr. Steiner has been active in "the game" and he will make the "Tex" series represent the best judgment gained in this experience.

A series of twelve "Pippin" comedies, done in two reels each were also secured for the Capitol chain of exchanges. Twelve comedies of the "slap stick" variety, to be released under the brand name of "Capital Comedies" have also been arranged for by President Barnard and General Manager Eckels.

"Young Buffalo" will also be featured in twelve two-reelers, telling stories of the Northwest lumber camps. These are only part of the transactions reported by the Westerners as a result of their trip to the New York film market.

Blanche Sweet's "Come-Back" Puts Her in Foremost Ranks of Players

IN the recent annals of motion pictures, there is no brighter chapter than the sensational "come-back" of Blanche Sweet, who, in a short space of time has again become one of the screen's dominating personalities and biggest box office attractions. Under the production guidance of Jesse D. Hampton and the powerful selling influence of the Pathe feature department, Miss Sweet has regained the lofty position she held when she retired temporarily from screen activities.

Her success in "A Woman of Pleasure," first of the Hampton-Sweet series for Pathe distribution, is significant of the esteem in which the young star is regarded by the theatre-going public. No picture on the Pathe list during 1919 enjoyed a more substantial career than "A Woman of Pleasure," which is yet one of the biggest productions booking through Pathe.

"Cressy" Booking Fast."

More recently, there has been "Fighting Cressy," which, after a successful run at the Broadway Theatre, New York, is being booked through the country. Released only on Jan. 11, the bookings on "Fighting Cressy," which was adapted from Bret Harte's classic of the West, is selling at a pace more rapid than any picture in which she has ever appeared.

Now, for the third of her series of Hampton specials for Pathe, Miss Sweet is appearing in "The Deadlier Sex." The story was written by Bayard Vellier, who wrote "Within the Law," a stage production which netted the producers a profit of $3,000,000. He followed up this triumph with "The Thirteenth Chair," another box office winner.

Hampton Proposes a Fourth.

In "The Deadlier Sex," Mr. Veiller contributes a story that is delightfully humorous, possessing a goodly amount of dramatic incident, but rampant with a clean, delightful light vein that no one can resist.

With the completion of the third of the Sweet series for Pathe, Mr. Hampton is preparing to start work on the fourth. Its title and other details he has not announced as yet.

Lois Wilson Has Dramatic Role in Artcraft Picture

LOIS WILSON, leading woman in Paramount Artcraft pictures, has been chosen to support Robert Warwick in his latest Paramount Artcraft picture, "Thou Art the Man!"

This will be a decided change of role for Miss Wilson. In all of the Bryant Washburn pictures she has been appearing in light comedy parts, but in the new production, work upon which has just commenced, the leading woman will have a dramatic role which will tax to the utmost her emotional talents.

The picture is to be a screen version of "Myles Calthorpe, I. D. B." the novel by F. E. Mills Young, which depicts the adventures of a soldier of fortune who is employed in South Africa by a firm of supposed ostrich plume dealers, who, under that cloak are carrying on a traffic of illicit diamond buying.

Thomas Heffron is directing, Victor Ackland is cameraman and the story was adapted to the screen by Margaret Turnbull.

The cast includes J. M. Dumont, Clarence Burton, Clarence Geldart, Harry Carter, Jane Wolfe, Dorothy Rosher, Viora Daniel, Richard Wayne, Lorenza Lazarini, Lillian Leighton and Sylvia Ashton.

Crandall Beautifies Metropolitan.

New furnishings on the orchestra floor and promenade lounge at Crandall's Metropolitan Theatre, Washington, D. C., have added greatly to the attractiveness of the house. New carpets, a soft brown on the lower floor and royal red in the mezzanine, have been installed and several other changes made that the color scheme throughout might harmonize.

Ralph Ince to Leave New York.

After completing his two-reel patriotic feature, "The Land of Opportunity," which Lewis J. Selznick is making at the suggestion of Secretary of the Interior Lane, Ralph Ince will leave the Selznick Fort Lee studio to go to Canada and the Coast, where he will make two feature specials. The first has been announced as "The Law Bringers." The other is "The Greatest of These," a five-reel drama by Lewis Allen Browne, adapted to the screen by Mr. Browne from a novel, "The Untold Half."

"Cup of Fury" Acclaimed At Los Angeles Premier

"THE CUP OF FURY," the first Rupert Hughes production for Eminent Authors, had its premier showing at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, and broke all records for heavy attendance and enthusiasm. A telegram received from the West Coast reads:

"In spite of unusual competition with other houses and horse races and motorcycle races on Sunday, the business of 'The Cup of Fury' broke all records. Monday and Tuesday have also broken records. The picture has gone over so big that it far surpasses our high expectations and will sweep the country as one of the leading feature pictures of the year."

As a picture of working conditions in America and the turmoil of shipbuilding, "The Cup of Fury" supplies a fascinating background for the love story of Mamise, whose adventures in London and Washington, as society girl, stenographer and shipworker, pile up in thrilling entertainment power.

AFTER nearly a week spent in Chicago, the first stop on his two months' trip across the country, Felix F. Feist, vice-president and manager of sales for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, left on January 10 for St. Louis, where he will stay three days before going to Kansas City for the remainder of the week.

Making his headquarters at the Chicago branch, Mr. Feist received visits from many of the leading exhibitors of the city and surrounding territory, who were anxious to get advance information direct from Goldwyn's sales manager in reference to the company's enlarged projects for the coming year. Closing a week of unusual importance to the Goldwyn organization in Chicago, was a dinner at the Morrison Hotel attended by members of the sales force and other prominent in the motion picture activities of the district.

Sought Intricate Details.

Although the Goldwyn producing and distributing policy for 1920 has been outlined in previous announcements, Mr. Feist found that many exhibtiors were anxious to know more about the plans in detail, especially as they relate to the marketing of big special productions, the Eminent Authors Pictures, starting with "The Cup of Fury," and the Booth Tarkington, "Edgar" Comedies that mark an innovation in Goldwyn's output.

In commenting on the short subjects, Mr. Feist spoke of the increased activi ties of the Bray studios, which, in addition to the Pictograph that has become a most popular single-reel release, soon will issue the Goldwyn-Bray Comics and the Goldwyn-Bray Graphic. Each series, it is promised, will be a weekly release of the highest entertainment value.

Fair Rentals for All.

Those who met Mr. Feist were impressed by the sincerity of his declaration in regard to the business policy his organization will continue to pursue in the matter of rentals. He declared that every picture to be made and distributed by Goldwyn will be booked to all exhibitors, large and small, at prices which, with intelligent exploitation on the part of the exhibitor, will assure a handsome profit at the box office.

Omaha and Denver Next.

"We want no greater rental than any fair minded exhibitor is willing to admit we are entitled to have," said Mr. Feist.

A slight change in the itinerary for the trip will take the Goldwyn vice-president and sales manager to Omaha on January 17, 18 and 19, and to Denver on January 20, 21 and 22.

Pathe Anounces Release Plan of Mrs. Drew Comedies

WITH the completion of "The Charming Mrs. Chase," the first of the series of Mrs. Sidney Drew's two-reel comedies, adapted from the stories by Julian Street, in which John Cumberland, of bedroom farce fame, is starred, Pathe announces February 22 as release date for the first of the series. There will be eight of these modern comedy studies.

The series will follow the same lines as those which Mrs. Drew and her late husband created, only they will be produced along a more ambitious scale.

Mrs. Drew does not appear in these pictures. She feels that out of respect for her late husband she should remain off the screen, but she performs every other function in connection with the production of them. She will thus continue to supply motion picture audiences with what is considered the most human type of screen comedy. The first five comedies will be based on Julian Street's "After Thirty" series, as published in the Saturday Evening Post and McClure's Magazine. These proved to be so popular that they were later published in book form.

Notwithstanding the fact that these features are only two reels in length, and therefore short subjects, Pathe is laying out an extensive advertising campaign for the benefit of the exhibitors.

Prepare Exceptional Publicity for Miss Davies in "The Cinema Murder"

THE CINEMA MURDER," the special motion picture production which is to receive its New York premiere at the Rialto Theatre on January 18, will be launched into public view on a wave of publicity and advertising such as few motion pictures have had. Full-page advertising smashes are being contracted for, to run in the New York American, the New York Evening Journal, the New York Sunday American, the New York Times and the New York World.

Lithographs in four colors, from the one-sheet size to the twenty-four sheet size, will be plastered all over the metropolitan district. Special feature stories and articles written by prominent writers are another aid to exploitation that will be utilized to the full. Every possible avenue of publicity and exploitation will be taken advantage of to bring to the public the merits of this production.

Also Booked by Broadway.

Following its one week engagement at the Rialto Theatre, "The Cinema Murder" is scheduled to continue its Broadway run at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre. After this run, it will begin a tour of the entire B. S. Moss circuit of theatres. This blanket booking by B. S. Moss indicates that shrewd showman's opinion of this production, not only as a box office attraction but also as a patron-satisfier.

"The Cinema Murder" was picturized from the story of the same name by E. Phillips Oppenheim, which ran serially recently in Hearst's Magazine and then came out in book form. The star is Marion Davies, who is well known not only for histrionic ability but also for her great beauty, which won her fame in one season in Ziegfeld's Follies. The supporting cast consists of long familiar players, among them Anders Randolf, Nigel Barrie, W. Scott Moore, Reginald Barlow, Peggy Parr and Eulalie Jensen. The director was George D. Baker, and it was made by Cosmopolitan Productions for release as a Paramount-Artcraft Picture by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

George Walsh Is Star in "A Manhattan Knight"

A MANHATTAN KNIGHT," adapted for the screen from the successful novel, "Find the Woman," by Gelett Burgess, is being photographed at the College Point studio of Fox Film Corporation under the direction of George A. Beranger. George Walsh, athletic Fox star, is featured in the production, in which are such well known players as Virginia Hammond, Pauline Garon and Louis R. Wolheim. The two last mentioned artists are doubling, working on the Fox production in the afternoon and on the Broadway stage at night. Miss Garon is playing in "Buddies" and Wolheim is in "The Jest."

"A Manhattan Knight" is a mystery story. The upper strata of society and the underworld are curiously mixed in this fast moving drama. Beautiful women, wild night life, poverty and wealth all have place in this interesting exposition of New York life. Dorothy Langly made her screen debut less than three months ago.

There are some beautiful sets in "A Manhattan Knight" and Thomas O'Neil, technical expert of the Fox studio, has had a force of carpenters busy for some time constructing one of the cafe scenes which will show night life in the metropolis. Virginia Hammond, who plays opposite George Walsh, makes an excellent foil for the athletic star. She was one of the stars of the World Film Corporation.

Boston Projectionists Elect Officers; Simplex Man Guest At Election

TUESDAY night, January 6, proved a gala one for the members of Boston Motion Picture Operators Union No. 182, for besides casting their ballots at their annual election a banquet of no mean proportions was also slated. So followed the showing of the "good-night" slide in the numerous houses throughout the Boston jurisdiction the pathways led to Pilgrim Hall, 694 Washington street, where outside of the regular assembly hall a real banquet scene was staged.

One of the most harmonious elections in the life of this famous local had passed into history after it had been announced that Thad Barrows, a charter member, who became famous for his activities in driving the many fake operators' schools out of Boston with the help of the district attorney's office, had been elected the new president. Mr. Barrows for the first five years of the union's existence was also its treasurer. Arthur Gray was elected vice-president, while Joseph Rosen, a pioneer in the projection end, is the new treasurer, while Albert Molten, who has held the financial secretary's office for the past four years, was re-elected.

Francke in Attendance.

The most talked-of event of the election results which is certain to meet wth favor of both those in the industry as well as in labor circles was the election as business agent of James F. Burke, who is also a charter member, as well as the first president during the local's first five years of union's activities.

An interested visitor at Tuesday night's gathering was William C. Francke, sales and publicity director of the Simplex Company, who for six years was the business and legislatve representative of the Boston Local and who served with the majority of the newly elected officers in the earliest years of the union's existence.

Tuesday night's event, which was the excuse for the making of many speeches, all of them striking a harmonious keynote, was declared a most successful one by each of the 145 members present.

Siegfried Rose Dies Suddenly.

Seigfried Rose, brother of Morris Rose, president of the Pioneer Film Corporation, died suddenly at his office in the Longacre Building, Times Square, New York, on January 9.

Mr. Rose was interested with his brother, Morris, in the insurance business transacted under the name of Morris Rose, Inc. He also had had extensive interests both in the theatrical and film business.

Levy Will Ask Clothiers To Sell Advertising Only To Exhibitors

AN exhibitor protective measure, sweeping, drastic and radical beyond all precedent, aimed to destroy the producer-distributor practice of injecting "snipe" advertising into entertainment film, and which will ally with theatre owners approximately 11,000 retail clothing dealers in their fight to stamp out the alleged trespass of screen rights, will be sought by Colonel Fred Levy, owner of the First National Exhibitors Circuit franchise for Kentucky and Tennessee, in a resolution which he will present as president of the National Association of Retail Clothiers at the forthcoming convention of that body.

This action by the executive head of the largest organization of retailers in the United States undoubtedly will have a far-reaching effect, both in its bearing on the future of the so-called "snipe" advertising and in its moral effect upon the advertising profession as a whole. The National Association of Retail Clothiers is viewed by other associations of retailers in different lines, and by national advertisers and the legitimate paid-publicity fraternity, as an association of unusual strength and influence, and which, in its joint recommendations, commands serious considerations.

Will Establish a Precedent.

Colonel Levy will present a resolution calling upon the 11,000 retail dealers to ask the clothing manufacturers not to go to the film producers and distributors to place clothing advertisements on the screen, but to go direct to the exhibitors and make mutually satisfactory arrangements with them for the showing of slides and films that advertise the various brands of wearing apparel.

This action, in the opinion of Colonel Levy, who is the head of Levy Brothers, of Louisville, a large retail clothing firm, will strike directly to the heart of the situation and will have a reaction on national advertisers in other lines, which will go a long way toward clarifying the problem for exhibitors and which will awaken the advertisers to the methods by which producers and distributors have obtained circulation for semi-advertising films in the past.

"The clothing manufacturers," declares Colonel Levy, "are among the largest of the big business interests being solicited for advertising revenue by producers and distributors. Business men would not enter into such an arrangement if they understood the circumstances. It is only because the motion picture industry is comparatively new and its methods are not familiar to everyone that such a practice can be carried to any extent.

Better Than Personal Letters.

"The members of my organization are in relatively the same position in their industry as the exhibitors are in the film business. They are the points of contact with the public. They can appreciate the unfair trespass on personal rights and I am certain that they will be more than willing to go to the aid of exhibitors. Personal letters to the clothing manufacturers might effectively awaken them to the part they are playing in a deliberate conspiracy to defraud, but when each of them receives a copy of the resolution which echoes the convictions and wishes of their thousands of retail dealers, they will most certainly respond in a way which will please the exhibitor."

Owen Moore Goes West.

Owen Moore has left New York City for the West Coast studios of Selznick at Hollywod, where he will begin work in his new production, "Love Among the Chickens," a Pelham Grenville Wodehouse story. His director, Wesley Ruggles, accompanied him.

This is the second Wodehouse production for Owen Moore, his first production under Selznick being the Wodehouse story, "Piccadilly Jim."

Four Theatrical Families Are Represented in Film

FOUR of the best known families in American theatrical history are represented in the screen version of Augustus Thomas' powerful play of American life, "The Copperhead," which is released January 25 as a Paramount Artcraft Super-Special.

Lionel Barrymore in the stellar role is a son of the late Georgia (Drew) and Maurice Barrymore, a grandson of John Drew and a brother of Ethel and John Barrymore. Doris Rankin, who in real life is Mrs. Lionel Barrymore, has the part she created on the stage, Ma Shanks. She is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. McKee Rankin, who toured the country many years and conducted many important productions in their theatre, called Jacob's Third Avenue. In the part of Joey Shanks is Arthur Rankin, 23 years old, who is a son of Phyllis Rankin, a sister of Doris Rankin. He is a stepson of a Davenport descended from the renowed actress, Fanny Davenport.

Charles Maigne, who has directed Irene Castle in some of her biggest successes, was both the director and adapter of "The Copperhead."

William P. Carleton, a son of William T. Carleton, the well known grand opera and comic opera singer, has the role of Tom Hardy, Frank Joyner, Leslie Stowe, Richard Carlyle and Carolyn Lee are also in the cast.

Goldwyn Buys Famous French Drama, "Madame X," for Special Production

MADAME X," the famous French drama by Alexandre Bisson, has been purchased by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and will be given an elaborate production. In France, "Madame X" was played by the greatest French actresses of the day, both Mmes. Rejane and Sarah Bernhardt having appeared in the title role at different times. Mme. Bernhardt kept the play in her repertory when she toured America a few years ago. She not only gave the play in its entirety here, but also played the famous courtroom act in her numerous special vaudeville engagements.

The American adaptation of the play was made by John N. Raphael and edited by William Henry Wright. Its premiere in America took place at the New Amsterdam Theatre in New York, under the auspices of Henry W. Savage. Dorothy Donnelly played the part made famous in Paris by Sarah Bernhardt. The young attorney, who unknowingly pleads the cause of his degraded mother, was interpreted by William Elliott.

Action to Replace Dialogue.

"Madame X" was so successful that it played four years, and is still one of the stand-bys of all stock companies. Miss Donnelly played the title role in New York and in Chicago during the first two years of its run, while Dorothy Dunlap headed a second company on the road. Two companies were put out during the third year and one in the fourth.

The play has met with such popular success on the stage that the Goldwyn officials believe its photoplay appeal will be tremendous. In the picture version, much of the past history of the famous "Madame X," which in the play is told in dialogue, can be revealed through graphic action.

As yet, no director has been chosen for the production, nor has the cast been selected.

Republic to Distribute Waldorf Photoplays

A DEAL has been consummated between the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director, and Waldorf Photoplays, Ltd., whereby Republic is to release for a period of not less than two years all productions of the Waldorf Company. The agreements stipulate that there shall not be less than four productions each year.

Waldorf is planning big productions, and the distributing rights attained by Republic include the United States and Canada. The pictures will be directed by David G. Fischer.

The first picture will be "Dad's Girl," a screen adaptation of the old play in which Jackie Saunders, who recently made a big hit in "The Miracle of Love," will be starred. The second picture to be delivered has not been determined, but it will probably be the Saturday Evening Post story entitled "The Black Sheep." "The Rider of the King Log" is scheduled for the third release. As a novel it had a wide circulation. The fourth picture will be "Kismet," in which Otis Skinner appeared on the speaking stage and which won a big success in New York. Mr. Skinner will be seen in the screen version.

In connection with "Kismet," it will be recalled that some time ago publicity was given in the trade press to a statement that a Mr. Mercanton had secured the rights to "Kismet." Republic has announced a desire to correct this impression, as "Kismet" is to be included in the Waldorf series.

Real Football Game in Metro Play.

The Santa Monica and Venice, Cal., high school football teams staged an interscholastic gridiron contest for "Eliza Comes to Stay," Viola Dana's new Metro-Screen Classic picture. The game, which was played on the Santa Monica field, was arranged by W. A. Howell, who is directing the production.

Hugo Ballin.
Will direct Madge Kennedy in her Goldwyns made in the East.

Madge Kennedy's Next To Be Made in East Under Ballin's Direction

HUGO BALLIN will direct Madge Kennedy in the next production for this famous Goldwyn commedienne, and it is likely the picture will be done in the East, following the completion of "Partners of the Night" for Eminent Authors. Miss Kennedy has recently completed two productions, the first of which, "The Blooming Angel," directed by Victor Schertzinger, is scheduled for early release.

What the new story will be has not been announced, although it is known that the choice has narrowed down to three. As soon as a decision is made Robert B. McIntyre, in charge of Goldwyn productions in the East, will get his organization under way at the Oliver studios in East Forty-eighth street, which have been secured under lease from Jan. 1. Mr. Ballin is already in New York for the production.

Hugo Ballin has achieved a national reputation as art director for Goldwyn at Culver City. Three years ago he directed Madge Kennedy in "Baby Mine," which was one of the first motion pictures in which she appeared. He has arrived in the East to resume his work as director. Paul Bern will be assistant director and the cameraman will be Lucian Andriot.

Mr. Ballin's Belief.

From his training as painter, Mr. Ballin has approached the art of the screen from a different angle than that of most directors who have acquired their early training on the spoken stage. Mr. Ballin believes the screen is most nearly related to the pictorial arts of drawing and painting. In other words, motion pictures are a series of pictures. The acting values are entirely different from those on the stage. To succeed as a director a man must know lines and angles and above all must know the eye of the camera.

"What the director must give to the screen is not simply acting values as we used to know them on the stage," said Mr. Ballin. "He must get the new acting values that the eye of the camera and the magnifying power of the screen have given to the art of the motion picture. As a result, the best directors give us an interpretation of the story that is distinct and peculiar to the motion picture. In this new medium we tell stories with new backgrounds and special emphasis of scene that can only be hinted at on the stage or on the pages of a book."

"Slaves of Pride" Praised By New York Reviewers

THE reviewers on the New York daily newspapers were quite agreed on the general excellence of "Slaves of Pride," Alice Joyce's new Vitagraph production which is having a pre-release showing at the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre this week.

"Slaves of Pride," which is an adaptation by William B. Courtney from a well-known novel, is out of the ordinary in its theme. Pride and covetousness are the dominating passions in the story, with love, quite naturally, an important factor. Jealousy is absent and the eternal triangle plays only a small part. While the story offers Miss Joyce a role that is perfectly suited to her, two men of the supporting cast, Percy Marmont and G. V. Seyffertitz, have almost equally powerful characters to portray. Other important roles are played by Templer Saxe and Louise Beaudet. George Terwilliger directed the picture.

Mack Writes Story for Selznick.

Willard Mack, well-known playwright and actor, has written what is described as an excellent story, which has not been published, and which Myron Selznick has purchased for screen production, according to a recent announcement.

The new story is titled "Prince O' Pines," and is said to be full of unusual situations.

Every Big Chicago Circuit Joins National Theatres, Says Selznick

UPON the return of Lewis J. Selznick from Chicago and points in the Middle West, it was learned that for the first time in Chicago film history all the big competing companies operating circuits of theatres have pledged their united support to one enterprise. This organization is National Picture Theatres, Inc., and the man round whom the circuits have rallied is Lewis J. Selznick, head of the organization.

Several months ago Nathan Ascher not only caused all his theatres to become members of National Picture Theatres, Inc., but also became National's first exhibitor vice president and director. He later arranged a meeting of the heads of every big Chicago circuit. As a result of this meeting, the theatres of Lubliner & Trinz, Balaban & Katz; Jones, Linick & Schafer; Andrew Karzas and Ascher Brothers have already signed membership contracts in National.

Service and Profits.

"In Select I have built an exchange organization which gives the exhibitors splendid service and which makes profits," said Mr. Selznick. "My studios have always made pictures which make money for exhibitors. All these resources are at the service of exhibitors all over the world who wish to join National and share in the profits. That exhibitors appreciate real co-operation when it is offered, is proven by the fact that every day National's membership increased by leaps and bounds.

"I have just received a wire from California that National's first picture, 'Just a Wife,' is a knockout. The second picture, 'Blind Youth,' is almost completed and should be equally great. If any picture is not excellent I will not release it through National.

"In February the twenty-six exhibitors—one from each exchange zone—will meet and decide on future pictures. I will give them the kind of pictures they want—as many or as few as they wish. I cannot make one dollar until they have secured the kind of pictures at the prices they want and until the members have made a dividend on the money they put up with National.

Bears Share of Cost.

"Each National member pays a proportionate share of the total cost of each picture. The amount each member thus pays is a little less than the exhibitor now pays as rental for pictures of similar quality. The total amounts thus paid by 3,000 members will not only equal the cost of each picture plus all expenses, but will leave a splendid profit besides from which to pay dividends. Foreign sales and rentals to non-members will give further large profits. I expect National to book two or three times the necessary 3,000 theatres, which means that rentals which members now pay can be greatly reduced."

"Mothers of Men" Will Have Early Release Date

"MOTHERS OF MEN," a big special production made by Films Special, Inc., and directed by Edward Jose, is announced for early release by the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director and Briton N. Busch is president. This is, perhaps, the biggest production announced by Republic since it released "When Bear-Cat Went Dry."

The stars are Claire Whitney, Lumsden Hare and Martha Mansfield and the screen version was adapted from the story written by William Henry Warner and DeWitte Kaplan. "Mothers of Men" is said to be a most beautiful story. Romance and intrigue form the base of the plot. The scene is laid in Europe and a specially strong cast has been engaged to support the stars.

Claire Whitney, who plays the leading role, began her stage career at the old Biograph Company where she appeared in twenty-one different parts in as many weeks. She has also played in a number of Fox, Metro and Select successes. Lumsden Hare, who supports Miss Whitney, is also a well known leading man of the stage and screen. Martha Mansfield is a former "Follies" girl, whose beauty and ability is attracting attention. Gaston Glass is a French aviator who covered himself with honors in the recent war. Frankie Bailey will play the part of a cabaret dancer.

Miss Rambeau Finishes Film.

Marjorie Rambeau completed work on her first Albert Capellani production, "The Fortune Teller," on January 14. Only a few exteriors remain to be filmed before the negative is turned over to Pathe for release. Mr. Capellani and his staff will go south to get the necessary atmosphere with some small traveling tent show. Albert Capellani includes in his achievements, "Les Miserables," "Eye for Eye," "The Red Lantern," "Out of the Fog," "The Common Law," "Oh Boy" and "The Virtuous Model."

Reopens New Orleans Offices.

It was announced this week that the New Orleans office of the Republic Distributing Corporation will be reopened February 1, with J. F. Flaherty in charge. The office in Omaha will also be reopened about the same time, it is made known, with J. H. Hill in charge.

Activity Is Keynote at The Selznick Studios

PROGRESS on productions has gained such headway at the various studios of the Selznick Enterprises that Sam E. Morris, general manager, is able to announce that there will be no delays in the release dates and that all prints will be delivered on schedule time.

With seven pictures already completed, two more, which will be finished within the week, and seven others, in course of making, the Selznick production situation is better than it has ever been before, and has started the new year with a momentum which augurs well.

The advance in the schedule of production is due primarily to the smooth running organization which Myron Selznick has inaugurated at the eastern studios and strict adherence to schedules which Harry Rapf has gotten under way on the West coast. Star series productions are included in the attractions already completed and under way.

Among those completed are Olive Thomas, "Footlights and Shadows"; Eugene O'Brien in "His Wife's Money," Elaine Hammerstein in "Greater Than Fame," Owen Moore in "Sooner or Later," the first of the West coast productions for National Pictures, Inc., "Just A Wife," and the first Herbert Kaufman Weekly, "Little Red Riding Hood." Olive Thomas' and Owen Moore's new pictures are the two which will be completed this week.

In the course of preparation are "The Woman God Sent," in which Zena Keefe will be featured; "A Fool and His Money, starring Eugene O'Brien; "Blind Youth," the second National Theatres, Inc., picture; an Owen Moore production, and "The Land of Opportunity," the first of the Americanization specials being made by Ralph Ince.

Buys Rights to Grossman Picture.

Nancibelle W. Grant, president, British American Pictures Finance Corporation, has purchased the United States and Canadian rights to Harry Grossman's six-reel mystery drama, "Wits Versus Wits," starring Margaret Marsh.

"Wits versus Wits" will be distributed through the Hallmark Pictures Corporation, and is scheduled for release in February.

L. L. Hiller Tells Origin of Play Based on "The Servant in the Home"

THE production of "Who's Your Servant," the photoplay which is described as a greater picture than "The Cheat," is the first step in a determined movement for the creation of motion pictures of a different type, according to L. L. Hiller, who controls the world's rights. Mr. Hiller in making the statement revealed the fact that the author of the play is Julian Johnson, the well known editor and motion picture critic. The release date will be announced later.

Realizing the sameness of the majority of picture plays, Mr. Johnson determined after conferring with several leading producers to write something unique. He spent the better part of two years in judging the situation and in determining the most unusual theme on which to base his story.

Learned Servant's Importance.

The eternal triangle, or the husband or wife, seemed to be the center of practically every motion picture drama, according to Mr. Johnson's careful investigation, and he finally decided that a hitherto neglected element of the household, and still a most important factor, the servant, was the proper character on which to center the first effort in variation.

In modern life the servant problem has come to be one of the most important, Mr. Johnson found. Aside from the economic independence, which has made it impossible to hold good help without providing them with everything the members of the household enjoy, the news of the day is filled with crimes committed by servants and with stories of great inheritances left to them. They figure in every big will contest and, in a word, they are the custodians of the family skeleton.

Many Accessories.

All is brought out in the picture, and that unusual angle combined with a well-woven story, has resulted in compliments from noted producers. Those who saw the first screening declared that the picture would be one of the sensations of the industry. The picture will be put out with every accessory of a super-special. A nation-wide trade paper advertised campaign has been inaugurated and will be strongly carried on until after the Broadway premiere of the production.

Thousands of merchants will be furnished with paper bags in which to send out groceries and meats, and the query, "Who's Your Servant," will be printed on the bags and wrapping paper. A press book of more than twenty pages has been prepared in three colors. Trailers, slides, heralds and many other aids to effective exploitation of the picture have also been prepared.

"Gray Brother" Relates an Underworld Romance

A GREAT deal of magic abides in "The Gray Brother" which Sidney Olcott directed from Thomas Mott Osborne's story for Edward A. MacManus. The plot is based on a romance woven in and out of the underworld with the prison at the end of the road, the outlaws of society tread.

Out of the depths of the submerged tenth spring all of the characters except one, a boy, who born in a refined home shows early precocity for copying signatures which ends in his becoming a forger and a criminal. Instead of the prison making him worse his experience among men who knew no better urges him to help them to better themselves and in this uplift work he is aided by his father and mother particularly in the regeneration of a burglar.

The story of the lives of those born to a criminal career is vividly portrayed in a big production which may, when released, prove to be one of the most sensational photodramas ever screened. The date of release has not been announced by Mr. MacManus but it will probably be made any day within the next week.

Immediately "The Gray Brother" is released Mr. MacManus will begin work on a new production that will present a new realism for the entertainment of picture theatre goers.

Denison Clift Becomes Director for Fox Film

"THE LAST STRAW," a gripping tale of the early West with Buck Jones as the star, is announced as completed at the William Fox studios in Hollywood. Denison Clift is heralded as the director of this, Buck Jones' first picture under the Fox banner, scheduled for February release.

The story of "The Last Straw" is taken from the original by Harold Titus, who is the author also of "Shod with Fire" in which William Russell is now at work as a Fox star on the West Coast.

Mr. Clift has completed the filming of "The Last Straw" and the picture now is in course of cutting and titling. To this production, his first official directorial effort, Clift is said to have given many unique personal touches and a wealth of genuine novelties. Some entirely new angles on the photographic end of the film are promised, showing that the assignment of Mr. Clift to this important post was justified.

Supporting the new star in the Titus story are Vivian Rich, Jane Tallent, Colin Kenny, Charles LeMoyne, Bob Chandler, William Gillis, H. W. Padgett, Hank Bell, Zeib Morris and Lon Poff. Besides this cast of principals, Director Clift used several hundred extras, including many women, trick riders and stunt men for picturesque "bits" and several daring young women riders who lend added effects to the exterior "shots" in the film.

Seven Pictures in Work at Lasky Studio Include Four Big Specials

THE busy season has really set in for the Lasky studio at Hollywood, and with seven companies at work the big stages are crowded with sets, players, cameramen, stage carpenters and property men.

The productions now in work are:

"The Fighting Chance," a Paramount Artcraft Special directed by Charles Maigne, with Conrad Nagle and Anna Q. Nilsson in the leading roles. This is an adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' society novel of New York and environs.

"The Prince Chap," Edward Peple's play of English life, a romantic comedy-drama which is being produced as a special by William DeMille with Thomas Meighan in the title role and Lila Lee, Kathlyn Williams and others in the chief support.

"The Round-Up," starring Roscoe Arbuckle, a George Melford production, with scenario by Tom Forman, who also has an important role in the picture. Mabel Juliene Scott is leading woman.

"The Dancin' Fool," directed by Sam Wood, starring Wallace Reid, with Bebe Daniels as leading woman.

"Mrs. Temple's Telegram," starring Bryant Washburn, directed by James Cruze, with Wanda Hawley as leading woman. Carmen Phillips and Walter Hiers are prominent in the cast.

"Thou Art the Man," directed by Thomas Heffron, starring Robert Warwick. It is from the book, "Myles Calthorpe, I.D.B., by F. E. Mills Young, a story of South Africa and the illicit diamond trade. Lois Wilson is leading woman.

"A Lady in Love," starring Ethel Clayton, directed by Walter Edwards. Harrison Ford is leading man. This is a romantic story with much complication of a marital character.

"Held by the Enemy" will be started with Donald Crisp as director.

All of the foregoing productions are for Paramount-Artcraft release.

Warner Has Strong Role in "Haunting Shadows"

H. B. WARNER, the "tragic-lipped Chesterfield of the screen," as one reviewer called him, has a most effective role in "Haunting Shadows," his latest Robertson-Cole production. The picture is an adaptation of "The House of a Thousand Candles," Meredith Nicholson's mystery story, which provided material for one of the most successful plays on the speaking stage.

The story revolves around the strange provisions of the will of an eccentric millionaire who stipulated that his grandson, John Glenarn, should live for a year uninterruptedly in the rambling old castle which the old man had built in the Indiana forest.

Things began to happen the very first day young Glenarn takes up his abode. A bullet crashes through the window. Uncanny noises are heard in the night. Weird shadows are seen flitting through the corridors. Suspicious characters lurk around the place. Convinced that there is a hidden treasure which these sinister forces are after, Glenarn arms himself and battles with seen and unseen foes. Interwoven with this maze of plot and counterplot is a love romance.

"The Cyclone" Is a Good Name for This Tom Mix Picture: These Stills Prove It.

. Were we publicity agents we'd say, "There's a thrill in every foot"; but anyhow this Fox feature looks good.

"Desert Gold" Gets Big Welcome at Strand; List of First Run Bookings

JACK EATON, managing director of the New York Strand, and Edward L. Hyman, head of the Brooklyn Mark-Strand, have fired the big guns that showmen hold in reserve to use on big pictures with the presentation of Zane Grey's "Desert Gold" in the two big Mark theatres. Opening in New York, this Benjamin B. Hampton production, released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, drew capacity business and won the instant approval of audiences and the metropolitan newspaper critics. In Brooklyn where the picture plays the following week Mr. Hyman has made an extensive billboard and exploitation campaign.

Posts 150 Twenty-fours.

More than 150 twenty-four sheets have been posted within that borough of New York City and everything has been done to enable the picture to do the record breaking business at this big Eastern point that Mr. Hyman saw it do at the America Theatre, Denver, the big Talbot house, when Mr. Hyman was managing the William Fox theatre interests in Colorado recently.

Among the larger recent bookings of the production by first run theatres are the Schade Theatre, Sandusky, O; the Knickerbocker, Philadelphia; the Palace, Muscatine, Ia.; the Strand, Haverhill, Mass.; the Weir, Aberdeen, Wash.; the Park, Taunton, Mass.; the Palace, New Orleans; the Colonial, Philadelphia; the Strand, Vallejo, Cal.; the Stockton, Stockton, Cal.; the Strand, Fort Dodge, Ia.; the Lyric, Austin, Minn.; the Olympia, New Bedford, Mass.; the Lumberg, Niagara Falls, N. Louis Weadock Signs Up With Fairbanks' Forces

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS' latest and greatest success "When the Clouds Roll By," which is being held over for a second week at the Rialto, New York, serves to introduce another newspaper and magazine write of prominence into the charmed circle of the celluloid. Although their names are modestly withheld from the program, the truth has "leaked out" that Louis Weadock and Thomas Geraghty were the actual authors, and that Mr. Weadock has been signed up by the Fairbanks scenario forces.

"Tom" Geraghty, with whom Mr. Weadock will be associated, is also a renowned and "reformed" newspaper man already well established as a literary garment maker to the films, having long ago forsaken type for types. He is responsible for most of the Fairbanks' productions of the last two years.

Louis Weadock, before he received attention as a short story writer, enjoyed the reputation of being one of the most brilliant newspaper reporters in the country. His police court stories were considered classics of every day journalism, and the late James Gordon Bennett singled out one of them to be used as a model of style by the reportorial staff of the New York Herald.

When the war started Mr. Weadock went to France and later to Russia in the interests of a syndicate of American newspapers, and the announcement of his connection with the Fairbanks Picture Corporation is the first personal news that many of his old associates have had of him in a long time.

Three New Subjects on Tyrad January Schedule

TYRAD PICTURES, INC., have assembled a program for release during this month which they announce to be the most comprehensive they have ever distributed. Three new features will make their appearance, commencing with the Bernhardt presentation of "It Happened in Paris," followed by the initial Johnny Dooley comedy, "Some Mind Reader" and "Small Tropical Fish," the first of Prof. W. L. Brind's "Wonders of Nature" Series, the latter two subjects having been released on January 15th.

"It Happened in Paris" was written by Madame Sarah Bernhardt especially for her protege, Madame Yorska, who is costarred with W. Lawson Butt. It is said to be a powerful drama that develops unusually tragic moments and whose story deals with society and the underworld of Paris.

Johnny Dooley, Ziegfeld star, makes his initial screen appearance in "Some Mind Reader," announced as a riot of fun. Gilda Gray, Sophie Tucker, and Martha Mansfield appear with Dooley.

"Small Tropical Fish," is a single reel nature study. It entertainingly illustrates a trip up "The River of Doubt" in search of small tropical fish. This is the inaugural issue of the "Wonders of Nature" Series, which had a pre-release showing at the Strand and Rialto Theatres, New York City.

Film En Route to Russia.

Eighty thousand feet of film, titled in both Russian and English, was sent last week by the Community Motion Picture Bureau to Vladivostok. The film will be taken to the Siberian port by a special courier, who will embark from San Francisco for Korea.

Motion picture service was opened during the war in Siberia by the United State government through the Community Motion Picture Bureau. During the war forty-five camps in Siberia were given this service, and now pictures are being shown peasants as well as soldiers. The films are mostly industrial and travel pictures.

New Selznick Electric Sign.

Pedestrians and others in the vicinity of Columbus Circle, New York, that thickly populated district at Forty-ninth street which marks the turn in Broadway and the beginning of Central Park, have had additional light spread on their pathway.

The newest addition to the array of electric signs which shine forth their nightly message to thousands is another of the many which Lewis J. Selznick has placed on Broadway, which reads: "Selznick Pictures Create Happy Hours."

Publishing Motion Picture Journal of New York and Northern New Jersey.

Hamlin Starts Two-State Motion Picture Journal

REGIONAL trade publications have been established in many of the distributing centers throughout the country since Tom Hamlin founded "Amusements" at Minneapolis in 1914. And it is now reported that several prominent exhibitors and leading exchangemen of New York State and northern New Jersey have organized the Film Bulletin Corporation to publish Motion Picture Journal in the country's most populous section.

Tom Hamlin, for the past eighteen months, the reviewer on Motion Picture News, will be editor and publisher. After Mr. Hamlin published "Amusements" for nearly four years he is said to have written more than two hundred thousand words on marketing and distributing film and as a result of his campaign he organized Associated Theatre Inc. with a stock membership of 678 theatres.

Previous to founding "Amusements," Mr. Hamlin is reported to have successfully promoted two motion picture expositions, and for two years conducted Thomas J. Hamlin, Inc., a booking exchange at Minneapolis. As president for one year of Amusement Organization of the Mid-Northwest he had charge of all grievances between exhibitors and exchangemen in six states. With twelve years' experience in the show business in all its branches and ten years in newspaper, trade-journal, and publicity business, Mr. Hamlin states that he is prepared to pilot the new Motion Picture Journal to success.

Proctor Joins Selznick Forces.

George Proctor, widely experienced scenario writer, has been engaged as an original writer in the scenario department of the Selznick Fort Lee studio, it was announced this week by Myron Selznick.

Mr. Proctor has written extensively for the screen and was at one time the editor of the Gaumont Weekly. He also conducted a picture column in the Morning Telegraph and has been a staff writer for Lasky, Triangle and Fox.

Selznick Adapts "Who Am I?" to Screen.

Selznick Enterprises believes that the fact that "Who Am I?," a story originally published in the All-Story Magazine, is to be adapted to the screen should be of interest to the reading public especially. "Who Am I?" is a story purchased by Myron Selznick and which was written by Max Brand, well-known writer of fiction.

The screen version of the story is to be made by the National Picture Theatres, Inc., and is the third of that company's production for release through Select.

Conway Tearle Will Be Starred in Forthcoming Equity Special Picture

HARRY GARSON, producer of the Equity pictures in which Clara Kimball Young stars, and under whose direction four special productions a year are to be made, has decided to star Conway Tearle in the forthcoming special production, which is being made from the noted fiction document, "Michael and His Lost Angel," but which title will be changed for screen service to a shorter and more appropriate one with commercial value.

Conway Tearle has long been an attractive personality before film patrons, and because of his association with a number of feminine stars of the screen, has developed a large personal following. Mr. Tearle, in addition to playing the principal male role in a great many legitimate productions in which he has been featured or co-featured, has been seen opposite Clara Kimball Young in "The Common Law" several years ago, and later with Mary Pickford in "Stella Maris," then later with Miss Young again in "The Foolish Virgin."

Will Have Strong Cast.

Louis Mayer featured Mr. Tearle opposite Anita Stewart in "Mind the Paint Girl," while Norma Talmadge has been seen opposite Mr. Tearle in "The Way of a Woman" and "She Loves and Lies." In "The Virtuous Vamp," Constance Talmadge's first picture through First National, Mr. Tearle had the important male part, and later he appeared in "The World for Sale," "The Judgment House," and opposite Marion Davies in "April Folly." All this work has been done and dovetailed with Mr. Tearle's work on the dramatic stage.

Garson Will Supervise.

In "Michael and His Lost Angel," Mr. Tearle will have a story directly fitting his appearance and histrionic ability and will be supported by a cast of prominent players. Harry Garson will personally supervise the production, which will be on the usual elaborate Garson scale.

"Michael and His Lost Angel" is from the story by Henry Arthur Jones, and it will be a six-part Equity Special, and distributed through the usual Equity franchise channels.

Famous Players Prepares Stockholders' Statements

THE annual meeting of the stockholders of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was held at noon, January 13, in the offices of the company, 485 Fifth avenue, New York City. These directors were re-elected for terms of four years each: Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, William H. English, Maurice Wertheim and Felix Kahn.

Arthur S. Friend, treasurer of the corporation, announced that a financial statement of the company will be mailed to all stockholders as soon as it is completed by Price, Waterhouse & Co., certified accountants.

Shows Work of Branches.

Emil E. Shauer, general manager of the corporation's foreign department, exhibited a motion picture depicting the activities of the various foreign offices of the corporation. The picture showed the offices in London, Paris, Copenhagen, Stockholm, Buenos Aires, Santiago, Chile, Rio de Janeiro, Havana, Sydney, Melbourne and Wellington, New Zealand. The picture also showed how theatres in these foreign countries exploit Paramount-Artcraft pictures, produced by the corporation.

On the day before the annual stockholders' meeting, the directors voted a dividend at the rate of 8 per cent on the preferred stock or 2 per cent for the period from November 28, 1919, to February 1, 1920. This dividend is payable on February 1 to preferred stockholders of record at the close of business on January 21.

"Advertising on the Screen" Becomes Nation-wide Concern of Picture Men

THE following information is printed as it comes to the Moving Picture World from the Committee on Protection of the Screen, of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, with office in the Times Building, New York. The matter is printed for the information of those most interested:

"Remarkably rapid progress is being made by the Screen Protection Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The movement for the protection of the screen against improper advertising has spread from coast to coast. The slogan, 'The Screens of the Country Belong to the Exhibitors,' has found a ready echo among individual exhibitors as well as among the different organized groups of exhibitors.

Many Responses.

"In the course of the last week the responses from bona-fide exhibitors' organizations have been especially gratifying. Thus the Exhibitors Circuit of Texas, with headquarters at Dallas, has formally announced its acceptance of the activities and recommendations of the screen protection committee.

"The board of directors of the Texas Exhibitors Circuit, consisting of eight theatre owners, met at Dallas announcing their decision. This circuit also comprises a large membership of exhibitors in the states of Arkansas and Oklahoma.

Texas Showmen Join In.

"Immediately following this endorsement by the Texas Exhibitors Circuit, news was received at the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, to the effect that the Northwest Exhibitors Protective League had held a meeting on January 7 at Minneapolis. At this meeting it was announced that the remnants of the old organization in the northwestern territory had disbanded and gone over in a body to the Protective League.

"The session at Minneapolis was attended by exhibitors of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, Wisconsin, Iowa and Michigan. A resolution was passed providing for complete supervision of all screen advertising by the proper officials of the organization.

"Contracts were signed by practically the entire membership and the money derived from all screen advertising is to go in the state treasury. The meeting was presided over by the president, Charles W. Gates, of Aberdeen, S. D.

"The Screen Protective Committee received the following telegram from H. L. Mitchel, executive secretary of the Northwest Exhibitors Protective League: 'Enthusiastic meeting. Membership doubled since last meeting. Other local organization has disbanded and joined our league. Mailing you over half hundred contracts. More to follow.'

Northwestern Exhibitors Participate.

"On top of enthusiastic endorsement by the Protective League came the equally enthusiastic support of the Exhibitors Circuit of the Northwest, consisting of motion picture theatre owners of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. This organization sent several imposing envelopes to the headquarters of the screen protection committee containing the entire membership, which covers a territory of two hundred towns and cities.

"In addition to this the Screen Protection Committee is daily receiving unsolicited wires and letters of inquiry from the New England States and from New Jersey. All these wires and letters heartily commend the stand of the Screen Protection Committee and ask for an opportunity to co-operate.

"The members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the State of New York were pleased to receive their first check on account of the arrangement for screen advertising. This check was in payment for the display of a short reel by the members of the organization.

"All the exhibitors who had run this short reel say that their patrons were well pleased. It gave a lot of excellent entertainment which was especially interesting to their women patrons.

"The following exhibitors have been added to the Screen Supervising Committee: Charles W. Gates, H. L. Mitchel, E. T. Peter, James Q. Clemmer, H. B. Wright, Glen Harper, H B. Varner and George W. Warner.

"Mingled frequently with inquiries and words of approval the Screen Protection Committee received many communications asking for the date of the coming national gathering. It is the intention of the Screen Protection Committee and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to make a thorough canvas of the leading exhibitors in every state as to what time and place would be most suitable to them.

"It is expected that this national gathering will result in a permanent national organization. The keynote will be full recognition of the rights of each state to determine its own affairs and policies."

Triangle's "Tiger Girl" Available February 15

"TIGER GIRL," the Triangle production supervised by D. W. Griffith and adapted from "The Lily and the Rose," will be available to exhibitors on February 15 at all United exchanges.

It is the intention of United to heavily exploit this picture for the benefit of exhibitors. A strong press book has been prepared by exploitation experts and contains innumerable hints and sound advice for wise exhibitors who would make this production a profitable one to them. An attractive set of lobby displays and posters will also be furnished.

"Tiger Girl" features Lillian Gish with Roszika Dolly and Wilfred Lucas, and the combination of D. W. Griffith and Lillian Gish has advertising value which can be easily exploited by wide awake theatre managers. Both Mr. Griffith and Miss Gish have recognized box office value and by making this Triangle production available United considers that it has one of the best releases in the distributing company for February.

The story has that heart pathos which is especially noted in all Griffith productions. The tears and smiles and grandeur of this production are rare, and it promises to make money for exhibitors. It is the story of a woman who drank from the bitterest cup. It is a story of life and thrills and sorrow. It is a story which probably shows Miss Gish at her best.

"Jenny" Is Next Olive Thomas Film.

"Jenny" has been chosen as the title of the next picture on which Olive Thomas will start work as soon as she has finished "Glorious Youth," which is now being completed at the Selznick Fort Lee studios. "Jenny" was to have been put out as an earlier release, but was postponed in order to give Miss Thomas time to complete her present production, a Selznick announcement states.

The story was purchased for Selznick Pictures by Joseph L. Plunkett in England. It is by Roy Horniman, who is among the foremost British writers.

King Baggot, Serial Star, Sports Many Odd Disguises

PRODUCER Bursten has given King Baggot ample opportunity to maintain his reputation in the matter of multitudinous roles for in "The Hawk's Trail" the protean actor appears in no less than ten distinct characterizations.

As Sheldon Steele, a scientific criminologist, a man of wealth, who finds fascination in the pursuit of crooks, he is called upon to assist two daughters from whom is being withheld the fortune left them by their murdered father. Unknown to them the murderer is the man whom they suppose to be their uncle and who, as their guardian has sole control of the fortune.

Steele's efforts lead him into many different sections of the underworld, and this gives him the opportunity of assuming as disguises the many characters above mentioned. Among other characterizations given by Baggot are those of a Chinaman, a longshoreman, a miner, a waiter, an East Indian Swami, a stoker, as the head of a detective bureau, and when in the service of the sisters, an employe of this agency.

"The Marriage of William Asche," Stage Success, Bought by Metro

THE MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASCHE," dramatized by Margaret Mayo from the novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward, has been added to Metro's list of plays acquired as material for its "fewer and better" pictures. World rights to the novel were secured. This drama of high English social life is international in its fame.

Acquisition of the book accentuates the fact that Metro is fast garnering in many of the choicest literary bits on the market for the use of its individual stars and for all-star productions. It is the Metro policy to buy only stage plays or widely read novels. Purchase of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, was one of the outstanding buys of the year last past.

Previous Purchases.

"Polly with a Past," by Guy Bolton and George Middleton, for Ina Claire; "Fine Feathers," the play by Eugene Walters; "Quincy Adams Sawyer," the novel by Charles Felton Pidgin; "The Gorgeous Girl," a novel by Nalbro Bartley now running serially in the Saturday Evening Post; "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," the comedy by Mark Swan and C. W. Bell, and "The Skylark," a novel by William Wallace Crooke, are among Metro's other recent purchases of screen material.

Metro officials boast that their roster of popular authors, including such names as Ibanez, Henry Arthur Jones, Thomas Hardy, Sir Gilbert Parker, Avery Hopwood, Eugene Walter, James A. Herne, Frank Danby (Mrs. Julia Frankau), Frederic and Fanny Hatton, Rachel Crothers, I. A. R. Wylie, Paul Armstrong, Maude Fulton, H. Austin Adams, Larry Evans and H. V. Esmond, challenges comparison.

Griffith Warns of Films Issued as Made by Him

D. W. GRIFFITH has issued a warning to all exhibitors, and through them to the general public, not to accept any motion picture production as being "A Griffith Picture" unless the initials, "D. G.," and the written word "Griffith" are stamped in the film.

Recently Mr. Griffith's attention was directed to certain pictures about to be released as "Griffith productions," one of the announcements as recent as January 12 going so far as to state, "One of the best productions made by the D. W. Griffith combination."

A few days ago Albert L. Grey, general manager for Mr. Griffith, came across an announcement reading: "A large advertising campaign will be begun to acquaint the public with this production, and exhibitors will have the same opportunity to cash in on this feature as they have on Mr. Griffith's more recent productions."

"This statement," said Mr. Grey," concerned a picture called 'Tiger Girl," which we have discovered to be an old print originally named 'The Lily and the Rose' and directed by Paul Powell. It is an injustice to Mr. Powell as well as to Mr. Griffith to advertise it as a Griffith picture, and there can be no doubt that it has been done solely for the purpose of trading on Mr. Griffith's name."

Louis Gasnier Returns To Direct Mae Marsh in Special Productions

LOUIS J. GASNIER, the famous French motion picture director and master mind of Robertson-Cole's big January special, "The Beloved Cheater," starring Lew Cody, has returned to Glendale, Cal., after spending ten days in conference with officials of Robertson-Cole at the New York office. Mae Marsh of "Birth of a Nation" fame, whose return to the screen found her under the Robertson-Cole banner, is now in California and preparing to start work on the scenes of her first 1920 production.

While in New York, Mr. Gasnier had several conferences with Mae Marsh and final plans were made for the carrying out of Miss Marsh's contract for Robertson-Cole's special productions. Mr. Gasnier has promised Robertson-Cole to secure a director of note for Miss Marsh, but he will personally supervise all of the Marsh features.

Now Preparing Scenario.

At the present time Mae Marsh is busy at work with scenario experts preparing for the first story. Mr. Gasnier has not as yet selected her supporting cast but he assures her she will have the best in the land.

"I am more than pleased to handle Mae Marsh productions," said Mr. Gasnier. "She is an actress of note and one of the screen's lasting favorites. She has run the gamut of her profession and I believe that in the next production, which will be written for her natural ability, she will be even a greater Mae Marsh.

"Robertson-Cole is determined to get the best productions that money and time can purchase. This is the right way to make pictures. First the star, then director, story, and cast, is the best method to pursue and success will follow. We have a free hand to make the Mae Marsh productions elaborate and all of special merit with an especial view to box-office success."

Promises Immediate Action.

"After reading more than 100 stories of merit, six have been chosen and we shall go ahead at once," said Miss Marsh. "I am pleased with every one of the plots and I do not care which is shot first. I am satisfied that the productions starring me will by far eclipse my former record."

Some time ago, Louis J. Gasnier and Sydney L. Cohan startled the motion picture world with the announcement that they had a long time contract with Mae Marsh. Soon after this announcement, Miss Marsh announced that her productions would be released by Robertson-Cole. Miss Marsh, who in private life is Mrs. Lee Arms, wife of the writer and dramatic critic, left filmdom for a short while to enjoy a rest after the birth of a baby girl.

Universal Tells Releases for Week of January 19

UNIVERSAL releases for the week of January 19 include several serials and short-reelers. "The Flaming Arrow" is the title of "The Great Radium Mystery" episode release for the week. Eileen Sedgwick, Cleo Madison and Bob Reeves are featured in these two reels. This serial is said to be booking big in all quarters.

The fourth episode of "The Lion Man," a Universal serial, featuring Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin, is entitled "A Devilish Device," and is also a two-reeler. "Romeo's Dad," a Jewel production, is the eighth of the Stage Women's War Relief pictures to be released. Thomas Wise and Gail Kane are featured.

There are three news releases, International, Hearst and Universal Current Events, and also one western, the title of which has not as yet been decided on. Lyons and Moran are still unreeling comedies. This week's portion consists of "The Sweet Dry and Dry." "All for the Dough Bag," featuring Bartine Burkett, Phil Dunham and Zip Monberg, is another comedy number on the program. The "New Screen Magazine" film completes the program.

Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna" Is Ready for Release on January 18

MARY PICKFORD's first independently produced picture for United Artists Corporation, which many look forward to as the greatest picture this star has ever made for the screen, will make its appearance on January 18 in all the principal cities in the country. In all the larger cities the picture has been booked for much longer runs than have been customary in the past.

"Pollyanna" will spread a philosophy of joy and happiness. "Pollyanna" philosophy appeals to the finest sentiments, because it appeals to the heart and because it makes motion picture audiences more happy and because it makes life more wholesome. The secret of it is that it comes from the heart of a child. Her gladness works miracles and more people, otherwise doomed to live in misery and helplessness, become whole and really helpful through this gospel of "Gladness."

Real Optimism.

The "Glad Game" idea consists in always letting yourself find something in every situation to be glad about. "Pollyanna" is glad that her freckles are not warts and she consoles a grouch who has broken his leg by telling him that since he is so happy when he is miserable, he should be glad to have so many things to make him feel so uncomfortable.

Work was begun by the little star on September 15 and the production was not complete until the middle of December. In order that a real New England village might be photographed, Director Powell took the entire company 200 miles from Los Angeles to Independence, a town a mile high in the Sierra Nevada mountains and the only typical New England hamlet in the West which had never before "posed" for a camera.

When it was found impossible to locate a house that would answer for the home of Aunt Polly, Miss Pickford ordered one built. The set was completed at a cost of $10,000 and consisted of a front, side and back, with half a roof. This is said to be the largest single dwelling ever built for a motion picture.

Cut to Six Reels.

Two cameras were used during the filming of "Pollyanna" and a trifle more than 100,000 feet of film were shot, which were cut to six reels, or approximately 5,600 feet.

In the titles Frances Marion, author of the script, has done some of her cleverest work and her adaptation of the story deserves high praise. Paul Powell, who directed this film, has shown himself thoroughly familiar with construction and technique. Charles Rosher, photographer, has registered effects with his lens which rival etchings of the masters. His work adds the final touch needed to stamp "Pollyanna" as one of the screen classics.

Capitol Theatre, New York, Extending Its Usefulness

THE Capitol Theatre, New York, is making plans to enlarge the scope of its entertainment usefulness. Ned Wayburn is withdrawing as producing director because of his inability to devote enough of his time to Capitol presentations.

Two buildings on Fiftieth Street, adjoining the theatre, have been purchased by the Capitol management and will be converted into scenic studios, rehearsal rooms and a wardrobe department. Not only will the theatre continue to present films, but it will become producing center for musical shows, extravaganzas and other forms of stage entertainment.

Messmore Kendall, president of the controlling company, will continue to head the affairs of the corporation. Wayburn's withdrawal will mark the only change in theatre executives.

Goldwyn Films Shown in Twenty-six Philadelphia Theatres in One Week

WITH twenty-six theatres, including two first run houses on the Stanley circuit, playing Goldwyn pictures in Philadelphia during the week of January 5, the popularity of the lion brand productions in the City of Brotherly Love is apparent. Practically every section of the city has been covered, and exhibitors report a prosperous week.

In commenting on the increased demand for Goldwyn productions, officials of the Stanley Company of America, whose two theatres, the Arcadia and Palace, played Will Rogers in "Jubilo" and Tom Moore in "Toby's Bow" respectively, in opposition to each other, declared that the company's product has been achieving big success wherever presented and warranted this unusual booking record. Press reviews have been extremely favorable on the third year's pictures.

Credit for the banner week is due to the untiring efforts of the staff under Harry N. White, manager of the local exchange who have worked incessantly in gaining their objective. A. C. Kohtz, the city salesman, not content with merely placing the pictures with any favorable exhibitor, outlined an intensive campaign to include the principal picture houses in every section of the city. As a result, exhibitors in north, south, east and west Philadelphia presented a Goldwyn picture to their patrons.

Report Title Change of Bessie Barriscale Film

SO as to give Robertson-Cole exhibitors the full value of the original title of Kathleen Norris' magazine success, Robertson-Cole has changed the title of the latest Bessie Barriscale release from "Woman and Wife" to "The Luck of Geraldine Laird." This production, which was directed by Edward Sloman, is heralded as one of the best starring vehicles ever afforded the blonde artistic star.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, in announcing the change of title issued the following statement:

"Robertson-Cole exhibitors should be given the full force of the advertising value of the original story. It is a well known fact that Kathleen Norris is one of the best writers of fiction of the day. 'The Luck of Geraldine Laird' is said to be one of her best efforts. It ran in serial form in one of the leading magazines.

"It was this reason that prompted us to change the title. We are doing everything within our power to co-operate with the exhibitor and I firmly believe that the original title will carry the picture to a more successful end than 'Woman and Wife.'

"'The Luck of Geraldine Laird' is a story dealing with too much mother-in-law."

M. E. Maxwell Becomes Special Representative

THE promotion of Melville E. Maxwell as special representative of Realart Pictures Corporation in the West is announced. Mr. Maxwell's retirement from his present post as manager at Omaha to become special representative will give Cornelius G. Kingsley, Detroit manager for Realart, a long sought opportunity to return to the West. Mr. Kingsley is expected to transfer his activities to Omaha within the next few weeks.

The vacancy at the Detroit office will be filled by Ralph Quive, Realart's veteran San Francisco manager, who has established an enviable record on the West Coast and who returns to the East after a six year's absence.

Simpson Returns to 'Frisco.

The request of Ben F. Simpson, field manager of Realart, to return to San Francisco, following the change in that territory, will bring him back to the scene of his activities prior to joining the Realart organization. At that time Mr. Simpson resigned as chairman of the San Francisco Motion Picture Board of Trade to make his present affiliations. He has as wide an acquaintance with West Coast exhibitors as any man in America. His former San Francisco connection was with Triangle, and it was his splendid personality and fine business record which endeared Mr. Simpson to a host of friends.

As field manager for Realart, Mr. Simpson shared honors with John S. Woody, now general manager. These officials toured the land, following the company's inception, and built up in a remarkably short time what has since proved to be one of the strongest sales organizations in the country.

Three Selznicks in Cutting Room.

In the cutting room at the Selznick Fort Lee studios work is said to be going forward on three productions at one time. Mr. Mansfield is cutting the Ralph Ince picture, "His Wife's Money," in which Eugene O'Brien is the star. Olive Thomas' new feature, "Footlights and Shadows," is being put into shape by Mr. McCloy, and Mr. Gardner is finishing the Elaine Hammerstein picture, "Greater Than Fame." At the Bronx studios Mr. Fitzmeyer has "Sooner or Later," Owen Moore's comedy, in the final stages of completion.

Jazz, Hula Hula—and Everything in "The Spirit of the Dance" for Pathe Weekly.

One of the dance series, created by Julian Allendorff, will be issued a week. Left is the Indian Dance of the Five Senses; above, Princess White Deer in real American "Jazz," and Grace Christie in "The Spirit of Belgium"; below, Mme. Desiree Lubovska as "Eve"; right, Princess White Deer in the Hula Hula.

Eugene O'Brien, Elaine Hammerstein and Owen Moore—Three Selznick Breadwinners.
Seen in "His Wife's Money," "The Woman Game," and "Sooner or Later," all brand new productions.

Mortimer Is Exploitation Head.

First National Exchange, Inc., at 509 Fifth avenue, New York, has established an exploitation department in order that the friendly feeling between exchange men and exhibitors may be strengthened. This new division was created this week and G. Horace Mortimer is in charge.

The idea in establishing this department is to work in sympathy with the exhibitor by filling his wants and giving aid in any way possible. First National feels certain that this office will be welcomed with open arms by the men who exhibit its pictures.

Mr. Mortimer is well known in the theatrical and newspaper fields as a publicity director and press representative.

Kansas City Playhouse Reopens Much Improved

AFTER being closed for two weeks for remodeling, the Gayoso Theatre at Twelfth street and Grand avenue, opened on January 10, which was Pershing Day in Kansas City, and played to capacity houses both afternoon and evening. The theatre was enlarged to three times its former capacity. It now has a capacity of 1,000 persons.

A gang of forty workmen, carpenters, painters and decoraters worked incessently day and night to have the theatre ready for opening the day General Pershing arrived. The enlargement now places the Gayoso in the class of large theatres in Kansas City. The comfort of its patrons was one of the ideas carried out. Felt seats were installed and other conveniences added for the benefit of the patrons. A $15,000 orchestra organ was purchased.

Twice-Weekly Changes.

The program will be changed twice weekly instead of once, it is announced by manager G. C. Christmann. A new $5,000 electric sign announces the opening program which consisted of William S. Hart, in "Staking His Life," a First National release, and a Harold Lloyd comedy.

Mr. Christmann has managed the theatre for three years. It is owned by William H. Harper, circuit clerk of Jackson County.

Arthur Kane Returns to New York After Extensive Western Tour

AFTER five weeks spent on what was to have been a three weeks' trip to the Pacific Coast, Arthur S. Kane ventured to New York January 12. He immensely enjoyed his pilgrimage.

"Abounding prosperity has overtaken business in every section which I visited," says Mr. Kane in a statement issued the day he returned. "Chicago is great, Los Angeles is outstripping the country in the boom which has struck it; San Francisco, Seattle, Portland and Spokane never were so good."

"This leads me to an observation," continues Mr. Kane, "which applies to every large city in the country. I have never yet seen a theatre too large in any of the great centers of the United States.

"To me this seems an astounding fact. However, it is matched by the assertion that there are not in any of the foremost communities of the country too many houses.

"In other words, there are not too many seats anywhere. Of course, I refer to downtown conditions.

Public Keeps Ahead of Showmen.

"In the case of downtown in the large cities it is practically impossible for any man to say that there are enough theatres. The plain fact is that we, in this business, have never yet caught up to the public.

"There has not been an important and worthy development in all the history of the industry when the public was not found waiting there ahead of time. It is, rather, for exhibitors and producers to try to keep abreast of the demands of the amusement going public.

"Now that the theatre of 5,000 seats in New York is a reality and playing to business, the old cry of 'Make it small and hold 'em out' must be stilled. They seem never to get too big to 'hold 'em out.'

"Why, in the first picture show opened in New York City they put in extra large chairs and left lots of space between them so as not to have too many seats! It was only a few weeks till they yanked those seats out, put in smaller ones and added many rows. The public was there ahead of them."

Kane Was Royally Welcomed.

Stories which have been coming from the West Coast indicate that cordial receptions were given to Mr. Kane along his route. Dinners, luncheons, private picture viewings and studio receptions were the order of the day in Los Angeles, so much so that instead of the six days which he had gone there to spend, he remained fourteen.

Sid Grauman, T. L. Tally, W. H. Clune, Fred Miller, Harry Leonhardt and Roy Miller were some of the exhibitors with whom he conferred in Los Angeles; while in San Francisco, Louis Greenfield, Eugene Roth, Ralph Ruffner, Fred Dahnken, George Mann, Bruce Johnson, J. A. Partington, Harry David, G. W. Midgeley and other theatre men extended welcome.

In Santan Barbara, Mr. Kane looked over the theatres under the guidance of Johnson & Wellman. In Portland, Claude S. Jensen, William Parker, H. C. Stevens, G. A. Metzger, Sol Baum and others were seen; while in Seattle, J. von Herberg, James Q. Clemmer, Jake Gottstein, John Hamrick, Fred. Fisher, George Bellman and Frank Steffy were among those visited.

In Spokane and Butte, Mr. Kane made short stops to call upon Rav Grombacher, Dr. Howard S. Chemmer, W. L. Fenney and Frank T. Bailey. Butte was the only city encountered which did not seem to be at top form, but steps are being taken to straighten out the labor difficulties which have slowed up business.

Will Soon Announce Plans.

"Now that I am back, I shall, of course, have to get busy and line up things," says Mr. Kane. "Several matters are pending and I shall close one of them in time to make early announcement. What concerns me most now is not the magnitude of anything which may be undertaken, but the quality of it.

"Whatever it is, you can be assured it will be an endeavor to continue to present something worthy for the attention of exhibitors, who have been such staunch friends to me."

Harold Lloyd Make New Fun Record In His Two Reel "From Hand to Mouth"

By Edward Weitzel

ONCE upon a time a short movie comedy meant one long string of rough house pranks thrown together without skill or scheme, in which the slapstick, the constantly employed "well-planted kick" and the mellow and oozy custard pie often overshadowed the hard-working and hopeful comic star. Not that these first aids to a weak and overworked plot are now without honor in the land of movie make-believe. Employed with discretion and supported by the able efforts of a clever comedian and by laughable situations aplenty, there is still power in all three of these ancient and honorable funmakers to move us to hearty mirth.

Especially the kick!

The firm contact of a humorously inclined boot against the person whose unguarded rear invites a jovous attack never fails to jar every onlooker into laughter, however painful the operation to the party that is in receipt of the kick.

We all began our education in this way of being amused by watching the comic knock-downs and funny falls of our dearly beloved friend, the clown in the circus; and those of us who have not lost our taste for the healthful relaxation of such honest fun are fortunate and highly favored mortals and greatly to be envied.

Clean Fun Cleverly Contrived.

Having paid proper and heartfelt respects to these worthy adjuncts of the mimic art whose misfortune it has been that unworthy comedians have employed them in unfunny farces, let us pause long enough to pay a like tribute to the long list of always reliable comedy situations and bits of comic business that are the edged tools of the master mummer and with which he fashions the merry little pictures that furnish from fifteen to thirty minutes of unrestrained and health-giving laughter.

The improvement in this line of program material during the past year has been a source of much satisfaction to the men that run the theatres and to their patrons in front of the screen.

And no comedy star has contributed more to this improvement than has Harold Lloyd. The steady increase in merit of his two-reel comedies has brought him into the front rank of screen entertainers. Clean fun cleverly contrived, may truthfully be used as the slogan of his pictures. "From Hand to Mouth," which was seen at the Strand Theatre on Broadway last week, is a fine example of the new quick-moving farce of deft situation and touch-and-go comic incident.

Fine Example of the "Know How."

Opening with a touch of pathos which wins immediate liking for the penniless hero played by Harold Lloyd, his efforts to obtain a meal for himself and for a cherub-faced little girl and the lame dog that is her companion develop a series of comic mishaps in which every tried and true trick of the farce expert is given so skillful a twist that it puts on the appearance of a newly invented piece of business. The laughter starts at once and is kept up by the swift movement of the action, which links each mirth-provoking incident to the next without a break in the comic suspense.

There are scenes where the mild-mannered, round-eyed hero is forced to help rob a house in which dwells the bewitching and pajama clad heroine. Here again the "know how" of the chief actor and his director puts a fresh face on a familiar expedient, and we watch the goings-on as eagerly and with as constant an accompaniment of grins and chuckles as if we were looking at the whole thing for the first time.

The Round-Up of Cops.

Then there is an abduction scene, and the beautiful heroine and her cross-saddle "nighties" are bundled into an auto by a gang of crooks and rushed to their den. Now follows another of those celebrated red-hot pursuits. Also the most amazing and ludicrous case of get-a-policeman-quick on record!

Not satisfied with one bluecoat, the horn-eyed hero collects enough club swingers to police a fair-sized city; and his method of accomplishing the round-up is an ever-increasing comic delight that rolls up laugh after laugh. It is constructive ability of the superior sort, and its application to a two-reel farce that makes "From Hand to Mouth" all that is claimed for it by its producers.

A Beggarly Trio and a Near "Shot"

Mix Performs Hazardous Feat in "The Cyclone"

TOM MIX, the "whirlwind of the screen," is at his topnotch in "The Cyclone," a picture that is running over with thrills. The story is dedicated to the Northwest Mounted Police, "the riders of the plain" about whom a rich legendry has grown up. That gallant constabulary unit, which is compared with the Texas Rangers of the South, has a history that is filled with deeds of real heroism.

Two pictures which have been produced in the last couple of months at the West Coast studios of Fox Film Corporation, "The Speed Maniac" and "The Feud," have set records for hair-raising stunts. Now comes a production with a stunt climax that is said to surpass all of Mix's former achievements. "The Cyclone" is brimful of impressive situations that give the cowpuncher star ample opportunity to shine. Mix plays the part of a sergeant in the Canadian Northwest Mounted Police.

The recklessness of Tom Mix reaches its height when, after a series of exhausting experiences in the fulfilment of duty and in defense of love, he gallops up three flights of stairs mounted on his favorite horse "Tony" and reaches the roof of the specially constructed house. The roof gives way under the combined weight and horse and rider plunge through successive floors into the basement, where a terrific fight takes place.

Autographed Films in Social Service Field

AUTOGRAPHED Films, of which Carlyle Ellis is president, is devoting itself exclusively to the production and distribution of informative films in the social service field. These films are of both recognized types, fictional and dramatic, involving the statement of a constructive idea in plat and development—the film equivalent of the written short story, and the special article type, which is a pictorial statement of facts developed in progression and with authentic human elements.

The following productions are completed or nearing completion: "Our Children" a two-reel picture made for the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor; "In Middies and Bloomers" a one-reel film made for the National Board of the Y. W. C. A., exercising the value of camp life in the experience and bodily development of girls; "Getting Together," a one-reel picture of the First National Conference of Working Girls, sponsored by the Y. W. C. A. and the First National Congress of Working Women; "We're Wrong About Shoes," a three-reel film made for the Y. W. C. A. to educate women to the proper care of the feet through wearing foot-shaped shoes; "Home at the End," a one-reel picture made for the Baptist Home for the Aged of New York City, to raise funds.

It shows the activities of the Home, and is of general interest because it appeals sympathetically to the sense of obligation toward the dependent aged. "An Equal Chance" is a two-reel film to be completed by Feb. 15, 1920. It was made for the National Organization for Public Health Nursing Association. It is a narrative of the fight with the influenza epidemic in one rural community, emphasizing the value of the public health nurse as helper and educator, and leads into demonstration of nursing activities among the Indians and negroes. "The Woman Who Works" is a three-reel film to be completed by April, 1920. It was made for the Y. W. C. A. and is a review of the progress made in the betterment of conditions for women in industry and of the things still due them. Woman as a vital factor in industry—its reaction on her—and the working woman's effect on industry and the community.

Christie Pictures Boost Motion Picture Church

FIRST in the procession of motion picture producers who are falling in line to boost a project for a Motion Picture Church in Los Angeles, is Al Christie, who has taken pictures of Dr. Dood and an entire studio organization, which will be shown in a current news reel in a campaign to raise funds to put over the undertaking.

The project is sponsored by leading people in all branches of the film industry, and plans are being drawn for a church which will include not only an auditorium for Sunday services, but also a community center, in which will be found a gymnasium, rest room, card and billiard rooms, motion picture projection room and library.

Leaders in the film studios in Hollywood and Los Angeles have readily fallen in with the idea of establishing a church home which will be primarily for people of the profession. Father Dodd, who is undertaking the project, is rector of the Church of Saint Mary of the Angels of East Hollywood, near the center of motion picture production.

Goldwyn Has River Scenic.

For the next Ford Educational Weekly subject, No. 186, released by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, "The Flowing Road" has been selected. As the title indicates, it is a river scenic. The opportunities for beautiful shots along the banks of one of the most picturesque rivers in the world were realized to the full in a film that is finely toned and tinted to bring out the atmospheric quality of the scenes.

The journey up the river is made in a leisurely fashion, with plenty of time allowed for stops along the way and glimpses of attractive coves and inlets. Light and cloud effects are brought to the screen through the best sort of photography, and the poetic quality of the picture is enhanced by appropriate sub-titles, "The Flowing Road" is a superior scenic that deserves a special orchestral accompaniment.

Chester Cameraman Gets Rare Shots of Shantung

CHARLES HUGO, one of the C. L. Chester cameramen, has cabled from Shanghai that he has completed a successful tour through this famous Chinese province which has been much in the public eye since peace treaties began to occupy the attention of the world's diplomats.

The province is one of the most densely populated in all China, sustaining nearly 40,000,000 persons. It consequently affords opportunity for striking pictures of oriental life. The atmosphere is replete with ancient Chinese tradition, for here Confucius was born. Shrines and temples by the thousand bear testimony to his influence. T'ai-Shan, a mountain famous in history for more than 4,000 years, is the annual resort of hundreds of pilgrims.

While the chief wealth of Shantung centers in its coal fields in the valley of Lao-fu, the district which was the principal object of Germany's envy when the port of Kiao-chow was taken over, other resources are also found. Among them the culture of the silk worm, which in eastern sections is fed on the dwarf oak. The product resulting from the culture of the silk worm is known as pongee or Chifu silk. A bi-product of the silk industry is the cocoon, which is considered a rare morsel of food by the natives.

It was in the Shantung province that the Boxer movement against foreigners started in the early part of the century. The present agitation over Japanese domination and the rebellion of the inhabitants as expressed in boycott of imported goods indicates that the national spirit is far from dead and foreshadows a storm center of the world for many years to come.

Pioneer Will Deal with Non-Theatrical Field

DURING the last month the Pioneer System of Co-operative Exchanges have been trying out several experiments under the direction of the home office. One dealt with the possibilities lying in the non-theatrical field. A careful study of the market for Pioneer attractions in churches, schools and social work centres has convinced the Pioneer General Staff that the time is ripe for the establishment of a non-theatrical department to serve this important field.

"The Boomerang," with Walthall, was the first Pioneer production to be shown outside of a theatre. This picture was shown to a large congregation at the Memorial Unitarian Church in Syracuse, N. Y. Several Methodist Churches as well as Reformed Synogogues are on the list for early bookings of others of the Pioneer pictures.

Several pictures now being handled by the Pioneer will be revised and re-edited, and as soon as new prints are delivered the work will be taken up in earnest.

New York Children See Safety First Pictures

THE Capitol Theatre, New York City, was the scene on Saturday morning, Jan. 10 of a "safety first" demonstration before a remarkably large audience of school children. More than five thousand of the public school children of the city gathered in the theatre, under the chaperonage of their teachers to view the most thrilling and effective "safety first" picture that has been made.

The picture, "Careless America," was made by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, under the supervision of Harry Levey, head of the Industrial and Educational Department, and teaches the necessity for being careful in crossing city streets, driving automobiles on slippery pavements, getting off street cars, etc. One of the lessons of the picture drawn especially for children points to the dangers of bob-sledding on hills which cross busy streets. Realistically staged accidents serve well by way of illustration; and in some instances the accidents are actual happenings.

The exhibition was given under the auspices of Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo, a special committee of one hundred, and a school committee of principals and district superintendents of schools. The program, which included music by the Police Band, was much enjoyed by the children. Julia Arthur recited "The Battle Hymn of the Republic"; Catherine Conway, of the Morris High School, sang "America the Beautiful"; Dr. William L. Ettinger, City Superintendent, and Secretary of State Francis M. Hugo delivered effective addresses, all of which was preceded by the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by public school pupils. Commissioner of Police Richard E. Enright presided.

Frozen Air for Precious Stones.

The recent report from Amsterdam that the artificial making of diamonds can be aided by the use of liquid air low temperature, should stimulate interest in "Frozen Air," presented in Pathe Review No. 35, to be released January 25th. The picture shows the many strange uses of "liquid air" as applied in the Bureau of Standards, Washington, D. C. It registers 310 degrees below zero and amazing transformations occur to anything dipped into it. For instance, a fragrant rose is immersed and, after it is removed, it splinters like fine glass, when struck by any solid object. The rare coloring of the rose, when thus frozen and broken, makes the chipped bits look like precious stones. Many other interesting experiments are shown.

Prizma Illustrates Orange Industry.

The latest Prizma release, "The Orange," shows the cultivation of this popular fruit and the different steps in the creation of a bearing orchard, proceeding from the seed to the budding, transplanting and irrigation. Some beautiful panoramic landscapes, with wonderful stereoscopic effects, add much to make this a picture of great interest and charm in a land of golden fruit and snow-capped mountains. Think how pleasant it would be to spend a winter in a country where oranges were growing and fur coats and furnaces could be forgotten.

Some Things Worth Knowing

THAT at a meeting of motion picture men at the Waldorf Sunday afternoon, Jan. 11, a suggestion of Secretary of the Interior Lane's regarding the organization of the industry to combat social unrest, was adopted. This suggestion proposed that such a campaign begin on Feb. 12, with a country-wide exhibition of the story of America as exemplified in the life of Abraham Lincoln. The motion picture representatives then went into session to arrange the campaign, which originally suggested in Washington by a joint committee of the Senate and House.

That the National Board of Review's search for Americanization subjects has been a bit disappointing. With the exception of a few remarkable exceptions, such as "Witchcraft," "Evangeline," "The Man Without a Country," "Davey Crockett" and "The Conqueror," there is almost nothing which can be used for a series of pictures on America's development, with corect historical setting, according to their finding.

It might not be a bad idea for some one in the industry to get busy on a series of pictures which would reincarnate the story of our country's birth and development.

That Boston regulates its film exhibitions in the following manner, according to John M. Casey, chief of the Mayor's Bureau of Licenses, whose address at a recent conference of city officials held in New York City, has been pamphleted by the National Board of Review. Accompanying the receipt of the weekly bulletin, containing the list of films in which eliminations are desired, is a letter, with the cuts ordered attached, sent to the manager of each agency handling these films, from which the following is quoted: "You will please see personally that these cuts are made on all prints of these subjects that are released in the City of Boston and forward the parts cut out to me at this office." Signed, John M. Casey. Agents are also notified that until these cuts are made any film for which such eliminations are ordered can not be shown in any place of amusement in Boston.

Looks as though Boston is on the right track.

Republic Distributes for Community Bureau

ANOTHER step forward in the progressive march of the Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director, is the announcement by Briton N. Busch, president, that Republic has entered the non-theatrical motion picture field by making an agreement with the Community Motion Picture Bureau, whereby Republic will do the mechanical distribution for Community.

According to the arrangement, Community is to have a sales representative in each city where Republic has an office and all non-theatrical business now handled by Republic is to be turned over to Community. This will give Republic entry into the educational and industrial field as well as army posts, Y. M. C. A.'s, camps, etc.

The Community Motion Picture Bureau has been handicapped through lack of facilities to secure an adequate supply of the right type of pictures and a proper and efficient system of distribution. At the present time it is impossible for Republic to supply community with all of its pictures, and it is the plan of the organization, beside acting as a distributing agent, to help secure Republic an adequate supply from other producers, it being understood that they will produce pictures through the affiliated Selznick Enterprises whenever it is possible.

Pictograph Dabbles in Science.

Exceptional material and variety of interest will be found in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph to be released the week of February 8th. It opens with a scientific subject. "Hello Mars," made by means of Bray's remarkable animated drawing process, followed by a study of animal life under the title of "Strange Appetites." It concludes with one of the Bray-International cartoons, "Jerry on the Job" in "Where Has My Little Coal Bin?"

"Hello Mars" is a valuable contribution to the investigations of scientists who for generations have been studying the possibilities of life on Mars and the chances for communication with the earth. With much detail, and in a way that makes the subject clear even to those without knowledge of scientific matters, the animated drawings show the different expected means of sending a message to the planet.

"Strange Appetites" is an out-of-the-ordinary presentation of animal life which the Bray cameraman reveals the preferences of a number of wild animals when it comes to selecting their daily meals.

Fox Pictures for Men of the Atlantic Fleet

WHEN the Atlantic fleet of the United States Navy reaches its winter rendezvous at Guantanamo, Cuba, it will have in its possession an entirely new equipment for the handling of motion pictures. The Columbia, which for months, was anchored in the North River off Ninety-Sixth street, New York, has been fitted up and stocked as a floating film exchange. This has been done by the Navy Motion Picture Exchange, in charge of Lieutenant Joseph O'Reilly, and is an altogether new departure for the service.

The Columbia, Capt. W. B. Wells, U. S. N., commanding, was loaded with her film stock before sailing for Norfolk, whence after taking on supplies, she is to proceed at the head of the fleet, commanded by Rear Admiral Edward Simpson U. S. N., to Cuban waters. The ship exchange is prepared to supply all of the ships with features or complete programs at the shortest notice.

As soon as the warships are at anchor and the flagship, the Pennsylvania, arrives with the commanding officer of the fleet, Admiral H. B. Wilson, the Columbia will be ready for business. Signals will be taken by the Columbia for new films, and deliveries will be made by that ship's supply boat.

Fox Film Corporation, which has placed a large and varied assortment of features aboard the Columbia, also has supplied all of the ship's papers with plenty of press matter, for the publications issued on board carry regular departments for motion picture news.

Equity's "Eyes of Youth" Continues to Make New Records Wherever Shown

"EYES OF YOUTH," the first release of the Equity Pictures Corporation, continues to create new records in almost every town in the country in which it is being shown.

At Albany, N. Y., it played to 60 per cent. more business than any previous picture, and was brought back last week for a repeat and again attracted more than the usual amount of patronage.

At the Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., in the face of three of the coldest days the city has ever known, the house record was broken and it is to be brought back for a repeat.

At the Ohio Theatre, Indianapolis, "Eyes of Youth" opened to $2,000 on New Year's Day, and, contrary to expectations, played to within $40 on Friday of its holiday total. In spite of the usual reaction after New Year's, or any important holiday, the Equity picture maintained its ratio throughout the first five days of the engagement, which is as late as the local office has any reports on.

In Two Houses at Same Time.

At Pittsburg it played two houses simultaneously, and in spite of zero weather—an unusual condition in Pittsburg—the record of the Grand Theatre was broken, as was that of Clark & Rowland's Liberty Theatre.

Lynn, Mass., shattered all previous receipts with "Eyes of Youth," while Denver, Col., is booked for a repeat after playing to the greatest number of people and the greatest receipts in the history of the American Theatre in that city.

One of the most remarkable booking achievements in the history of local exchanges is reported by Sam Zierler, president of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, which handles the Equity productions in New York. He reports that thirty-three theatres on Broadway, from Loew's Greeley Square to the Majestic on 181st street and Broadway, have either played the picture or are playing it; this includes some instances in which "Eyes of Youth" has played in theatres only one block apart, and which takes in important houses, such as the Standard, Schuyler, Adelphi, Keystone, Bunny, Washington, Audubon, Dyckman, and Empire theatres, in addition to which all of the Loew houses and Fox theatres have already played the picture, while in Brooklyn scarcely a theatre is without its dates on the Clara Kimball Young production.

Bookings Heavy on Second Picture.

So remarkable has been the business accruing to the exhibitor on "Eyes of Youth" that the bookings on the second Young picture, which the Equity will release early in February, already exceeds in volume in many instances the gross bookings on previous Young films at the end of their first year.

"The Forbidden Woman," which will be Equity's most important February release, has been made on the same scale of prodigiousness as "Eves of Youth" and boasts a cast equally important.

The third young release will not occur until the middle of May, and will be Marah Ellis Ryan's noted work, "The Soul of Rafael."

Great Copenhagen House Has American Projectors

MOVING PICTURE WORLD published an exclusive story in its issue of January 1 on the beautiful Palads-Theatre in Copenhagen. This story, material for which was supplied by David P. Howells, has already aroused a large amount of interest.

Although the story did not state the fact, the projection equipment of the Palads-Theatre was supplied by the Nicholas Power Company, known as the pioneers of the European market.

It is a condition gratifying to the manufacturers of American projectors that this magnificent theatre, representing the best in continental houses, should be equipped with machines coming from an American organization. This unquestionably demonstrates that American projectors are "first."

"Tree of Knowledge" Is Warwick's Next Release

THOUGH Robert Warwick is the star of the Paramount Artcraft picture, "The Tree of Knowledge," which is released on January 18, the predominating note is the "eternal feminine." The story harks back to the Garden of Eden for its motif. However, the play is thoroughly modern, the connection with Eve and the original sin being established by a beautiful prologue. In this, Theodore Kosloff, the Russian interpretative dancer, and Yvonne Gardelle are partners in a fine bit of pantomime, portraying the ancient legend of Adam and his demon-wife, Lillith, who is supposed mythically to have been Eve's predecessor.

The main action concerns one Nigel Stanyon, a youth "intended" for the church, who, while travelling on the continent, is lured by an adventuress named Belle. She casts him aside and Nigel finally is installed in England as overseer on the estate of an old friend. He comes to love an innocent girl, but fears to tell her because of his past. His position becomes doubly difficult when his friend returns with the brazen Belle as his wife. What follows is full of dramatic action.

Mr. Warwick has a romantic role of the type in which he has made his greatest success both on the screen and on the stage. Kathlyn Williams, in the ultra-vampirish role of Belle, contributes a meritorious performance, as also do Wanda Hawley, Tom Forman and Irving Cummings.

William DeMille was the director of "The Tree of Knowledge" and Margaret Turnbull was the adaptor of the story which originally was a play by R. C. Carton. Singularly enough, one of Miss Turnbull's earliest dramatic works was the co-authorship of "Classmates" with Mr. DeMille.

Tower's Claim for "The Superman."

Reports received by Tower Film Corporation from exhibitors who are running the five reel production, "The Superman," now being released on the state right market, show successful results.

Says an official of the Tower Film Corporation: "'The Superman' is unique, interesting and thrilling as a production. It is filled with suspense, escapes, rescues and adventure. It is a melodrama that will appeal not alone for its sensationalism, but because it is something 'different' in pictures."

Fox Film Jury Praises Clemenceau's "Strongest"

FIVE versions of "The Strongest," by Premier Clemenceau of France, have been viewed by a jury at the projection rooms of Fox Film Corporation, which means that practically all the scenes in the production were taken five times. The jury decided which of the five, in their expert judgment, conveyed most perfectly the great thoughts of the mighty Clemenceau in his telling of what they regard as the most powerful modern love story in the world; and these scenes, titled, will be the version of the only photodrama from the pen of the "Tiger of France," that will be shown to the public.

"The Strongest" is declared to be the greatest work of R. A. Walsh. Its director, Mr. Walsh, was given everything with which to make a picture—mighty story, mighty cast, mighty sets, and unlimited capital, and throwing into it all of his directorial genius, he has produced for Fox Film Corporation the crowning effort of his career, it is announced.

To interpret the characters of the story, an international cast was secured including Carlo Liten, the noted Belgian actor. Harrison Hunter, a leading man; Florence Malone, noted for her work in Oliver Morosco's stage successes; Renee Adoree, known as "Renee the Adored" in Paris; Belgium's famous screen star, Georgette Gauthier de Trigny; Jean Gauthier de Trigny, the French actor; James Marcus, Hal Horne, C. A. de Lima and Teddy Piper. Ben Bail handled the camera.

"A Gamble in Souls" to Be Released January 25

IN releasing on January 25 "A Gamble in Souls," the Thomas H. Ince production produced by Triangle and featuring Dorothy Dalton, United considers it has acquired a feature starring one of the most popular actresses in the film industry.

"A Gamble In Souls" is a vivid story of life. Its theme has for its basis the battle of good and evil. It is the story of a woman of the Frisco cabarets and a preacher of the Gospel, one scoffing at the code of morals adopted by the preacher and the man seeing only evil in the woman. These two removed from man-made surroundings and cast away on a deserted island learn gradually the true meaning of life, is grandly told in this production.

"The Copperhead" Given Full Page Advertisements in Thirty-one Papers

BY far one of the biggest campaigns of national advertising launched in behalf of a single picture is that which is about to be started by the Famous Players-Lasky Company for "The Copperhead," the Paramount-Artcraft super special featuring Lionel Barrymore, which is to be released January 25.

No less than thirty-one publications, circulating to a country-wide clientele within the next four weeks, will carry full-page advertisements of "The Copperhead," the total circulation gained being approximately 10,000,000. The list has been carefully selected with a view to reaching the most cultured and substantial people of the country, people who will be attracted by "The Copperhead's" historical and patriotic appeal.

To Reach Ex-Soldiers.

Thirteen different educational magazines are included, as is the American Legion Magazine, which reaches a large percentage of the men who served under the Stars and Stripes in the recent war.

It was in September last that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation embarked on its policy of nationally advertising its individual productions, George Loane Tucker's "The Miracle Man" being the first picture so exploited.

Previous to that the firm's advertising in publications of national circulation was largely confined to the institutional type. Through more than five years, the company consecrated its national advertising effort, and the money which went into it to selling the motion picture to the people of the country and popularizing the Paramount trademark in order to increase the patronage of the theatres showing those pictures.

The success of this policy, Famous Players-Lasky feels, is self-evident. With American exhibitors now taking in an annual gross revenue of approximately three-quarters of a billion dollars, according to Government statistics, and with something like 11,000 theatres numbered among Famous Players-Lasky customers, the executives of the company feel that the policy has been vindicated.

Other Pictures to Be Advertised.

With the market thus established, the advent of the superpicture, marked by the release of "The Miracle Man," "Male and Female," "Everywoman," "The Copperhead," etc., emphasizes the desirability and the wisdom of a policy by which the merits of each individual production shall be made known to the general public though the avenue of widespread and judicious advertising. "Everywoman," for instance, a picture appealing particularly to women, was advertised in Pictorial Review and Delineator in adition to the Saturday Evening Post and Cosmopolitan. The Country Gentleman will also carry a page in February.

George Fitzmaurice's production, "On With the Dance," will be advertised in the February 21 issue of the Saturday Evening Post and in Country Gentleman. Cecil B. DeMille's "Why Change Your Wife?" will be spread before the readers of the Saturday Evening Post and Collier's of March 20 and Ladies' Home Journal of March. A full page on "Huckleberry Finn" will be run in Christian Herald for February and in Lone Scout, St. Nicholas, Boys' Life, American Boy and Boys' Magazine.

A page on "Behind the Door" runs in February McClure's, in which publication the story first appeared. Similarly, Metropolitan, which carried the story of "A Girl Named Mary," carries a page on the picture, and "The Six Best Cellars" will be advertised in McClure's, which ran the story last July.

Big "U" Gets Word from its Serial Company in China

MANY interesting bits of news are sent in by the Universal expeditions now combing the world for material to make absorbing and realistic serial pictures. A letter received at the Universal offices from its representative in Shanghai, China, regarding the Marie Walcamp party now filming a serial in the Orient, places quite a little emphasis on the bearing the prevailing monetary exchange has on the cost of picture production.

"We haven't any definite idea as to how long we will remain in Shanghai," says the correspondent, "but from present indications, I don't believe we will be here more than two weeks. The exchange here is very high today, being eighty-eight cents on the dollar, so you see that it would be terribly expensive to keep the company in Shanghai for very long. Coming from a place like Japan, where the exchange is almost two for one, this place is certainly not attractive. Mr. McRae, the director, is trying to exhaust this territory as rapidly as possible. From a monetary standpoint, Japan would have been ideally suited to our purpose, but then the sun very seldom shines long enough to get a long scene made."

An unsuccessful attempt was made to shoot scenes at Nagaski, the fortified port of Japan. It was desired to get pictures of the coaling at that point. It showed about 300 coolie women coaling the Kashima, the boat on which the party made the trip to China.

Method of Reporting Admission Tax Cannot Be Changed, Says Government

NO change can be made in the method of reporting taxes collected on admissions so as to separate the business of moving picture theatres from other amusements, according to officials of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. This is the final word upon this subject, which has been agitated several times since the passage of the admission tax provision of the revenue law.

The matter was taken up with Assistant Commissioner W. H. Hurrey by the Washington bureau of Moving Picture World in order that the full facts surrounding the collection of this tax might be ascertained. Lack of a definite line of demarcation between moving picture and vaudeville houses, and the fact that in small towns both moving pictures and legitimate shows are put on at the same theatre, were given as the basic reasons for the bureau's inability to separate the returns.

Reported in Negative.

Separation of the returns has been suggested to the bureau several times, declared Mr. Hurrey, both by producers and exhibitors, and it is realized that more definite figures would be of considerable interest to the industry. At the same time, he pointed out, such figures would be of value to the bureau, since it would give revenue officers a good line on current business and would be of assistance in checking up on theatres believed to be "short changing" the government.

When the tax on admissions was first included in the revenue law, field agents were instructed to make an investigation of the situation with a view to ascertaining whether it would be possible to tabulate separately the returns from moving picture houses. They reported that an accurate separation could not be made for several reasons. One was that in many theatres in the large cities feature films were shown with one or two vaudeville acts sandwiched between the pictures. Such theatres were not moving picture houses in the strictest sense of the term, since they showed some vaudeville; but neither were they vaudeville houses, since moving pictures comprised approximately one-half of the program and sometimes more.

Difficulties of Classification.

Another disadvantage was the fact that in small cities and towns, often running as high as 5,000 in population, the one theatre that could stage legitimate plays could not run its shows a full week and, in order to keep open all of the time, showed films on such days when vaudeville or drama was not being run. These houses could be classified neither as legitimate houses nor as moving pictures theatres, and while it might have been possible to compel them to render separate reports for their moving picture and other business, it was felt that to do so would entail needless expense and bookkeeping upon the theatre owner.

"The matter has been considered carefully from every angle," Mr. Hurrey told the Moving Picture World representative. "We realize that separate figures would afford much-desired information to the moving picture industry and, at the same time, they would be of value to our agents. But in view of the confusion that exists as to how these other theatres should be classified, it is impossible to make a separation that would show accurate statistics. We have had the question up several times and have decided that a separation cannot be undertaken."

New Screen Magazine Bookings.

Among the latest bookings made by the New Screen Magazine, distributed by Universal are the following representative New York theatres: Moss' Prospect, Fox's Washington, Stanley Theatre, Duffield Theatre, and the 77th Street Theatre.

Several distinctively interesting subjects are contained in number 50 of the New Screen Magazine, including pictures of Soda Lake, California, one of the wonders of the world, a mineral garden showing how the combination of various salts dissolved in water will grow immediately into a beautiful miniature Mammoth Cave, "The Great Radium Robbery," a satire in mud, Dr. Angell's games for young folks, and a series of letter laughs.

Buffalo Managers Stage Luncheon To Bid Richard C. Fox Farewell

THE Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association and the Buffalo Motion Picture Exchange Managers' Association, connected with the Chamber of Commerce, united in giving a farewell luncheon in the Hotel Statler, Friday, January 16, in honor of Richard C. Fox, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky office in Buffalo, who leaves soon for his new duties in London as sales manager for the Fox Film Corporation in the United Kingdom.

The banquet was a sort of "get-together and bury the hatchet" affair, in fact, it was a love feast where exhibitors and exchange managers gathered to enact the "Romeo and Juliet" stuff in an effort to let bygones be bygones.

Mr. Fox, during his stay in Buffalo of about a year, has won many freinds in local film circles who will be loath to see him leave his present position, but believe that his real opportunity awaits him overseas. As a farewell token from his office, Mr. Fox was recently presented with a handsome gold fountain pen, suitably engraved.

The building will be at the head of film row. With the coming of these four exchanges to the North Franklin street section, all of the local film houses will have gathered together so that exhibitors, in the future, can do their "shopping" all in one block.

Cincinnati Holiday Business Was Good and Showmen Are Optimistic

HOLIDAY business in the Cincinnati picture theatres was excellent, the attendance during what is usually looked upon in theatrical circles as a poor season, being well up to the standard of previous weeks. In fact, all the theatres were crowded and capacity audiences viewed every performance.

The advent of the Palace as a combination picture and vaudeville house seems to have had no effect upon the business of the other theatres in the business district. Exhibitors generally are well pleased with the outlook for the future. The year just past undoubtedly set a new high record for attendance, but it is the consensus of opinion that the new year will far surpass the past one in this respect.

That it will witness the erection of several new pretentious theatres in the downtown section seems to be a foregone conclusion, work being already well under way on the new Ascher Theatre at Seventh and Vine streets, and plans being formulated for others. Financially, the past year has presented quite a problem for the managers, owing to advancing prices for service and labor, but provisions recently were made for taking care of these matters through increased admission charges. A spirit of optimism pervades the entire industry.

McMahan & Jackson, who operate the Gifts Theatre at Sixth and Vine streets, have just completed a deal whereby they will show at popular prices all the big productions of D. W. Griffith, under an exclusive contract. The first of these will be the new peace edition of "Hearts of the World," which will open at this house Sunday, January 18; others already booked being "The Mother and the Law," for the week of February 22, and the "Fall of Babylon," which will open March 21. Mr. McMahan states that this will be the first time that any of these features have been shown in the United States at popular prices. Admsision at this house is 20 cents, with the war tax included. This same firm operates an exchange and will have the agency for the Griffith features in southern Ohio.

Lyric Theatre Building Sold.

The Lyric Theatre building on Vine street has been sold by the Hueck Opera House Company to a syndicate of Cincinnati business men who have been quite active in the purchase of Cincinnati real estate during the past year, having purchased several large holdings, notably hotel properties. The Lyric, during the winter months, is under lease to the Shubert interests and this lease is said to run until May, 1921. It is utilized in the summer for big feature pictures, and last summer was under the management of I. Lisbon, of the I. Lisbon Amusement Company.

United Takes New Quarters.

The United Theatre Equipment, with offices on West Seventh street, has leased space on the ground floor of the new Film Exchange Building, at Pioneer and Broadway. The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has given up its quarters at 107 and 109 West Third street, and has moved to the Film Exchange Building, which is rapidly becoming a place of much activity. Several other exchanges are either moving into the new building or will do so in the near future, and there is much rivalry manifested in fitting up attractive quarters there.

Says 1919 Was a Record Breaker.

Harris P. W. Wolfberg, president of the Cincinnati Film Board of Trade, declares that the year of 1919 was a record breaker for the motion picture interests of Cincinnati. The amount of the exchange business in Cincinnati is declared to be the third largest in the United States, New York and Chicago alone leading it. The theatres in the district served by Cincinnati, which includes Southern Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and West Virginia, have flourished and it is said that there are a score or more of new houses now under construction. It is estimated that Cincinnati's activities in the moving picture field bring entertainment to more than 7,000,000 persons. The outlook for the coming year, according to Mr. Wolfberg, is most encouraging.

Equity Getting Busy on the Coast.

Davis, who controls the world rights, is making a big drive on thi production, and has arranged for an indefinite run at the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco, commencing the last week in January. Much propaganda work is under way among Catholic churches, schools and societies and arrangements have been made for billboard and newspaper advertising on an unusually extensive scale.

Charles Thall, manager of the San Francisco office, recently went to Los Angeles to install M. M. Stewart as manager of the branch maintained there and took advantage of the opportunity to see what was going on at the studios. Mr. Stewart was formerly manager for George H. Davis in the Middle West and succeeds Frank Powers, who has been appointed to a managerial position at the Garson Studios. H. L. On January 5 a complimentary luncheon was tendered to Mr. Johnson, an affair that was attended by about ninety members of the industry. Regrets were expressed that San Francisco was to lose another of its leading film men, but all rejoiced at the opportunities that have come to him to do bigger things in a national way.

Eugene Roth, of the California, Portola and Imperial theatres, acted as toastmaster and an interesting feature of the occasion was the presentation of a handsome gold watch on behalf of his film friends in San Francisco.

New First Run House.

The Jewel Theatre, adjoining the Rialto on Market street, San Francisco, has been taken over by the Sun Films, Inc., and will be opened as a first run house as quickly as it can be placed in shape. This theatre, which has a seating capacity of about 1,200 was built several years ago, but was closed after a run of but a few months, the owners shouldering a heavy loss. In the meantime, conditions have changed materially, and downtown houses are unable to care for the business offered, factors that the new owners believe will insure their success. A big organ is being installed, a jazz band has been secured and cabaret features are being worked out to supplement the screen entertainment.

Abe Markowitz, formerly assistant manager of Universal, but who has been in other lines during the past year, has been made manager of the San Francisco branch of Sun Films, Inc., succeeding J. N. Cohen, and will also direct the management of the theatre, which will be known as the Sun Theatre when it is reopened.

Theatre Company Dissolved.

Petitions hav ebeen filed at Modesto, Cal., for the voluntary dissolution of the Turlock Amusement Company which was incorporated for $75,000 last September for the purpose of conducting a moving picture house at Turlock, Cal. Missouri Showman Dies When His Theatre Burns

PATRONS of the Orpheum Theatre at Mexico, Mo., and the many friends of O. B. Thompson, 72 years old, owner of the theatre and probably the oldest exhibitor in Missouri, are mourning his tragic death on January 3, when the three-story theatre building in which he lived burned down and he was killed.

Choosing death in the flames to the uncertainty of a jump from a third-story window, the old theatre owner said goodbye to his only son, Shirley Thompson, 34 years old; and awaited his fate. The son, failing in his efforts to persuade his father to jump, finally leaped to save his own life after being badly burned. He suffered a broken leg, a broken arm and internal injuries, but is expected to live.

Members of the fire department and neighbors took the son to a hospital. The body of the father was recovered after the fire had been extinguished. The theatre was valued at $35,000 and was a total loss.

Arbuckle Plays Four Houses

For the first time in motion picture history, a comedy was featured last week simultaneously in New York's four biggest picture theatres. "Fatty" Arbuckle, in the Paramount-Arbuckle Comedy, "The Garage," held the screen at the Rivoli, the Broadway, the Strand and the Capitol.

"The Garage" is the last comedy "Fatty" made before his sojourn in more serious photodrama. Just at present, he is playing the sheriff in the George Melford Production, "The Round-Up," for Paramount-Artcraft.

Hayakawa's Role Unique in "The Beggar Prince"

THE BEGGAR PRINCE" affords Sessue Hayakawa a most interesting and unique role. The production, which was made for Robertson-Cole by Haworth from an original story by E. Richard Schayer, is a whimsical satire on pertinent and timely subjects, among them the disappearing belief in the majesty of kings.

Hayakawa plays a dual role, the contrasting characters of a tyrannical prince of the Far East and a poor fisherman who bears a remarkable resemblance to the prince. When the prince, attracted by the charms of the fisher-maiden sweetheart of Nikki, the fisherman, carries her to his palace, Nikki trails him there, beats him into unconsciousness, changes clothes with him and assumes the role of prince, while the real prince is thrown out, believed to be the fisherman.

The photography and settings are said to be marvels of artistry and originality, the sumptuousness and luxury of the gorgeous palaces of the Far East affording some beautiful sets. Some original and graphic Oriental dances are introduced in the throne room scene. Beatrice La Plante, Thelma Percy, Joseph Swickard, Bert Hadley and Buddy Post constitute an excellent supporting cast.

Large Gathering at "Teco-Simplex" Ball.

A monster "movie" ball was given by the Teco Products Manufacturing Company to the motion picture trade in the Gold Room of the Radisson Hotel, Minneapolis, recently and proved a great success.

Nearly 200 exchange managers, salesmen and exhibitors congregated for the affair. Each dance had a special name, such as "The Teco One-Step," "William Fox-Trot," "Paramount Waltz" and many others, and each vied with the other for the greatest number of encores.

Charles Perry, manager of the Minneapolis Strand Theatre, was the winner of the prize waltz. Manager Feinberg, of the Teco Products, was warmly congratulated for the manner in which he had arranged the reception, and those who attended are now awaiting the second annual.

Madge Kirby Engaged by Schlank.

Madge Kirby has signed a contract with Morris R. Schlank, producer, to play the feminine lead in a series of twenty-six two-reel comedies, featuring Hank Mann. She was formerly on the stage and later with Griffith, Lasky and Fox productions.

General Film Renting Company Buys "Auction of Souls" for British Isles

THE General Film Renting Company of England, recently purchased, through David P. Howells, foreign representative of First National Exhibitors Circuit, "Auction of Souls" for the British Isles. This picture was shown privately at the Queens Hall, London, to prominent persons and a trade showing also was given at the London Coliseum, where trade shows are very seldom held. Considerable enthusiasm was displayed at both screenings of the picture.

Negotiations for this spectacular production were carried out by H. D. Hardwicke, managing director for the General Film Company. Mr. Hardwicke has had considerable experience in film renting and at one time held a position with the Walturdaw Company. The General is looked upon in Great Britain as a progressive organization. This company recently signed a contract with G. B. Samuelson involving a large outlay, under which the former agrees to take and the latter agrees to make a minimum of fifteen pictures a year for six years, the sole rights of which will be vested in the General for exploitation throughout the world. It is the intention of Mr. Samuelson to utilize American screen stars in America and to introduce a system of star interchange, under which players from Great Britain will be seen in pictures made at Universal City and American favorites will be featured in productions made in the British Isles. The arrangement further provides for the filming of many book and stage successes.

The General Film Renting Company was founded in January, 1919, and its enterprise to date is sufficient to demonstrate what may be reasonably expected from this company in its future productions.

Claim Double Interest in "Tillie's" Revived Romance

IT is predicted by Tower Film Corporation, that "Tillie's Punctured Romance," the six reel Mack Sennett comedy which is being released on the state rights market, will be a bigger box office attraction as a revival than it was when first released. Thus do they build up their claim:

The success which the original met, and the popularity of the comedy throughout the country made a reputation for "Tillie" that no amount of advertising could hope to accomplish. The picture broke many records.

Those who have seen the comedy know how funny it is. They know how they laughed when they first saw stars like Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dressler, Mabel Normand, Chester Conklin and Mack Swain, in this one cast. They will want to see it again. Those who did not see "Tillie" when it was first shown have heard how good it is. They will not be likely to let the chance slip by to see the comedy about which they have heard so much.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance" went over originally without a line of exploitation. Now the Tower Film Corporation state that an intensive exploitation campaign is being inaugurated which will, they declare, outdo anything ever attempted for a film of this kind.

Practical and unique exploitation ideas are planned for the exhibitor's use. Special press notices, ad cuts, cartoons, advertising, etc., are also prepared.

Griffith Releases "Fall of Babylon."

D. W. Griffith's "The Fall of Babylon," one of the offerings in the Griffith repertory season at George M. Cohan's Theatre, New York, has been released by D. W. Griffith Service. This feature was sent on tour with two special productions immediately following the repertory season, and played as a regular attraction in combination houses throughout the east and middle west, carrying a special orchestra and other features. As a rental it is now being booked by Albert L. Grey, general manager of D. W. Service, 720 Longacre Building.

Ralph Ince To Be Lincoln.

In a story in its issue of January 17, under the headline, "Selznick tells of Americanization work to be done by the industry," Moving Picture World quoted Mr. Selznick as saying: "I am already making a picture of the life of Lincoln, in which Thomas H. Ince will play that part."

Ralph Ince will play the part of Lincoln in this production, and not Thomas H. Ince, as reported in the previous article.

The Hank Mann Two Reelers Ready.

Morris R. Schlank, producer of the Hank Mann comedies, announces the first three two-reel comedies featuring Mann, are now ready for distribution by Arrow on the state rights basis. They are titled "Broken Bubbles," "Paper, Paste and Poultry" and "A Roaming Romeo."

Real Hints on Display Advertising By a Master of the Compositor's Art

ALTHOUGH he was speaking on type composition before the convention of the United Typothetae of America and not on advertising before a convention of showmen, the remarks of Everett R. Currier are so well worth while and so applicable to show advertising that it will pay the reader of this department to borrow from his printer a copy of The Inland Printer for November and read the entire article. It is too long to be reproduced here, but it is well worth careful study.

Mr. Currier was speaking from the angle of the compositor. He was trying to tell his hearers how to get good advertising displays with type. He was not telling how to advertise, but how to set advertising. The heading runs: "What the eye receives the mind absorbs." That in itself is the condensation of the entire subject. The mind absorbs only what it sees, and the fundamental of all advertising is to convey to the mind, through the eye, the greatest amount of food for thought.

Make Your Stuff Stick

That is a lesson many advertisers never learn. They think that if they take a full page and fill it up with type and cuts they have a great advertisement. They have a large number of words, but it is always a question as to whether or not the eye receives so full a message. A full page used to get over one striking paragraph in eighteen point type is worth five thousand words of eight point which are not read. Mr. Currier says:

> There are layouts and layouts. A very simple layout may have required a good deal of thought to make it simple, and a highly elaborate layout may have absolutely no thought back of it, if by thought we mean grasp of advertising values and the skillful blending of the practical with the artistic.

Perhaps some of the readers will recall Life's famous competition in which the accepted stories were paid for according to the number of words left out. A word limit was set. Accepted manuscripts were paid for at the rate of one dollar for each word under this limit.

Condensation Makes for Effect.

It is the same way with advertising. Anyone can flood a space with words. It requires genius to condense those words into a few pithy paragraphs which shall have all of the effect of the bulk plus the value of brevity. It takes far more skill to say in ten words what you want to get over than to write five hundred words for the message. Your advertisement is not complete until you have condensed to the uttermost. Not until then is your message ready for the printer.

Mr. Currier speaks for the lighter faced types. He discusses some of the best faces to use, while declaring that any good face will yield good results in competent hands. He goes on:

> I have said nothing of our bold faces. These come at times within the pale of the legitimate or necessary, in spite of the fact that clear, bold and striking effects of display can be obtained with normal faces. But there are few bold faces which look anything but ugly, that do not disfigure instead of enhance the message. * * * I have yet to mention the richly decorative and leisurely black-letter or text types. There are few such types which are really useful on those pages which have to be readily absorbed by the mind. * * * Of the condensed faces and extra bolds, it seems to me that the less said the better, from the point of view of typographical attractiveness. There is little point in attracting attention only to repel. * * * It has many times occurred to me, as it must have to come of you, whether the printing art and industry would suffer, or whether indeed it would not benefit if we suddenly found ourselves with but one available type face —with the other thousand or two swept into the melting pot.

To Get Display Through Arrangement.

This last suggestion may sound a bit startling to those who live with a sample book and who think that they are not getting good results if they use plain faces. These are they who seek to make type pictures and not advertisements. What Mr. Currier seeks to drive home is that the arrangement of type rather than the beauty or lack of beauty in the face is what gives distinction and prominence to the essential of the advertisement—the idea. If you have a smashing good selling line it does not need to be dressed up in Della Robia. It does not need to be displayed in some extra bold extended face. Mr. Currier does not care about the type face so much as the display, but he does hold for a sightly looking face, and he knows that the black, smeary letter is not the most attractive.

Condensed type has no place in an advertising display, which, above all other things should be easy to read. The heavy face has no place in good display, but this does not mean that blackness in proportion to size is not permissible. Blackness disproportionate to width and height is what he decries.

Simplicity Is Desirable.

Simplicity is the chief essential, he contends, but adds:

> Simplicity is neither bareness or dullness, nor crudeness nor coldness, nor the leaving out of things that should have gone in. And certainly it is anything but weakness, which is fatal to any piece of printed matter.

Then comes his best advice. It is addressed to the compositor, but it will serve as well or the copy writer; particularly those who mark or at least indicate their type preferences. He advises:

> Find out the best and most logical way in which your headline or title can be placed, and make that the key to your design.

In theatrical copy the star or the play, or a combination of both, is the chief point. Decide upon this and make all other points have their proper relation to this chief point and only the most stupid compositor can go wrong.

Use Art Work Sparingly.

And lastly he adds a word for the art work and declares that he sees literally acres of space given to art work, apparently in an effort to give seeming class to poor display. He does not decry the use of border and ornament. He knows their value and the value of drawn design, but he pleads first for the type message, often overshadowed almost to the point of obliteration. Few advertisements cannot be bettered with border and ornament. He knows their value and the value of drawn design, but he pleads for the type message, often effaced almost to the point of nothingness. Few advertisements cannot be bettered with border or ornamental work, whether drawn or cast, but the design only serves to draw attention to the type. If it seeks to do more than this, it defeats the very end for which it is used. Mr. Currier is speaking only of type display. Some day we should like to hear what he has to say about the innumerable all drawn designs which are so proudly exhibited by showmen who think they are getting more for their space than they could get with type. We think it would prove interesting.

Enthusiastic Manager a Trifle Mixed

Oldham's New Theatre, Manchester, Tenn., opened lately with Fairbanks in "His Majesty, the American," and the management announced:

> We have put the price at 15 cents, not because the picture isn't worth the money, but because we want everybody to see, really, a wonderful picture.

Probably he meant to say "not because the picture is not worth more money," but what he prints is his record, and that is what he printed. A hint of better times is contained in the statement that the mechanism of the projection machines has been overhauled, "and there will be no stops or flickerings of the picture." Under these circumstances we would suggest "Better Times" as a more suitable opening attraction. As a further inducement a brand new player piano was installed. Things are picking up in Manchester. At any rate this is one of the few houses in the country which does not brag of its $20,000 organ.

Clever Ideas from Stanley Chambers Who Knows that White Spaces Pay Best

STANLEY CHAMBERS, of the Palace, Wichita, Kansas, does not always gets the stills he wants, but when he does not, he can generally do something with what he gets. Lately he had only a "clinch" still for a play, and he wanted to do something with it. He wanted to use a three twelves, and that cut would have looked foolish in so large a space, so he mounted it, painted in a black oblong 2½ inches wide by ten deep, stuck a crescent moon in the corner, ran a couple of banks of selling talk, and had as sightly an ad as you could ask for. He made a better showing than he might have done had a better cut been available, for he had a powerful attractor in the black strip with all of the advantage of an open space display.

A Four Tens and a Two Twelves.

One of the best of his recent efforts is the four tens for Mrs. Castle. There is not much to it in the way of argument, but the cut itself is a good sales talk and the few words are carefully weighed. He is employing a new idea in dating in the "Now until Saturday nite." This is better than the plain "Now" and much better than "Thurs., Fri., Sat." so often used. Sometimes, to make it emphatic he makes it "Now until Saturday midnight." Here there is an even more definite suggestion of a time limit. It is not a date; it is a last chance.

The Gish space is not so good because the cut divides the space too completely. For "What Every Woman Learns" he enclosed the cut in a question mark which dominated the space and added "A few scenes now may save a few scenes later," which is deep stuff. Above he uses "Ladies. If you are downtown, slip in and see this. Just tonight and tomorrow. A tip." For "The Miracle of Love" he enclosed his stills in hearts, running off into smaller hearts of black as he went up the space to convey the suggestion of a perspective. In most of his appeals he uses something from the main situation, and this, as a rule, is the surest way.

Best Advertisement for "Broken Blossoms"

The best advertisement for Broken Blossoms is the reprint of the story, "The Chink and the Child" from "Limehouse Nights," the powerful story from which Griffith derived his play. It was put out by the Greenwich Theatre, Greenwich, Conn., though it may be that these are supplied by the publishers of the book. It is certainly a pulling advertisement, for it arouses genuine interest.

Makes Effective Use of Three Color Calendar

The Bijou, Decatur, Ill., makes effective use of a three-color calendar which it issues monthly, printing the Sunday and holiday dates in red and the other days in green, in outline type. By bringing up the other dates for the spare spaces, it gets a five-week calendar. We reproduce a detail of the sheet, which is printed on the regulation 8 by 10½-inch sheet. The days are not regularly spaced, it will be seen, the boxes being determined by the length of time a feature stays. This, it would appear, is a favorite plan and from its very general use would appear to be the best.

It Pays to Do What the Other Man Does

Many exhibitors read all about the clever stunts of the other fellow and then tell themselves that it's a great idea, but their town is too small or too large or find some other excuse for plugging along in the same old cut and dried way. No town is too small for the average stunt. It may be so small that it will not pay to follow the original scheme, if it costs much money, but it is always possible to cut it down to fit the size of the town.

No town is too large for any stunt. A town is merely a collection of small villages. Each neighborhood is a town in itself and can be handled as such, and the big down-town houses can put on the stunt in so big a way that it fits the entire population. People used to say that New York was too large for a "street rube," yet a fake "Sis Hopkins" kept the town talking for a week and packed them into the Strand just as other impersonators packed them in the smaller towns. To plead that your town is too large or too small or that your patrons are too dead or too something or other is merely to confess that you are too lazy to get out and hustle for your share of the money. The smaller the town the greater percentage of its population you can reach with a given idea, but if you can reach 5,000 people in a city of a million, you will make just as much money as the man who stirs up every inhabitant of a 5,000 town. Quit kidding yourself and get busy.

Interesting Side Lights on Cut Using

Miss Davidson Solves a Problem About Ad Cuts

Annabel Davidson, of the Strand, City and Rialto theatres, Brockton, Mass., is having better luck with her advertising because she has wisely turned to type when she cannot get the cuts she wants. Readers will recall that she took some awful chances with poor cuts merely because they were cuts and she felt she needed them. Now she uses cuts only when she can get material suitable for the rather poor press work she can obtain, and the rest of the time she trusts to type and finds her confidence not misplaced. Type is better than a poor cut every time. It is better than a good cut, for that matter, unless the cut has a distinct selling value—and few cuts have.

Two Christmas Displays from Annabel Davidson.

These Christmas advertisements are double sevens each and they show up very well, though it will be noted that the Clark cut gives less display than the 24-point title of the comedy. The black five seems to be a sort of trade mark for the vaudeville show, and is used regularly, making this space easy to find on the page. Miss Davidson is advancing rapidly. If you are curious, turn back about a year and see the difference in her work. She is writing briefer, better copy, and handling type infinitely better.

Four Hundred-House Uses Weekly Program Spaces

H. L. Bock, of the Grand, Newark, Ohio, sends in a full page in two colors: the first local use of a two-color display for a theatrical display. He says he does not think much of those cuts but adds: "What are you going to do about it when the exchange hands you that stuff?" The town is small and the house seats only 400 so they cannot go to heavy expense to do what the exchange should have done. Personally we think we would sell those cuts for a "before taking" advertisement for a skin soap. It is about the best thing to be done. Then with the money obtained we would make up some advertising cuts. This pimpled face is about the poorest example of press work gone wrong that we have seen in a long time.

And they do not work as badly here as in some other displays we have seen, for Mr. Bock has laid out a very neat display, not too much text for the page, well chosen type faces and well written copy. He refers to himself as an amateur, but this work is far from being amateurish. It will stand comparison with the best. In the original the name, the two titles and the house name are in pink, which is probably intended for a red. The rest is in black. The red is rather weak, but it has the desired effect of attracting attention to the display, and only the strong lines are set in the color, so effect is not lost.

work in "Heart of Humanity," the side cut suggests the locals and the reverse cut gives a good display to the title. The text covers the high lights and the situation sentences at the bottom are going to bring in a lot of admissions. It very cleverly sums up the play, and piques curiosity. If you read the lines you will want to know if the man got into the room or not. That is better than telling the story in more ample form. A hint is better than an exposition. And proper space is taken to exploit the unusual cast of "Tom's Little Star," which probably brings into play more theatrical celebrities than any other of the productions of the Stage Women's War Relief series.

Half Tone Displays Seldom Equal Line

Here are a four fifteens and a three nines; sixty inches against twenty-seven, yet the smaller line display has twice the original punch of the half tone display, simply because it can be read. The probabilities are that the fan, who is looking over all of the advertisements, will read the reverse cut, but the really good advertisement also makes an appeal to the man who is not sufficiently interested in the pictures to puzzle over announcements.

Half tone and reverse cuts do not work as well as line and straight type, and less than half the area works better when it can be read. That same cut with the ballots and the girl on the ladder outlined in line and with the portrait in half tone would have worked well, unusually well, but the gray tint of the space spoils it. It looks even worse in the original than it does here, for at least here it is printed well, where the cheap ink used for the newspaper run results in a sleazy gray.

It Pays to Know What You Sell

Whenever an exhibitor says he has not made money with a good picture, it is reasonably certain to develop that he did not advertise it properly, and in most instances it will further appear that he did not know what he had to advertise, so he coasted. On one program before us, the first three days offer a racing story, with a lot of snappy talk about the play. It makes you want to see it. The Tuesday box shows

We are not going into detail regarding this big special, but we will say we are going to offer it at our regular photoplay prices and for good measure we are going to show you

There follows the title of the comedy. This program is printed in a small town in New York state. Possibly a majority of the patrons knew that "The Better 'Ole" had been one of the real dramatic hits of last season. Probably most of them knew that this was the Bruce Bairnsfather play, but there must have been some to whom these facts would have appealed, and yet not only was the play given this non-commital description, but there was a suggestion that the comedy was added as a makeweight to bring the offering up to standard. Something like this would have been better:

Here's the play which ran for an entire season at the Cort theatre, New York; a play which was shown by no fewer than eight touring companies last year. It was one of the big, outstanding successes of last season, and in the film it is seen to even greater advantage than on the stage. In spite of the bigness of the production, we are not going to raise prices. It's our treat. And we are also going to show

That would give the reader the impression that he was going to get something good at the regular price. And the next box prints a 150-word synopsis of that attraction and forgets to add any selling talk, though in a program a selling paragraph will do more work than a six-point synopsis. It is useless to book a big subject unless you have all of the material you need to advertise it with. Don't blame it on the exchange. Save your Moving Picture Worlds and keep an index by subjects. It pays, even though it may be a little trouble. Picture Theatre Advertising outlines several excellent systems.

Baltimore Chain Houses Hold Ads Well Paneled

For a chain display we like very much this half page from the Baltimore Sun. The four houses are under one management and by getting together they can be made to dominate the space. They usually have been linked up, but this arrangement of the space is more artistic than any of their previous efforts.

A Very Pretty Half Page for a Chain of Your Houses.

It is more harmonious and more nearly suggests the union of the four enterprises, though a bad signature plate for the Peabody in the lower portion of the centre robs that house of its proper prominence.

The New and Parkway plates cannot be spoiled in the stereotyping, but with a badly beaten flong the benday will not get a clean impression on the Peabody and the effect will be lost. This seems to be a bad stereotype mat because the cuts suffer as well as the name plate. The Garden comes up better because of the white line around the letters, but the Peabody is a straight signature on the benday background, and even in the original it can scarcely be read. This arrangement is so good that we think it will pay the house to hold to the general scheme, even if the space has to be reduced somewhat.

Double Displays for a Chaplin Look Well

Here are two displays from Toronto for Chaplin in a double appearance. Both are good, but one is much better than the other. Both are cross page spaces, but one paper is seven columns wide and the other is eight. The first is only 9½ inches high across eight, while the other is a 10½ across seven.

A Cross Page Nine and a Halfs with the Selling Talk in Short Lines, Easily Assimilated.

This latter gives the effect of a much larger space, though the actual area is almost the same. The first sells on lines and the second sells the longer features on story. The first gets the better display and is so much more easily read that the selling value is almost double that of the second. The descriptive lines are happily written. "Burglar by Proxy" is "The story of a boy who was a Romeo at heart and a Jimmy Valentine by circumstance," while the other is "A fascinating romance of a little slum girl who rises to fame on the stage overnight by a song hit." This, we think, will sell better than the longer descriptions in the other space.

In both displays there is much "wise" automobile talk. The signatures do not show up well. A larger "At the" between the two plates in the first example would have helped greatly to get the idea over, though we think that most people will wish to see Chaplin and will take the trouble to figure it out. The second space uses a better Chaplin cut and uses it to space the two divisions of the announcement. Here it would have helped to have pushed the centre cut up, even at the cost of dividing the name of the star and using a smaller type.

Then two large fists at the bottom, pointing to the two house signatures with an "and" in not less than 18 point condensed between would have emphasized the dual appearance. We think that with two houses it would have been better to have played for succeeding weeks, since this would give the second house a better chance. In a recent run in New York the third house to show "Male and Female" did better with the attraction than the houses where it was run the first and second week. Both of the other houses played to capacity, it will be admitted, but the third house had to do less advertising to get the same crowds.

The verbal advertisement helped along. In the same way the scheme would have worked for the Regent and Strand, and it might even have worked so well as to justify the first house charging the second for a portion of the first week's advertising.

Used Extra Twenty-fours to Boom Alice Lake

REALIZING that they have a star of unusual possibilities in Alice Lake, who overnight graduated from bathing girl comedies to front rank as an emotional star, the Metro organization heavily supplemented the Capitol's usual advertising for the first showing of this star in "Should a Woman Tell?"

Arrangements were made with the Van Buren company for 150 additional 24-sheet stands, of which twenty-four were electrically illuminated at night. Most of the display was concentrated in the vicinity of the theatre, but others were taken far afield in an effort to get as much publicity as possible for the newly risen sensation, and the location of the boards was carefully chosen in order to get the best showings possible. The idea was not to put out 150 stands, but to get the best possible display through the use of these stands, and each location was studied before being accepted.

Help to Save the Photoplay Departments

Sold a Play Without a Title by Using Cast and Producer's Brand

ADVERTISING a cast and a brand name without the title of the play offered was the means adopted by the Strand, Cleveland, to persuade a newspaper editor that the fans followed closely the news in the photoplay departments of the daily papers. The editor did not believe that the fans cared much. He did not care for the stuff himself, and he felt that all others must think the same way. The house management felt different and as a result of the argument they made a proposition.

They offered to run an advertisment which should consist merely of the house signature, the name of the production company and the cast of players. If the house played to normal business, the newspaper would increase the space devoted to photoplay news. If the business fell below the average the house management promised to drop the argument.

But They Played Safe.

No restriction was laid as to the play to be so tested and the Strand decided to work the stunt with the First National offering, Anita Stewart in "Her Kingdom of Dreams."

In addition to the house name the copy merely read: "A First National Production including Anita Stewart, with Kathlyn Williams, Anna Q. Nilsson, Robert McKim, Mahlon Hamilton, Tully Marshall, Edwin Stevens, Thomas Jefferson, Tom Santschi, Ralph Graves, Spottiswoode Aitken, Wesley Barry and Thomas Holding."

Names meant nothing to the editor and he thought they meant nothing to the fans, but he knows better now. The very oddity of the advertisement attracted attention, though no public explanation was given as to the reason for its use. On the array of names alone the average photoplay patron would have been sold, but many persons guessed from the cast the title of the play and others took the trouble to find out. As a result business was above the average and the editor had to admit that the point had been abundantly demonstrated.

There are Minor Stars.

Had he needed corroborative evidence he might have turned to W. Friedman, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre in the same town, for lately Mr. Friedman passed cards to his patrons requesting the names of the favorite players. Probably most managers would have been willing to gamble that they could have named the three players to get a majority of the votes, but the cards were a revelation.

Fully twenty-five per cent. did not name a single star of the first magnitude, the three choices being from the list of the lesser lights and practically all the others carried at least one name of a player not yet dignified by stardom.

It was the original intention to use these cards to aid in the booking of features, but it had the different result of changing the house style of advertisment and now the fullest possible use is made of the cast wherever possible, for it is now realized that the stars alone do not sell their pictures but that they are dependent upon the lesser players for support on the programs as well as on the screen.

In the case of "Her Kingdom of Dreams" all of the players mentioned above have distinct personal followings and it is clear that the day of the absolute star system is passing in favor of the ensemble topped by a well known player.

Prologues to Point Up Plays

BRIGHTENING up a picture with prologues and other personal touches gives it the advantages of both photography and the legitimate stage. Manager Abelson, of the New Lyric Theatre, Minneapolis, believes Mr. Abelson has been using prologues with good results ever since his advent at the New Lyric several months ago.

At the recent showing of Griffith's "Broken Blossoms," he added to the appeal of the picture by staging a ten-minute prologue. Mr. Abelson believes that having once seen the principal characters in person, as in a prologue, the audience feels better acquainted with them and all feelings of aloofness that have been attributed by carping critics to the pictorial drama are removed.

The Pantomime.

The curtain rose on a dark stage. Revolver shots rang out. Gradually a flickering light appeared on the stage. The light gradually growing stronger, revealed the figure of a girl strikingly like Lillian Gish—the heroine of the picture—on a Chinese couch. At the opposite side of the stage was an Oriental in Chinese garb. Between them was an image of Buddha.

The girl, slowly rising on her elbow, held out her hands toward the Oriental. He made as if to go to her, then suddenly realized the racial chasm that separated them. Mutely bowing to the god, he turned away with a gesture of renunciation. The lights slowly died out and the prologue ended.

The fantastic key to the story of the picture was epitomized by the brief pantomime.

And a Special Lobby.

Mr. Abelson made a very attractive outer lobby showing for the picture by having specially constructed sets covered with wall paper bearing a drooping flower design placed throughout the lobby. He even had screens covered with the wall paper placed in front of the glass doors leading into the inner lobbies.

With the thermometer clinging around ten degrees below zero, the patrons as fast as they purchased tickets, hurried into the inner lobby. The screens concealed the large crowds waiting inside for seats. Once within the inner lobby, the patrons became so interested in the special decorative and lighting arrangements placed for their benefit, that they forgot to be piqued at Mr. Abelson's little ruse. The lights and decorative scheme were worked out on the plan of a Chinese garden.

The advertising for the picture was designed by John LeRoy Johnston, advertising manager for Finkelstein and Ruben. The advertisements were for the most part original sketches by Mr. Johnston and carried out the broken blossoms idea.

There were hundreds of Queens in Egypt, but Cleopatra advertised.

It Was Play or Perish for These "In Old Kentucky" Negro Jazzmen

WHANGDOODLE bands are being used all over the country to exploit "In Old Kentucky," but Art A. Abelson, of the New Lyric Theatre, Minneapolis, probably had the hardest working troupe of the lot. He hired a jazz band to boom the Anita Stewart production and arranged for a daily street parade. Then the mercury dropped with a thud which nearly burst the bottom out of the bulb and the dusky artists found that the best way they could keep warm was to play. There was no complaint as to their willingness to work.

Mr. Abelson made the southern atmosphere the chief point of attack. Like many of the northern cities Minneapolis is strong for the minstrel shows and turns out in force whenever Al Fields comes to town. Mr. Abelson appealed to this angle and got the crowds, in spite of the minus sign on the thermometers.

A Big Cutout.

One method of appeal was a huge cutout with fifteen grinning darkies peering above the fence on which was lettered the announcement for the play. This ran clear across the front of the house, above the doorways, and was about four feet high.

The taste for minstrelsy was additionally catered to with a double quartet of negro singers in the old songs. They worked in a drop loaned by T. Hays, manager of the Bijou, showing a negro cabin in the foreground with the "big house" on the back drop. This was one of the sets used in the dramatic version of this story, and this fact served to get some additional presswork.

But the negro element was only one phase of the campaign for this big First National feature. The advance work was marked by the use of an unusually large number of window cards and one sheets, and when the temperature dropped some 20,000 post card invitations were sent out to a carefully selected list of addresses. It was argued that the personal appeal would help where so many women were kept off the streets by the cold and could not be reached by the pictorial display.

If Horseshoes Bring Luck.

A horseshoe twelve feet long, emphasizing the racing angle, was a powerful lobby attraction. The shoe was barely short enough to get in the space below the ceiling, and it carried within its oval a lettered card reading, "Now showing. Anita Stewart in the Good Luck masterpiece, 'In Old Kentucky.'" This "good luck masterpiece" was used on much if not all of the advertising and it is to be commended to those who have not yet shown this play. It was used in the newspaper advertising extensively and was the only sales line on the handsome lobby cards generously used.

In addition the song hook-up was heavily played for two weeks before the picture ran, all of the local music stores handling and exploiting this number.

On New Year's Eve a midnight matinee was given to a capacity audience, but capacity audiences were not particularly noticeable that week for it had become an old story by Thursday, for according to report the crowd broke one of the lobby mirrors and to quote Mr. Abelson "they broke the side ropes every evening, and we would have used heavier ropes only we were afraid the pressure would pull the wall out." It was a tribute to a systematic and well-planned campaign.

Three Midnight Matinee Performances in Ottawa

THE popularity of the midnight matinee as a New Year's Eve attraction is attested by the widespread use of this form of entertainment to watch the dying of 1919. From all over the country come reports of these special showing, and Ottawa, Canada, offered no fewer than three, the chief of which was presented by Harry Pomeroy, of the Strand.

The special gala performance opened at 11 p. m., with the screening of a Mack Sennett Comedy and this was followed by cornet and vocal solos. At the death of the old year, a tableau, "Welcome, 1920," was presented, the central figure being a Father Time character with hour glass and scythe. The hour of twelve was tolled on a large bell that had been installed in the theatre for the occasion, and at the twelfth stroke quantities of confetti were showered upon the crowd that packed the house. Serpentine streamers were also quickly distributed and the crowd became both enthusiastic and active in its demonstration. The patrons next indulged in community singing, after which a Scotch act was presented. The finale was a snappy minstrel show, which was staged by Jack Grace and Company.

Tickets for the midnight performance were sold in advance, and a general admission of twenty-five cents was charged The house was practically sold out several days before the event, as Manager Pomeroy had made several newspaper announcements and also exhibited an attractive notice in the lobby.

Midnight shows were also conducted in the Centre and Domion theatres, where soloists and vaudeville acts were featured principally. The Dominion charged up to $1 for its special performance.

Ringing the Changes on "For One Weekly Only"

HERE'S a little idea from Oscar A. Doob, Paramount's Cincinnati hustler, that will give a live exhibitor, who likes to make his advertising "stick out," something to think about in his idle moments (has he any?). Doob has been announcing photoplay engagements for so long a time and so often that he is striving to find as many new ways of saying "for one week" or "for two days," etc., etc., as he can. Something different, you know. Here is part of his list to date; maybe you can use some of these or add your own to the list:

For seven days.
Opening a glorious week.
Seven enchanted days and nights, for "Male and Female."
One week of inspiration (for "Miracle Man").
One Wondrous Week (for "Everywoman").
A Week of Delight.
Seven Days of Mirth.
Seven Happy Days.
It Runs (with speed) for a week.
A Week of Rollicking Romance.
Cheer-up Week.
One Week Without Weeps.
A Week of Perfect Pelasure.
Let's have some new ones! Kick in!

Boy Scouts Are the "Soldiers of Fortune"

Boy Scouts of Two Colors Help to Popularize "Soldiers of Fortune"

ALMOST everywhere the Boy Scouts have been used to help put over "Soldiers of Fortune" and this stunt has been uniformly successful, but it remained for Fred Dolle, of the Alamo, Louisville, to use both black and white scouts for his publicity stunt.

He induced the Evening Post to sponsor the showing to the boys, and also interested the members of Camp Zachary Taylor in the event. The Post made so much of the idea that the negro boys woke up and waited upon the manager with a request that they be included in the showing.

Although he does not cater to the colored population, Mr. Dolle was quick to see the advertising value of this demand and he promptly arranged for a special morning showing at one of the negro theatres, which gave a lot more publicity to the original showing and at the same time avoided anything approaching a race riot.

A Band 'n Everything.

The Post's performance was scheduled for the morning of New Year's Day, and the scouts formed ranks at the armory and preceded by the band of Camp Zacchary Taylor Post paraded to the house. Major General Charles P. Summerall, commandant of the post, was the chief speaker in the brief exercises which preceded the showing of the film, but the scout executives were also included in the arrangements and their co-operation brought out the full force of the Louisville scouts, though no great amount of persuasion was required.

Banners announcing that the boys were on their way to the Alamo to see "Soldiers of Fortune" were carried in the parade and gave a definite point to the advertisement of the film, though this was scarcely needed, since the Post had carried front page stories for a week or more preceding the showing and everyone knew all about it.

It is this angle which makes the newspaper angle so effective. If such a stunt is presented as an activity of the newspaper, the publication will give columns of front page publicity, whereas many lines would be accorded a purely house function. It gives an added punch to the house efforts and most live newspapers appreciate anything in the line of a good circulation stunt.

Used 7,500 Handbags.

Another and more original stunt was the distribution of 7,500 shopping bags in lots of 1,500 each to five of the leading stores. These bags were of the sort familiar since the cash-and-carry system came into use during the war, but Mr. Dolle put the finishing touch to his publity by imprinting the name of the firm on the bags along with his own advertisement, the copy reading "Buy your ———— at Blank's and see 'Soldier's of Fortune' at the Alamo," the blank being filled in with the line carried by each concern.

None of the five houses conflicted in their lines, save in a superficial way, and each was a leader in its own line. For a time it was impossible to visit the shopping center without encountering these bags.

And the Result.

As a result of all this, Mr. Dolle wired the Realart offices that he had had a continuous turnaway from a little after two until half past nine on the opening day, in spite of the inevitable poor weather which seems to follow all extra publicity stunts.

According to the manager, the house ran $1,500 the opening day, which was an average of $1.50 per seat on the day, and the business kept up well throughout the week.

His paid advertising display was not particularly heavy, since he got most of his publicity free. He started with a blind advertisement, merely giving the title without mention of the house and then ran up to two column displays as the opennig came closer.

Red Cross Gave Special Showing to Poster Ads

RUNNING three consecutive Realart pictures for one week each to introduce the brand, A. G. Talbot, of the American Theatre, Denver, made special efforts to get strong publicity to support the extended runs.

About his best stunt was worked with "Soldiers of Fortune." This came during the Red Cross Seal drive and Mr. Talbot announced a special benefit performance for the fund, which not only attracted favorable attention but gave him an unusual poster display. The cut shows the posters displayed against the walls of the Post Office building, the only instance of the use of that building for a lithographic stand.

Played Up Juvenile Side.

For "Anne of Green Gables" he played up the juvenile angle and used a cut-out figure of the star, leading a caricature goat, above the box office, while for "Erstwhile Susan" he featured the stills to make known the star.

The three weeks run, which was patterned after the recent Tom Moore campaign, put Realart on the local map with a bang where the same three pictures, separated by other features, would not have had the same effect.

Used Latticed Lobby to Boom "Broken Blossoms"

PLAYING up the Chinese angle of "Broken Blossoms," C. G. (Pat) Argust, of the Princess, Colorado Springs, Colorado, built a new lobby for the showing, a lattice framework heavily draped with artificial vines and illuminated Chinese lanterns. In the center, directly in line of approach to the box office, he erected a "sacred arch" and played up a press story to the effect that the sacred arch was held in peculiar veneration by the Chinese, who believed that all passing under such an arch would have good luck. As the arch gave upon the box office, it assuredly was good luck to Mr. Argust. In among the lanterns were a number of wind chimes of glass and at intervals a set of temple bells were sounded to supplement this effect.

The device not only made business for the attraction, but it sent the patrons into the theatre already prepared for the atmosphere of the play, heightening the effect of the Griffith drama.

These Cost Little and Pay Big Returns

Just What One Man Would Do to Combat Prejudice

LATELY we asked what exhibitors would do in a town of 11,000 in which one third were Socialists and 2,000 were foreigners. As an additional problem, there existed considerable prejudice toward the pictures on the part of the church element.

Brian B. Vivian contributes some good ideas in solution, though his solution to the first part of the problem offers a remedy worse than the disease, for he writes that he would turn socialist and run his house to suit. The chances are that he would attract but a small percentage of the radical element and certainly would hopelessly damn the pictures with the greater proportion of his public.

On the other hand Mr. Vivian gives some suggestions on the handling of the Sunday School situation which are distinctly good and which are passed along to Mr. Wolfberg for the benefit of his inquirer. Mr. Vivian writes:

Mr. Vivian's Hints.

My own experience taught me a simple way of overcoming the prejudice of the superintendent of schools and the ministers at the same time. I gave free matinees on Saturday morning for the children. I ran a straight and exclusive program of scenic and educational pictures, with a good, clean comedy. I featured a certain single reel educational and gave away prizes for the best essays written by the children on the subject. I obtained three teachers (later the superintendent) as judges, paid them for their time, who awarded the prizes. The prizes were awarded the following Saturday and the winning essays read in the schools and printed in the papers. This created much interest among the parents also. I arranged for one of the ministers of the town to give a short moral talk or lecture at each matinee. Impress on the good Fathers of the town that you are starting a "Better and cleaner pictures movement."

I am a great believer in "Advertising through children." I pulled a rank lemon out of the hole in a town of 12,000 and the kiddies really did the trick. I organized a boys' club. Gave a benefit for the purpose of fitting up a gymnasium. Got the boys out selling tickets for the benefit and each boy that sold a certain number of tickets was given a white sailor uniform. Although the uniforms were ordered in only three sizes, the measurement of every boy was taken and he was made to feel that it was made to his special order. Every business man, minister and Mother and Father in town got behind the movement.

Try for the Schools.

There is a splendid suggestion in the school scheme. In a town of 11,000 it will probably be possible to interest the local paper and get it working with the house, even to the extent of printing the prize winning essay. It would be best to take up this scheme with the business manager rather than the editor, for the stunt should be offered as a circulation getter rather than as an editorial feature, and the business manager would be more apt to give attention to the scheme. Anything which hooks the schools to the pictures is good.

In the same way it would pay to make an appeal to the churches with some of the really good films now offered. Get up a union service at the largest church and run one of the newer style pictures, permitting each of the ministers to follow with a ten minute address on the theme of the picture. It can be done, because it has been done.

Treated Six-Footers to Tickets to the Strand

OFFERING free admission to any one over six feet four seemed to E. O. Weinberg, of the Strand, Buffalo, to be a pretty safe proposition, so he framed an advertisement to cover the offer and figured that perhaps a couple of men would drop in to get by the gate without a ticket. The copy was plain, running across two columns.

"SIX FEET FOUR"
Do you measure that tall?
If so, you will be admitted free.
THUR.-SAT. HAYAKAWA in "The Illustrious Prince"

Mr. Weinberg's Advertisement.

What he did not realize was that out at the ship yards and in the industrial plants were many lake giants, and they all seemed to have seen the advertisement. Mr. Weinberg had figured that he had his advertising return when he saw the display in print, but so many six footers came that they gave the lobby a distinct ballyhoo and what had been intended as a good catchline proved to be a far better exploitation stunt. It was a case of building better than he knew, for he got real publicity out of the idea and the best of it worked for the house when the men went back to their mates and told with a grin how well they had been treated.

In some theatres a measuring stand was erected with the beam at the proper heighth, but the stunt works no matter how it is handled, though the more fuss made over the measuring the better the return in publicity.

Played to Service Men with Rinehart Story

TWENTY-THREE and a Half Hours Leave," played at J. A. Partington's Portola Theatre, San Francisco, to large business. The main factor was the work done by John D. Howard, Famous Players-Lasky exploitation representative in San Francisco.

Through the executive secretary of the American Legion, Howard arranged for an announcement to be made at all the headquarters of the San Francisco posts, to the effect that the picture based on the Saturday Evening Post story by Mary Roberts Rinehart was to be run at the Portola Theatre. The secretary also gave him access to a list of some six thousand ex-service men and all of them received this circular letter announcing the picture:

Hello Buddie:

Remember some of the funny things that happened in camp?

We got a great "kick" out of them, didn't we?

We were all "boobs" once and pretty seedy rookies, though, perhaps, we didn't care to be told about it. And those uniforms—how we envied the fellow with the tailored suit!

Remember the great story by Mary Roberts Rinehart that was in the Saturday Evening Post not so very long ago, "Twenty-Three and a Half Hours Leave?"

We all got a "kick" out of it because it was so realistic. The rookie sergeant made a bet that he would dine with the C. O., although he didn't know how he was going to get away with it. He had 23½ hours in which to do it, and he sure had some experiences.

Well, Thomas H. Ince has made a corking good picture from the story and it's just the picture to introduce his two new stars—Douglas MacLean and Doris May.

The picture is to be at the Portola Theatre for a week, starting Sunday, November 30, and believe me, it's a Knockout.

Make it a point to take it in, as I am sure that you will like it, and get as many laughs out of it as any picture you have ever seen.

Best of luck, old top!

Bill.

The result was that the ex-service men and their families predominated in the audiences throughout the week at the Portola, so much was the interest worked up among soldiers and former soldiers. This interest was increased, too, by the special matinee which was arranged for the wounded boys at the Letterman Hospital, the event drawing wide and free newspaper publicity.

On the Saturday night preceding the opening of the picture, two thousand cards reading "Closed, 23½ Hours Leave" were tied on the doors of the downtown stores and 20,000 throwaways were distributed.

The weather was bad all week, but this didn't keep the crowds away, and a return engagement was booked for the week of December 14, when the business exceeded all expectations.

Used Novel Cut-Out for "The Hellion" Feature

THE Alhambra, Cincinnati, used a novel idea for a cut-out for Margarita Fisher in "The Hellion." The head and hands of the "Hellion" were pasted onto the dress of the "Queen of the Cabaret," giving a hint of the dual nature of the part and at the same time exciting no little curiosity. Any departure from the usual will attract attention and this proved to be a pulling stunt.

Some men will spend a hundred dollars in the newspapers who will not spend ten dollars on their lobby. Advertise everywhere.

A Fine Splash for "The Tong Man"

Ruffner Broke Records When Chinese Helped Him

JUST before he severed his connection with the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco, Ralph Ruffner hung up a new house record for his successor to try for. One of his last features was Hayakawa in "The Tong Man," done from Westover's story of old San Francisco's Chinatown. He was quick to perceive the local value of the story and began to work with two-inch, single-column ticklers before going to the larger spaces These ticklers were characteristically expressed and even in a town the size of San Francisco they attracted attention.

His opening day space was a two fives, and this pulled, but the fates were kind to Ruff and that same morning the newspapers came out with a statement that counsel for the Chinese "Six Companies" was about to sue out an injunction restraining the showing of the film, on the grounds that it was a libel upon the race, produced by a Japanese purely in a spirit of revenge for the Chinese boycott of Japanese goods.

As Though Made to Order.

Ruff lost no time in writing to the newspapers, defending Hayakawa against this absurd charge. It was made to order advertising and already the people were crowding into the house. He hustled around to increase his space to a three eights for Monday advertisement and used this as a two eights for the house and the other column for a reproduction of the news item of the day before.

This he ran with an appeal to the possible patron to "Go while the going's good," announcing that the Rialto would continue to show the subject until stopped by due process of law.

Three eights is a lot of space for a week day advertisement for San Francisco with space selling at 50 cent an agate line, but that did not worry Ruff. With a Sunday business of $1,908 for a 1,400-seat house, he felt that even at $7 an inch he had news to spread, and he spread it.

Used the Clipping.

He figured that the newspaper clipping would work harder and be more convincing than merely using the fact in larger type, so he took sufficient space to permit the clipping to be reproduced without change, using a 24-point rule across the three columns to hook the clipping to his formal display, but using this only top and bottom instead of wasting space with a side frame.

It is this faculty which makes Ruffner and a few others showmen instead of exhibitors. They know instinctively what will sell film and they are quick to avail themselves of any break which may come their way. Only lately he buried his five-reel feature to play up the U-boat campaign in a news reel and he figures that 200 feet in the news is worth 5,000 of merely picture. He knows, too, that the harder he booms the feature the more money he will take in, and that additional space, in reason, will bring back the largest return.

He went out of his San Francisco engagement in a blaze of glory and it will take some tall hustling to beat the record he has hung up.

CHINESE ROUSED BY FILM DRAMA
Play Called "The Tong Man" Is Declared to Be Propaganda to Help Japanese.
Charging that the motion picture, "The Tong Man," in which Sessue Hayakawa, Japanese actor, plays the leading role, is Japanese propaganda to place the Chinese people in an unfavorable light, C. H Chu, Chinese consul general in San Francisco, yesterday appealed to Chief of Police D. A. White, asking him to suppress the production of the film in this city.
A private showing of the film was given yesterday before the Chinese Chamber of Commerce, the Chinese Six Companies and representatives of the Chinese Consul.
This was followed by a request from the Consul to John L. McNab, attorney for the Six Companies, to take legal action to prevent the production.
Officials of the Six Companies said: "The picture is outrageous. It is simply propaganda to mislead Americans as to the character of the Chinese."
Corporal Peter Peshon, head of the police morals squad, who has supervision of motion pictures, said that the picture was not immoral, but he did not approve of the wholesale murders and killings which are depicted in the film, including the slaying of San Francisco policemen.
Citing the instance of the suppression of a motion picture at the Panama Pacific Exposition here in which underground Chinatown life was shown, Attorney McNab said that injunction proceedings to prevent the picture being shown here probably will be taken.
"Until I see the picture I cannot say what will be done, but it is a fact that pictures have been stopped in which a group or class of people is misrepresented," said McNab.
"If we stop the picture here we will take the necessary legal steps in every other city in which it is advertised to appear."
"The Tong Man" is taken from "The Dragon's Daughter," a story by Clyde C. Westover. It is said to depict wars of the tongs and the activities of the "hatchet men."
Lee See Nam, editor in chief of "Young China," a morning newspaper, said that all the Chinese who saw the picture considered it spite work on the part of the Japanese, who because of the recent boycott of their goods by the Chinese are very bitter and seek revenge.
It is absurd for a Japanese to play the part of a San Francisco "hatchet man," Nam said.

Projection Department

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Attention, Please

The Society of Motion Picture Engineers at its Philadelphia meeting appointed an "Educational Committee," of which the editor was made chairman. This committee consists of the chairmen of all other committees. Its first duty was to submit to the society some plan for projectionists' examination.

The general idea was that the society could adopt a general outline for examination which would serve as a guide to examining boards, and at the same time indicate to projectionists what, in the opinion of the society it is essential that they should know.

At the last meeting the committee submitted the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

The Report.

The projectionist of the modern photoplay theatre is placed in full and direct charge of machinery of considerable value, the efficiency and life of which will depend largely upon the skill and intelligent care it receives.

He is placed in full and direct charge of films which may, in course of a year, reach the total value of a quarter of a million dollars (eight reels, daily change, at $100 per reel amounts to $292,000) every foot of which may, by unintelligent work on the part of the projectionist, be subject to unnecessary strain and damage.

He is placed in full and direct charge of the optical system through which photoplays are projected and presented to audiences, the unintelligent selection and adjustment of which may cause very serious loss of light, hence electrical energy, hence coal, as well as seriously detract from the beauty of the presentation upon the screen.

In Charge of Projection Room.

He is also placed in charge of a projection room containing an electrical installation which may, by unintelligent care or through faulty equipment or wiring, cause heavy loss of electrical energy, or even serious fire hazard.

In the act of protection the projectionist brings the highly concentrated light ray from a powerful electric arc to bear directly upon a highly inflammable nitro celluloise film, which act involves serious fire hazard unless the matter be handled skilfully.

It would therefore seem but an act of ordinary precaution that the projectionist be subject to examination by some competent body as to his knowledge of the various principles involved in the intelligent handling of the items before set forth.

For Consideration and Comment.

To this end, we, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, would suggest that the following be set before the industry, through the various trade papers, for consideration and comment and that final action thereon be had at our next regular meeting:

First

That since branches of many industries are involved in the matter of competency, examining boards consist, when practicable, of one state or city official, one practical projectionist, one representative of the film exchange interests and one exhibitor.

Second

That the examination be such as will tend to determine the applicant's ability to handle the electrical equipment that he is likely to encounter within the territory covered, intelligently and efficiently; also his ability to locate troubles therein and remedy same.

This equipment may include motors, generators, mercury arc rectifiers, transformers, switches and wiring.

Also his knowledge of the national electrical code as applied to the equipment likely to be placed in his charge.

Third

The examination should be such as will determine the knowledge of the applicant of the mechanics of the projection machine, which will include its correct adjustment, the effect of undue wear at various points, and the correct adjustment of its tensions.

Fourth

The examination should be such as will determine the knowledge of the applicant as to the optical train of the projector, including proper selection and adjustment of lenses for one or more given conditions, so as to reduce light loss to a minimum, at the same time securing the best possible presentation of the picture on the screen.

Fifth

The examination should be such as will determine the knowledge of the applicant as to the correct handling and safeguarding of films while in the projection room.

Sixth

The examination should determine the knowledge of the applicant as to local laws governing projection room construction, equipment and practice.

Seventh

This body would recommend state rather than city examinations, with an agreement whereby each state would recognize the license card of other states for a limited period of thirty days, so that projectionists of traveling shows would not be subject to the annoyance of passing an examination in each stated visited.

As may be seen, the Society approved the proposition that this report be published in the various trade papers and comment thereon invited.

We therefore set it before you and ask that you send to us, for placing before the society at its Montreal meeting, such comments as you may think helpful or pertinent.

Difference in Light Values

The value of powerful light for projection was brought home to me recently in convincing fashion.

Over at Loew's Metropolitan, Brooklyn, I witnessed the presentation of "Fair and Warmer," incidentally thoroughly enjoying it. Both the producer and director are to be complimented on its uniform excellence and the Metropolitan projectionist is to be congratulated on his good work in its rendition on the screen.

In the Loew presentation the light was powerful and the night scenes were correctly tinted, with result that every detail of the play was vividly visible.

So well was I pleased with the clean, entirely wholesome and at the same time uproarously funny comedy of the play that when I found that next night it would be on at Loew's Bijou (Brooklyn), I went to see it a second time.

I shall always be glad I did, since the relative value of light brilliancy and tinting was brought home to me with great force.

Much Beauty Lost.

In the Metrolopitan presentation the play was vivid in all its details. In the Bijou, due to a less brilliant light, hampered by air dense with tobacco smoke, and, I think, to greater density of tinting, much of the beauty of the presentation was lost.

For instance: at one point one of the husbands is at the telephone making a date for a poker party, which, for friend wife's benefit he calls the "Mystic Shrine." At one point in the conversation he places his finger on the telephone hook, depressing it so that he really is not talking to the party at the other end at all, but merely into the receiver for friend wife's benefit.

In the Metropolitan rendition all this was plainly visible. In the Bijou rendition, although I was closer to the screen than at the Metropolitan, I could hardly make out this bit of by-play and would not have caught it at all had I not known it was there.

Why Not Uniform Tinting?

I said I thought the print I saw at the Bijou was more densely tinted than the one I saw at the Metropolitan.

Of this I am not entirely sure because weak light would have a tendency to make the tinting seem more dense. But I am nevertheless pretty sure it was actually more dense and if so, inquire as to why similar scenes of plays cannot be tinted to precisely the same value?

According to Eastman's book on film tinting and toning, a bath of given strength, at given temperature, applied for a given time will produce a given result, and no other.

Too heavy tinting injures or destroys the intended effect and, in addition, makes for uniform density, which dulls the whole picture, and renders it less interesting to the audience, besides preventing the grasping of finer details of action, such as that named.

Factor That Detracted.

Whether the inferior screen brilliancy of the Bijou was due to lower amperage, poor adjustment of projector optical system elements, objective unsuited to the condition, smoke in the air or poor screen surface, or to a combination of all or a part of these various things I am unable to say, except that the smoke in the air certainly had some effect, but the lack of screen brilliancy and (probably) greater intensity of toning certainly operated to very greatly detract from the value of the production.

Busy Man; Not Asleep

Carl M. Henninger, Chief Projectionist, Jewell City, Kansas, orders handbook, lens chart and question booklets and says:

We are installing two more theatres, so am a busy man. Will write at length later.

Have a projection room ten feet square. Have two projectors and run late feature films only.

Seating capacity about 250, in a town of probably a bit less than 1,000. We get twenty-seven to fifty-five cents for features, so you see we are not asleep.

Kindly send address of Atchison local and any other near-by unions.

Am sending address of Atchison and Topeka locals, but the good friend is, I think, without the jurisdiction of the Lincoln, Nebraska, union, of which I also send address.

Must Have a Drag.

Suppose the two other houses are in other towns. You probably have a drag on out-of-town people if you fill up at those prices in a town of less than 1,000.

Many small-town theatres succeed by carefully working up patronage from farming communities, especially if there be interurban trolley service.

Use of Uncle Sam's post office for distribution of advertising matter concerning programs is used to most excellent effect.

Another successful plan is to establish program billboards at school houses and prominent corners throughout outlying territory, posting programs thereon once a week.

This is cheaply done by means of a fliver or Harley Davidson and side car. Nope, you are not slumbering, neighbor Henninger. Let us hear from you again.

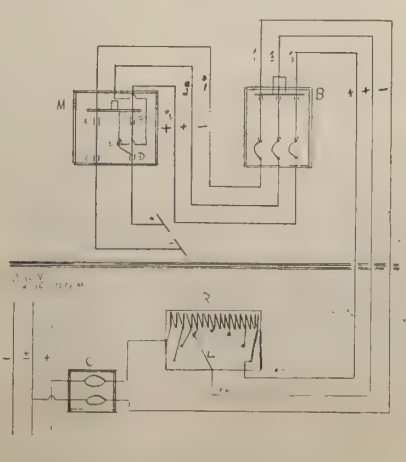
Excellent Scheme

John Auerbach, the projection equipment of whose Long Island summer home was described and illustrated on page 815, of December 13 issue, also has a one-machine installation in his town house, concerning one phase of which he writes as follows:

The accompanying sketch shows wiring, for projection purposes, in my New York house, 9 East Eighty-second street. The diagram below the heavy line indicates the cellar, where rheostat is located. Above the line indicates projection room, which is two floors up. B is projection room cut-out and C the cellar cut-out. R is rheostat and L the movable lever by which resistance is cut in or out. M is machine table switch.

The voltmeter and ammeter connections are not shown, as they would only tend to complicate the drawing. By placing the rheostat in the cellar I have more room upstairs, and do away with the heat generated by the resistance.

The wiring scheme is, I think, very ingenious, and was suggested by Mr. Soons, Chief Electrician of the Precision Machine Company.



Wires Are Number Four.

Wires are number four size, and the circuit is fused in two places at 70 amperes; in the cellar with knife contact cartridge fuses, and in the projection room with link fuses.

The rheostat, which is adjustable (40-70 amperes), I have set at the point which will give me about 52 amperes at a 60-volt arc, when the grids become heated.

When, however, I first strike the arc with cold resistance in series, or when a new trim is being burned in, it would be necessary to make trips to and from the rheostat, first to cut in resistance, and then to cut out same.

The wiring scheme saves these trips, the entire trick being done by the specially constructed machine table switch, M.

This switch is hinged at C and D, and makes in all, three contacts, A, B and E. A and B are very high contacts, so that the switch first engages with them, contact E being too low to make connection at first.

The Operation.

Now for the practical operation of the device. The machine table switch is first closed sufficiently to engage contacts A and B, and the arc is then struck.

By following the wiring, it will be seen that the arc is now being fed by wires No. 1, the negative neutral, and No. 3, the positive, which is connected to the rheostat, so that all the resistance is in series with the arc. When the grids begin to warm up, or if the new trim is being burned in when the crater begins to shape, the switch is depressed until point E engages.

This is accomplished without breaking the arc, as the switch continues to make contact at A and B. As soon as contact E is reached, the current, following the path of least resistance, feeds the arc through wires No. 1, negative and No. 2, positive, which jumps the amperage to whatever point the adjustable resistance is set for, proper adjustment, of course, being made by the projectionist in the arc length.

This plan for escaping the rush of current due to the comparatively low resistance of cold rheostat grids when arc is first struck is excellent It is easy to adopt, requiring only a special machine table switch.

It is recommended to the favorable consideration of projectionists who use current direct from the lines, through resistance.

Van Allen Again

Van Allen's query seems to have met with popular response. Marvin H. Thoreau, Victoria, B. C., has the following to say concerning same: You requested answers to questions propounded by Van Allen December 20 issue; also that we point out anything he failed to mention in giving the data. Well, Van Allen neglected to say (a) whither he used M Bi-C or plano convex condensers; (b) objective diameter; (c) objective working distance.

As to the line-up in general, his .75 Columbia and 11/32 Silver Tip carbon combination is too large. With ⅝ Columbia and 5/16 Silver Tip he would get a stronger, whiter light and a better defined spot. In my opinion his distance from crater to rear lens (3.5 inches) is too much for fifty amperes, but this will, of course, be automatically corrected by correct condenser combinations. His distance of 14⅞ inches from front of front condenser lens to film is too short. If his condensers are plano-convex it should be a trifle more than 17 inches. (To center of condenser combination, not front of front lens.—Ed.) He having said they were 6.5 and 7.5.

Will Gain in Two Ways.

With his condition I would prefer a 6.5 meniscus and an 8.5 bi-convex, with 19 inches from front condenser to film. (See comment above.—Ed.) By increasing his distance from condenser to film he will gain two ways. He will bring the crater nearer the lens and narrow the divergence of the ray beyond the aperture.

Also the aerial image will be smaller with the lamphouse further back, which permits of a narrower revolving shutter master blade, thus increasing illumination and reducing flicker.

Either of the above conditions requires an objective diameter of approximately 2.25 inches at 5.25 inches working distance.

He would get matched lenses. Seems to me he should get a picture larger than 15.5 feet at that distance. Better measure again.

Correct in the Main.

A well written, intelligent letter. In the main the observations are correct, but it does not necessarily follow that increasing the distance from center of condenser combination to film will bring the arc closer to lens if lenses of different focal length are used. We would rather have seen the carbon size matter treated from the viewpoint of carbon capacity.

The best results are obtained when carbons are loaded at about five amperes below the point where they start to needle.

In the Dark

M. J. Rother, Hastings, Minnesota, writes:

Am very much in the dark concerning the following and would like carbon of reply at once. I understand that a three-wing shutter cuts 50 per cent. of the light if the wings and light openings are equal. What I want to know is if light from another source were projected to the screen during the time the light is cut off by the shutter of the projector which is projecting the picture, would there be light loss and flicker, the light to be proportioned to the density of the scene being projected and to be white in color.

It's a Poor Week.

It is a poor week, friend Rother when that question is not asked at least once. It seems such a reasonable thing that illuminating the screen during the dark spaces would reduce flicker.

And so it will BUT it will murder the high lights of your picture. It will destroy the contrast between the whites and blacks and turn your picture grey.

The scheme has been tricd out something like a thousand times and the first time it has been made commercially successful is in the Extralite shutter, which, however, only lets through a small portion of the light and lets it through in a way that is all its own.

Don't waste time and energy on it. It is an esay looking nut, hard to crack.

Film Cement Formula

Joseph W. Flanager, San Francisco, California asks:

Would highly appreciate the favor if you will provide a formula which will produce good film cement.

Am connected with the Metro branch here and experience trouble in finding satisfactory cement. Would wish to make a very large quantity.

I could give you receipts galore, many of which have been highly praised, BUT perhaps in a few months the cement from the same receipt would be roasted, condemned and cursed.

This I attribute to variation in chemicals. The cement made from a given receipt from a certain supply of chemicals will, so it seems, not always act the same when made up from a different batch of chemicals.

For this reason we have refused to recommend cements or cement formulas. On pages 197 and 198 of the Handbook for Manager and Operators you will find several formulae which you may try out.

They are all good, if——. You can consult a handbook at the establishment of Walter Preddy, 187 Golden Gate avenue, if there is none available in your own place.

"Tillie's Punctured Romance" Is a Revival, Not a Reissue. Make It So

By Epes W. Sargent

PROBABLY no comedy production has ever made more money than "Tillie's Punctured Romance." It may be that none ever will, for the Tower Film Corporation, is preparing to again send Tillie forth upon her travels, and there is no good reason why the old favorite should not duplicate its original success, for no farce comedy produced since that time has offered more real entertainment and none has offered a stronger cast than that which includes Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dresler, Mabel Normand and Chester Conklin. Better still, it was made in the days when all four were working for fame and working hard. There is no reason why Tillie should not come back as strong a box office attraction as ever.

But if you want to make money with Tillie, remember that this is not a reissue, and do not treat it as such. It is not an old film with a new title partly to disguise its age. It is still working under the original title, because that title itself is a valuable asset. Nor should it be regarded as a shopworn offering, from which the present owners are seeking to extract the last penny of profit. It is as good today as it ever was, and if you handle it properly it will make just as much money as though it were first run. There is no reason why it should not make more, for there are hundreds of fans and mere theatregoers who will not only welcome the opportunity to see the old favorite, but who will tell their friends.

Get the Right Angle.

It is important that the exhibitor who would play this subject get the right angle of exploitation. He can materially reduce his takings by mishandling and can very considerably increase the receipts by adroit work. The picture must be given all the respect accorded a first run, all of the reminiscence that will capitalize the value of personal advertisement and in addition it must be given especial prominence.

It is probable that the picture could be put on with a bare announcement and play to large business, but only by means of a campaign can it be given publicity which will yield the fullest returns. Before you start to plan your work, remember what it is you have to offer.

In the first place you have four stars, three of whom are now heading their own casts. Chaplin is made the featured star under the present revival. He always was the star of the picture, but Miss Dresler was featured in the original run. Now Chaplin's present vogue has brought him the stellar honors he took perforce in the old days. It is now "Charlie Chaplin, supported by Marie Dressler, Mabel Normand and Chester Conklin."

It would be well to give almost equal prominence to the quartet, even though Conklin was playing only a bit.

Tell Who You Have.

Don't offer it as an "all star production." Tell them that you have four stars, which does not mean the same thing. Tell who they are. Tell it so prominently that no one can overlook the fact. Each of those names is worth all of the money it will cost you to set them in large type. Take extra newspaper space to get them all in.

It will pay you to start well in advance of the showing. Three or four weeks will not be too long for a campaign. Start off by asking "what is the funniest farce comedy you ever saw?" Keep that in as a scatter ad for two or three days; then follow with "What is Charlie Chaplin's funniest play?"

Repeat the question, using the names of Miss Normand and Mr. Conklin. Do not use Miss Dressler's name, for this will give the stunt away. She was funny only in this one play, and if you mention her, almost everyone will know the answer. Run these teasers for a day or so and follow with "Did you ever see the funniest film comedy? Think hard. What was it? Answer tomorrow?"

The following day give the title and add Miss Dressler's name.

At the same time, get out your lithographs. You have an attractive set of paper ranging from ones to 24-sheets. Use some or all. They are all new and are printed with Chaplin as the star. Even in the smallest towns you can profit through the use of a couple of 24-sheets. Use as many as you can afford. Some dramas are best handled with newspaper work and special appeals, but for this you need both lithographs—and plenty of them—and the newspapers.

Do Plenty of Press Work.

At the same time start your press campaign. Use the press book material and build up with your own stuff. Dwell on the fact that this production offers three film stars and the funniest woman on the speaking stage. Tell that it is Marie Dressler at her very best. Tell that it is Chaplin in the days when he was working hardest to gain the fame that he is now capitalizing.

Tell that it gives a memory of Mabel Normand when she was a Keystone star and working like a horse to help along. Tell that it shows Conklin before he developed his present make-up. Tell that they all work together for the common good of the production intsead of each standing upon his stellar dignities. There are many who prefer the old Chaplin to the new. Make a strong appeal to these.

Work a Contest.

Revive the old Chaplin contest on a larger scale. Get the merchants in your section to contribute prizes for the best impersonators of the four stars. Chaplin contests have cleaned up all over the country. Make this a quartet stunt and offer decent prizes for the best Chaplin, the best Dressler, the best Normand and the best Conklin. Hold the contest the Saturday morning before you open the run of Tillie. Work a couple of weeks in advance, and advertise in store windows with still showings of all four players. Boom it heavily and make an event of the judging. If the weather is too cold, hold the event in your house, with a free admission. Stiplate that the prize winners shall appear at your evening shows that day.

Don't overlook the value of cut-outs. Cut out all four of the stars. You can get good material from the lithographs. Have a set for your lobby and try to get some into store windows. It can be done. Most merchants are glad to get some window attractor if properly approached.

Three Stars with But a Single Thought.
Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dressler and Mabel Normand in a joint attack upon grouches and glooms in "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

Tell All About It.

Use plenty of press stuff. Get the photoplay editors interested. Most of them recall the story, and they will welcome its revival. If you work it carefully you can get the editor to do your press work for you. Tillie is in a class by itself and he will write on that, where he would not touch the average first run production.

Work from another angle. Run a special advertisement something along these lines:

How many of the really great film productions have you seen? Check off on the list below, the big features you have witnessed:

"Cabiria"
"The Birth of a Nation."
"The Inferno."
"Les Miserables."
"Tillie's Punctured Romance."
"Hearts of the World."
"Male and Female."
"The Heart of Humanity."

Some of these may have been before your time. How many have you seen?

Give this a couple of days to sink in before announcing that at least they can correct their omissions by seeing Tillie. Offer no special advertising on the first display. If possible, get it run in a box on the motion picture page, seemingly as a part of the editorial text. You might go further and can call for additions to the list. If you have a live editor for the picture section, you can make this a feature. If you cannot work it in a newspaper, work it on the screen. Run the slide and call for additions to the list to be left at the box office. Add the best of the submissions daily. Start so far in advance that you will have time to get it out of the way before you spring the advertising end. Let it appear as a novelty feature without any advertising angle.

Work Slides.

Use plenty of slides, trying the series idea. Here would be a good routine:

Do you remember "Tillie's Busted Romance?"

Remember when Tillie eloped?

Remember when she got that little jag?

Remember Tillie in jail.

Remember how she worked in the restaurant?

Remember when she started to shoot up the ball?

Remember how they fished her out of the ocean?

Remember what happened to Charlie?

We have all that and more too. (date.)

This list can be amplified, but do not try to run too many. It would be better to split the series and run two sets consecutive weeks.

Follow every comedy with a slide reading "Sure this is funny, but wait until you see "Tillie's Punctured Romance." Do you remember those six full reels of fun? We have it (date." Work from another angle for the drama, making a new slide to fit each big feature with some comment as "Yes, they got married and lived happily forever after, but do you remember the sad finish of 'Tillie's Punctured Romance?'" Boy! that was funny! We show it again (date)."

And Programs, Too.

Work the same idea on your program, with a comment after every title. It is easier than it sounds, and it will make a hit. Make the comment short and snappy and always use the full title.

Try a perambulator stunt. Advertise that you will give a small prize to the best advertising express wagon to take part in a parade a day or two before your first showing A two or three dollar prize will be ample, and you can get a big return. To get things started, decorate an express wagon yourself for a sample. Do not use lithographs or anything the boys themselves cannot get. Build up a pair of A boards and letter these with a sketch in colors, if possible. Give each boy a matinee ticket for some other performance, and take the parade over a short route, ending at the theatre. If possible, time the parade so that the boys can go in and use their tickets then, leaving their carts outside on the walk. Check the carts and have someone to watch them while the boys are inside On a traveled thoroughfare the string of express wagons will be an advertisement all the afternoon, to say nothing of the talk each boy will make while he is preparing his entry. It will be working for you a week. Take a photograph of the line-up and show it as a slide the following week. You can get the photographer to take the picture free for the sake of the orders he will obtain.

Try a Tillie Sale.

In country towns, get the merchants to offer a series of bargains for Tillie Morning to get the country people in. Co-operate with them on the cost of a joint circular, and use the mailing list freely. If you canot get the names of those on the rural routes, you can obtain from the post office the number of boxes on each route and address one to each box, merely using

Box 126, R. F. D., Mytown.

Keep Plugging.

Do not start your advertising campaign until you are ready to keep it going, but start well in advance and have your campaign all mapped out so that you can spring something new every day. Make out a regular schedule of advertising, with each day plotted. Start slowly and get into the full swing about a week before the showing. Make the last seven days fairly hum. You have something to sell with which you can make good. In spite of the fact that this picture was made several years ago, it is still first class comedy and it will please in competition with the best of current comedy feature films, so plug hard, but keep away from the "greatest ever" style of advertising. You can say plenty without using that overworked phrase, and it will be better to get them in with other appeals and let them go out saying that it is great.

Book it for a run. If you are used to a daily change, try for at least a two day run and if possible run three or longer. If you get the crowd in the first day, they will tell the rest of the town to come, but make a noise to get the first crowd in. You cannot put on anything and make it sell itself. You must tell what you have and the greater your emphasis, the greater your reward.

Unless you use paper to the limit, double your usual order. Get it up and keep it up. Use plenty of cuts in the newspaper or on throwaways. There are plenty of stills and cuts. Get as many as you can and use them wherever you see a chance to get them in. Don't concentrate on your lobby. Work all over town. This is one of those pictures that will work for you long after it leaves town. Get it over right and you can book it back in three months and make another clean-up, with half the expense.

Charlie Chaplin "Supported by—"

You've seen that line before, but look at the finely upholstered supports in "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

Sidelights and Reflections

ROSCOE ARBUCKLE'S latest comedy, "The Garage," was shown at four Broadway theatres in Times square the week of January 11 and repeated the success it has made in other cities. The pleasant things said about it in this publication's review department two weeks ago found an echo in the notices of the New York daily papers and no picture bearing the Arbuckle brand has ever packed more laughs into two reels of film fun. The novelty of the subject—the humorous mishaps incidental to running a garage, if "Fatty" Arbuckle and Buster Keaton are the handy men about the place—gives the comedy a good start. And "starting something" and starting it quick is one of the best things that Roscoe and his rubber jointed helper do in the comedy.

A droll bit of satire is where the two man-power fire department put on public helmets by mistake when starting off with the hose cart to answer an alarm, run half the way to the fire, discover the error in head gear and race back to the fire house for the proper helmets.

"Desert Gold," the Zane Grey story presented by Benjamin H. Hampton and E. F. Warner, was the feature at the Strand the week of January 11. E. K. Lincoln, who heads the cast, was evidently mistaken by one of the reviewing staff on a morning paper for Elmo the Mighty, as reference was made in the article to the way the hero tossed the other characters about. The Lincoln of the "Desert Gold" cast has several times before been taken for the creator of "Tarzan of the Apes" by members of the daily press. For their benefit the information is printed here that there are two Lincolns in moving pictures—Elmo and E. K. The former is the strong man, a profession he followed before he became an actor for the screen.

Stage lighting is acknowledged to be susceptible of great artistic effect. So also is the lighting of the moving picture. But the attempt to copy nature can be carried too far in both cases. One of the critics of the daily press takes exception to the lighting or rather, want of lighting, in a recent production, and complains that the moment any of the characters gets outside the circle of light in the center of the scene it is impossible to detect a single facial expression.

But in this case the plot can be followed through the spoken words of the actors. Screen moonlight scenes of so artistic a dimness that the faces of the actors are devoid of expression are positively irritating, deprived as the characters are of speech. The spectator pays his money to see what is going on.

"Stronger Than Death"

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE resistless power of true love is the theme of "Stronger Than Death," derived from a novel by I. A. R. Wylie, one of the best dramatic spectacles yet produced by Metro. The whole is impressive as a work of decorative imagination without loss of balance in sentiment and subject. It is interesting because Nazimova makes it so. Instead of posing as a meaningless creature of destiny, she shows us the heart of a woman. In a massive pictorial background that is a triumph of hand and eye, she uncovers a spiritual struggle, one of the greatest in drama, that with self.

In the role of a frail woman who has found her strength unequal to her ambition, Nazimova appears to be wrapped in a veil of lassitude, oppressed by melancholy, resigned to her fate. In society she only permits herself an occasional delicate little smile. She resents insult with gentle calm, instead of with tragic bitterness, but standing her ground with flawless dignity. Even when almost overwhelmed by a tumultuous rush of sensations she is only demure and dimly appealing, meeting the real emergencies with mere quiet resolution.

All this constitutes a most difficult impersonation. It may, therefore, be justly said that the subleties and refinements of Nazimova's acting in "Stronger Than Death" surpasses any screen revelation she has hitherto made of herself. They are an inspiration in the art of emotional expression.

Prominent in the strong supporting cast is Charles W. French, as the hard old British Commandant of Indian troops; Charles Bryant, as a noble type of English officer, and Herbert Pryor in the role of an artistically repellant half caste. These impersonations stand out clearly and in powerful contrast to the varied personalities.

As a massive creation, rich in backgrounds, imbued with romantic suggestion and a delight to appreciative vision, "Stronger Than Death" has been rarely equalled. Also is this particularly true in the case of a marvel of scenic construction, the splendid reproduction of an Indian Temple of Vishnu. The directors have thus united their impressions of glamour and truth. This unity, with the mood of the story, provides a solid foundation for what is personal—and therefore vital. The whole seven reels provide an engrossing entertainment which will be enshrined among classics of the screen.

The Story.

"Stronger Than Death" refers to the love of a true-hearted woman. So believed Major Tristram Boucicault of a British India station, while attempting single-handed to save a cholera-infected district. This effort had made him known as the "Hermit Doctor." It had also attracted the attention of Sigrid Fersen, a music-hall dancer of London and Paris, who was visiiing the India station for two reasons. One was she had been forbidden to dance because of heart trouble. Another was the necessity of getting a rich husband.

The Major was poor, but Sigrid became deeply interested in him. His courage and many tendernesses to helpless human beings and dumb brutes appealed to her. Almost in pursuit of him she dared visit the cholera-infected district near a famous old Vishnu Temple. In spite of Boucicault's protests, she insists upon seeing the interior of his home. He warns her that it will be an unsought confession. Among his dearly-loved books and cherished souvenirs of London she finds a picture of herself enshrined. She is deeply touched to find that he has long secretly loved her. A hopeless love springs up in their hearts. Sigrid realizes that marriage is practically impossible, but she begs the Major to preserve his best ideals of her, half admitting that she must wed to keep body and soul together. He accepts the situation with fortitude, and she returns to the station, where she is already being persecuted with attentions from an enormously wealthy half-caste, James Barclay. She repels this obnoxious suitor until Boucicault knocks down the commandmant, his own father, because of brutality to his mother. Only Barclay has witnessed the assault, which means court-martial and disgrace.

The half-caste makes marriage the price of his silence and Sigrid weds him under condition that they are to keep apart except in society. The amorous Barclay locks himself in the wedding apartment with his wife, but she holds him at bay the night long by a pistol point. In retaliation, he heads an insurrection and corrupts the native soldiers with large sums of money. Sigrid goes to the Temple where fanatical natives have gathered and there dances, causing them to believe she is the promised bride of Vishnu. Her dancing, that of sure death for her in the end, holds the natives while Boucicault goes to warn the station commandant and restore the morale of the Indian troops.

Sigrid is about to be sacrificed by the high priest, when he is shot by the half-caste. The latter is overcome and killed just as the Major returns with the troops. Sigrid has expected death. She sinks down, overcome. When she awakes it is in the arms of the man she truly loves, who will ever safeguard and cherish her and her love which has proved stronger than death itself.

"Other Men's Shoes"

Seven-Part Pathe Release Features Crauford Kent in Pleasing Double Role.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

AN entertaining story interest is found in this seven-part Pathe release, produced by Edgar Lewis from a novel by Andrew Soutar, under the title of "Other Men's Shoes." It is not particularly strong in drama at the opening situation, but moves with a gradually increasing interest, and while it might have been told in a less number of reels, it is interesting and enjoyable as it is. The closing scenes are quite melodramatic.

Craufurd Kent plays a double role, that of Stephen Browning and his twin brother, James. Stephen is a young minister who is something of a weakling physically. James, on the other hand, is a fellow of more buoyant temperament and has plenty of courage. James appears in the village of Montville just as the young minister is taken ill. He proceeds to substitute himself for his ailing brother and works some needed reforms in the community.

This plot, which has had at least one very similar predecessor, offers many opportunities for comedy. These opportunities are taken advantage of in this production, particularly as regards the reform of the drunkard, Paget, who later becomes Jame's greatest admirer. Irene Boyle is attractive in the role of the heroine, who first loves the minister, and after his death, the brother James. Harold Forshay and John P. Wade play the roles of the villains acceptably.

Cast.

The Story.

James Browning, in "Other Men's Shoes," serves a term in prison for borrowing money from a payroll fund to lend to a friend who had lied to him about having a sick wife and child. On his release from prison, James goes to the village of Montville, where his twin brother, Stephen, is minister of a small church. Stephen is not strong physically, and is so weighted down by the cares of his parish that he is ill when James appears.

After hearing from their sister, Marion, some of Stephen's trials, James decides to act as the minister's substitute. He does this succesfully, and after Stephen goes to a neighboring farm to recuperate, James carries out some vigorous reforms. Marion tells Stephen's sweetheart, Irene Manton ,of the substitution and she aids James in his undertakings.

James soon comes in contact with Raphael Creeke, the local man of wealth, who also loves Irene. Creeke conspires to have the minister's charge taken away from him, but James defeats this scheme. Stephen is murdered by a tool of Creeke's and James brings the crime home to the conspirators. Irene's love later turns to James.

"Haunting Shadows"

H. B. Warner Scores Big in Hampton Adaption of Meridith Nicholson Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE second attempt to film the Meridith Nicholson story "The House of a Thousand Candles" proves beyond a doubt that it is admirably suited to screen requirements. In addition to the advantages of a good story the star, H. B. Warner, gives an unusually meritorious performance. His portrayal of the character of John Glenarm is polished, and there is no lost motion in comedy significance. The director and his players have succeeded well in putting across the intention of the story.

The production has excellent drawing qualities. It breathes an atmosphere which is a happy combination of mystery, comedy and melodrama. The big, lone house of "grandpa" Glenarm, with its creaking stairways, underground passages, and, withal, its happy, up-to-date inmate, John Glenarm the younger, has a charm alluring to both young and old. The settings of the picture are in excellent taste, and its out-door locations are attractive.

Adapted from "The House of a Thousand Candles" by Meredith Nicholson.
Direction by Henry King.
Length about 5,000 feet.

The Story.

In "Haunting Shadows" John Glenarm, Jr., goes to live in the Indiana home of his supposedly deceased grandfather, in compliance with a clasue of the will which stipuated that in order to gain his inheritance he should reside in the old house for a space of one year, but is not prepared for the exciting events that are to be staged for his benefit. In the event of the young man's failure to remain the allotted time in the house Marion Devereux, a young school teacher, in whom his grandfather had taken a great interest and who is stationed at a school for girls next door to the Glenarm mansion, is to inherit the Glenarm estate.

Bates, the family butler and only present occupant of the house, receives John Glenarm, Jr., after the manner of the perfect servant, and appears not to be in the least surprised when a bullet smashes the wineglass which his young master is raising to his lip. In the lonely old mansion things happen in rapid sequence, while Glenarm apparently undaunted, finds a keen enjoyment in trying to solve the mystery of ghostly visitations, as well as incidents of startling realism, such as pursuing a frequent visitor armed with lantern and hammer, through underground passages, whose exits lead to unexpected places.

Interwined with the mysteries of the situation is a rapidly developing love story between Marian Devereux and John Glenarm. Finally, in defiance of the threat in his grandfather's will. Glenarm follows Marian to the city, where she goes to visit a friend, and on his return he is forced into a fight for possession by one Pickering, an unscrupulous lawyer, who is trying to cover his own indebtedness by an assumed interest in the affairs of Marian Devereux. At the climax of the fight a door opens, and John Glenarm, Sr., enters with Marian, puts things to rights, and helps to bring the romance of the young people to a climax.

"The Shark"

Five-Reel Fox Subject Features George Walsh in Stirring Deep Sea Melodrama.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

MELODRAMATIC action is the predominating feature of this five-reel Fox subject, entitled "The Shark." It gives a remarkably vivid picture of the seamy side of life, both on board the tramp schooner, Aurora, and in the wine room scenes on shore. The characterizations are excellent examples of the brutal, predatory type of men for the most part, the heroine and her friends alone offering what might be termed a normal contrast.

George Walsh finds a very interesting role in the part of "The Shark." He first appears as a common sailor on the oil tramp schooner, where Captain Sanchez rules with iron hand. William G. Nally plays the latter role to the life. The hero in due time visits the shore with Sanchez, where the latter abducts a girl, Doris Selby, who is on a slumming expedition with her friends. Mary Hall is appealing in the role of Doris.

The big melodramatic moments occur in the wine room, following the abduction, and later on board the Aurora, where The Shark battles for the life and honor of Doris. The vessel catches fire and all hands plunge into the sea. The Shark and Doris are picked up, after clinging for hours to a floating spar, and the usual love affair follows.

The subject as a whole is strong in characterization and continuity. It contains a good deal of sheer brutality, but convinces by its realism.

The Story.

Shark Rawley, hero of "The Shark," is a common sailor on board the tramp schooner, Aurora, presided over by a brutal captain named Sanchez. The latter respects The Shark because of his physical prowess, and when the vessel reaches shore invites the sailor to accompany him to a certain wine room. In this place they meet many fast women, but The Shark does not care much for women since he had become embittered by an unhappy love affair.

During the evening a slumming party, consisting of a society girl named Doris Selby and her friends, drifts into the wine room. The girl is spotted by some of the predatory characters who infest the place and lured into a small room. Here she is followed by a jealous girl, who tells her to flee through a cellarway or she will be kidnapped. Doris acts on this advice, but in fleeing from one set of rascals she runs into the arms of Captain Sanchez, who is waiting outside for her.

Sanchez carries Doris to the Aurora, where he hastily calls up his crew and casts off. The Shark arrives at the dock as the Aurora is leaving. He catches the vessel, by means of a small boat, and once on board gives battle for the possession of Doris. The vessel is consumed by fire, but The Shark saves Doris and wins her love.

"The Beloved Cheater"

Robertson-Cole Release, Starring Lew Cody, is a Well-Turned Comedy.

Reviewed by Jane McCloskey.

IN our opinion this is a good picture. It is not without its faults of direction and padding, of course; but there is a novelty of treatment to an old theme that is most refreshing. The story is spun from the "other man's" viewpoint—a scheme that isn't used once in thirty pictures of this character, and it certainly is successful in working up sympathy for a man who at first seems to be an empty-headed gentleman-vamp.

Lew Cody's charms hardly supply the death-dealing fascination attributed to them, but he acts with a deal of suiety and good taste, and he does lord it over his elaborate establishment with an easy grace, as if it belonged to him. Eileen Percy as Eulalie Morgan is a girlish picture, but her acting is stiff and too obviously directed. Jack Mower as Kingdon Challoner plays a hard part well, interpreting the quick embarrassment and hot-headed desperation commonly credited to youth, with a natural, realistic manner.

The plot is cleverly put together, and Eulalie's wanderings through Bruce's house have a most decided element of suspense in them. Besides all that, the play introduces a note of humor that, treated carefully and not overdone, lends to it just about the right flavor of satire.

The Story.

"The Beloved Cheater" opens in the home of Bruce Sands, a notorious heart-breaker. He is so accomplished that he devotes an alcove in his reception hall to "trophies of war." Among his older friends is Mrs. Thorndyke Fleming, whose niece, Eulalie Morgan, is an attractive girl but an ardent member of the "Anti-Kiss Cult." Her devoted swain, Kingdon Challoner, tries to combat her unsociable creed, and although she consents to their engagement, it is on condition that he stand by the letter of her law. Mrs. Fleming gives a dinner in honor of the couple, which Bruce Sands attends.

After the guests leave the table Challoner appeals to Sands as an amateur to an expert, to show him how to break his high-minded fiancee of her resolution. They agree that Sands shall go into the room where Eulalie happens to be reading alone, turn the light off suddenly, kiss her and retreat in time for Kingdon to take his place when the light goes up. The plot goes through. Eulalie finds herself pleased with a new sensation, but Kingdon's inexperienced attempt at following up the advantage Sands had gained, falls hopelessly flat, and the girl realizes that she has been kissed by someone else.

Also she notices that Kingdon's buttonhole flower is intact, while she holds in her hands the crushed petals of a flower she had grasped in the dark. Her search for the torn other half leads her to Bruce. They are both rather carried away by the sentimental intensity of the moment, and when Challoner rudely interrupts with accusations, Eulalie breaks her engagement with him, believing she is in love with Sands.

Challoner threatens to kill the ursurper, but Eulalie sees him go off in his car and reaches Sands' home first; he, however, realizes her danger and knowing that her best happiness lies with Kingdon, soothes her excitement and starts her back home. But she is a moment late in starting and sees her aunt, Kingdon and his father approaching. She darts back in to the house and there ensues a merry chase in her efforts to avoid detection. Matters are finally cleared up. Kingdon learns enough "cave man stuff" to prosper his suit, and Bruce is left alone with his memories and a few more "trophies of war."

"The Tree of Knowledge"

Paramount-Artcraft Presents Robert Warwick in An Artistic Adaptation from the Play by R. C. Carton.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Tree of Knowledge" is a drama of man's attitude toward the wayward woman. It shows the results of an experience men seek with worldly women, though not for purposes of enlightenment. The Paramount product artistically sets forth that each such experience may add to a man's knowledge of the subject, but not to his good judgment. In a legendary prologue there is given a brief view of Adam's encounter with the original vamp. Theodore Kosloff, famous Russian dancer, impersonates Adam and seductive Yvonne Gardelle charms as Eve. Both are graceful and interesting personalities.

Robert Warwick plays the difficult role of a man who mixes in and tries to arrange matters for his friends, and he performs with both dignity and force. Kathlyn Williams is intense in her unsympathetic part of the modern Lilith. Her appeal is not through affected innocence. She represents a highly intelligent type of the calculating woman. She is a tigress who barely hides her claws, and whose ferocity burns in fierce eyes. The rest of the cast measures up to the interesting performance of these two stars.

There are some romantic and beautifully pictured exteriors, both in the prologue and in the main story. All these values and the appreciation shown by a crowded house at the Rialto sum up in ranking "The Tree of Knowledge" as a product generally and generously good.

Nigel now turns to a charming girl, Monica, and falls in love with her. He is advised by his mother and by a neighboring young sport by the name of Roupelle to wed Monica, but he deeply regrets his affair with Belle and so confesses to Roupelle. Both Nigel and Roupelle are staggered one day when Brian brings home a lady he has just wed, who is none other than the notorious "Belle." She has married Brian for his supposed wealth, but she turns on him bitterly when she discovers that the estate is badly involved.

Nigel's position, because of his former relations with Brian's wife, becomes so difficult that he resigns, but he is persuaded to remain. He does this largely for the sake of Brian's happiness, to protect his wife from the advances of sporty Rouvelle. Brian discovers that his wife has had an affair with some other man before she married him and declares to Nigel that he will kill that man. He then leaves home on a business trip. Nigel learns that Belle is about to elope with Rouvelle, giving the latter a signal by turning down a parlor lamp. He interferes and a violent struggle follows between him and Belle.

"The Whirlwind"

Allgood Serial Featuring Charles Hutchison Well Supplies with Realistic Thrills.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE first five of the fifteen episodes of "The Whirlwind," made by the Allgood Picture Corporation, are all that the average audience could want by way of thrills. The story, which at times shows signs of reaching a premature end, manages to maintain a continuity which carries it through thrill after thrill, manufacturing on the way a large margin of suspense. Each episode contains a story of its own correlative of the main theme. The action keeps a fairly even pace, moving rapidly and for the most part consistently.

The star of the production is Charles Hutchison, a master of the motorcycle, and splendidly daring as a serial hero. He makes long distance dives, takes his chance with the shell of a burning building, or scales the many stories of a brick apartment house with the assurance of the professional acrobat. Helen Thornton is the heroine of the picture, whose fascinating personality forms the morsel of contention between the hero and the heavy. Richard Neil is the chief bad man of the play who is supported by a competent staff of assistants.

The story of "The Whirlwind" concerns the love of two men for one girl, allowing interesting character differences for the working out of incidental action.

Charles Darrell, recently returned from France after winning the title of "The Whirlwind" and other wartime honors, meets Helen Grayden in a rescue scene when her horse bolts and threatens to throw her. He later becomes involved in an attempt to land a band of crooks which has for its head a man by the name of Carnley who, in addition to holding a high social position, is also the fiancee of Helen Grayden.

Covering his villainies he manages to carry on his double life with fair success. Through a series of hair-raising events Darrell pursues the wrongdoers, and in the fifth chapter of the story is engaged in releasing Helen from the clutches of the gang. She has been kidnapped for the purpose of forcing her to marry Carnley, after she has discovered his perfidy. The story carries the principal characters through strenuous escapades which include a perilous ride through the rapids of a swift running river, a break for safety over the edge of an ugly cliff, a miraculous escape from death in a dynamited house, bridging a gorge with a slender log, and other equally thrilling stunts.

"When A Man Loves"

Pretty Japanese Romance Produced by Vitagraph, with Earle Williams as Hero.

Reviewed by Jane McCloskey.

WHEN a Man Loves" is an obvious story, but pretty and entertaining for all that. Earle Williams is satisfactory as the hero. Yuri, as played by Margaret Loomis—who manages one of the best Japanese make-ups we know—is dainty and endearingly retiring. Among the other characters of note are Thomas S. Guise as Lord Bannister, stormy and domineering; Barbara Tennant as the unpleasant Miss Heathcote, who is rather pretty and chic despite her assumptions; Ida Darling in her familiar role of dowager; George Hall, in an understanding, tragic portrayal of Ando, and Edward W. Wade as Takimura.

The settings are excellent and are ripe with the usual atmosphere of Japan; a glimpse of the supposed public gardens is marvelously flowery and springlike, while Yuri's own little retreat is particularly artistic. On the whole it is an enjoyable romance with just the right mixture of noble hero, misused heroine, jealous rival and stern parent in it to please the average onlooker.

The Story.

A "Madame Butterfly" made happy is the story of "When a Man Loves." In it Earle Williams plays the part of one John Howard Bannister, son of a wealthy peer of England, whose pending engagement to Gladys Lees, schemed by her mother, is avoided when he discovers that Gladys is really in love with another man. The situation gives him an excuse to depart for the "land of flowers," which, he says, has always held out allurement and romance to him. Leaving England he also leaves Charlotte Heathcote, who vows to be Lady Bannister or die trying.

In Tokio John meets Yuri San, adopted daughter of a curio shopkeeper, Takimura, and his wife. To Bannister, Yuri seems the incarnation of all that charm which has drawn him to the Far East, much to the spiteful annoyance of Miss Heathcote who has pursued her prey across the continents. Yuri's native lover, Ando, is intensely hurt by the newcomer's welcome and demands to know John's designs upon the girl. Bannister warmly avows his desire to marry her. Charlotte writes Lord Bannister of his son's peril," and a cable summons John home on the pretext of his father's failing health.

John's sudden departure, coupled with a cruel assertion by Charlotte that he is really engaged to her, adds force to Ando's story that Bannister had confided to him his flippant purpose. Yuri is crushed beyond all consoling, but when Ando asks Takamura's permission to marry her, the old man says that she is not for him, that her blood is English. When John arrives home and finds he has been deceived he hastens back to Japan and Yuri. Takamura consents to their marriage after the misunderstanding is explained away.

Ando tries to kill Yuri and Takamura, but Bannister saves them both and takes Yuri away to England. There the Baron refuses to receive his new daughter-in-law, but Lord Eastbourne, his closest friend, arrives with the announcement that Yuri is his daughter, born after his wife had fled from him upon his father's refusal to receive her. Then the family atmosphere is cleared.

"A Twilight Baby"

A Remarkable Lehrman Farce of Amusing Ingenuity, Starring a Veritable Baby Hero and Some Highly Entertaining Animals.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is a slender thread of story running through "A Twilight Baby," but so much else awakens merriment that it is quickly forgotten. What makes us shake with laughter is a wonderful series of incidents, crowding upon each other, in which all sorts of living things besides the reckless baby take part. Most remarkable is the act of a mothering dog, who leaves her litter of pups to care for the abandoned baby. She drags the tiny helpless human creature to where it can suckle directly from a cow and there stands guard until the infant is fed. There is a really talented rooster, who not only officiates as an alarm clock, but pecks at heavy sleepers to rouse them and raises the shade of their window. There are puppies who follow the baby's example in getting sustenance direct from the cow. There is a tragic dog who plays his role with startling intelligence, until the human element has to get busy in order to compete for the spectator's interest.

Happiness

Lloyd Hamilton and Virginia Rappe, playmates in First National's "A Twilight Baby."

When the baby, supposedly of noble birth, is grown, the result is a clownish and cowardly fat boy. He is clumsy, awkward and constantly in trouble. Nearly all of his mishaps are worked out by methods both ingenious and novel, and again animals play a part. The fat boy is projected against the side of a barn with such violence that his head drives through it, and there he sticks. The best padded part of his anatomy tempts a goat to butt in. We are treated to a view of the goat delivering the smashing blows of a battering ram on one side, and the agonized expression of the fat boy's face on the other. We laugh at the ludicrous; we laugh at the ridiculous; we laugh anyhow until we are tired. "A Twilight Baby" made a great hit at the Rialto, and it is one of the best farces ever shown on the screen.

"Starvation"

How America's Bulwark of Food for the Needy Helped to Stem the Tide of Bolshevism in Europe

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN presenting the 6,500 foot picturization of the work of Herbert Hoover and the American Relief Administration in Europe, Frederick B. Warren gives to the people of America a wide-visioned, truthful idea of conditions following the crash of monarchies, and the sequential choas involved in the paralysis of European industry. The resurrection of Russia, not yet consummated, possibly only through the Gethsemany of national woe, is visible only as a future hope. The part which America played in helping the tottering nations to their feet is shown in the picture, "Starvation," which was made under the supervision of George F. Zimmer.

It covers the work of the Relief Committee in the following countries: Russia, Courland, Ukrania, Turkey, Germany, France, Poland, Letvia, Hungary, Armenia, Holland, Sweden, Austria, Esthonia, East Galicia, Rumania, Belgium, Denmark and Italy. The picture is, as stated in the foreword of the program, "History in its period of incubation. It is a perpetual record of the glory and the beauty of a nation and a people with a soul and a conscience."

It tells the sad story of the three million children America is feeding abroad. It presents terrible and unquestionable examples of the results of stalking hunger in children, whose bones, grown soft through malnutrition, are gnarled and misshapen, and on which scarcely any flesh remains—tearful-eyed, animated skeletons.

Following the contrast drawn between Europe's past and present, the channels by which American food reached districts of suffering are clearly shown. There can be no excuse for any confusion of ideas regarding this after seeing the picture. It is an odd sight to meet with American ships in the canals of Holland, and other remote waterways of Europe. At every point we have before use the contrast between the American way of dealing with a festering situation, and the unmerciful and less efficient way of the Central Powers. America erected a bulwark of food to stem the tide of the Bolsheviki, while the brutal methods of hanging and shooting, unhappy examples of which appear in the picture, was resorted to as the only remedy by those of a lesser understanding.

The story of American mercy and protection is told in the picture fully and well. And while it contains many unpleasant, even harrowing, sights it cannot fail to inspire in the hearts of true Americans a pride of race—a joy in the thought that they, too, belong to a country with a compassion so far reaching.

Don't be afraid to use press-book ads if they are better than those you can write. That is not a sign of weakness, it's a demonstration of intelligence.

It was a foregone conclusion with the maiden aunts of Margaret Brooke in "Greater Than Fame," that she would fall in love and marry, and that in the preparation for the wedding, they would be able to resurrect their own romances. Margaret, however, had plans of her own, especially as she had been told by the church organist that she had a wonderful voice, which should receive cultivation.

With a card of introduction to a music master in the city, she leaves the old home and takes up her abode in Greenwich Village. Here she meets Jack Martin, a young violinist, who also pursues the art of composition, and becomes the idol of his heart. On discovering that Margaret is working too hard for the money to pay for her lessons, the music master begs Mrs. Waring, a wealthy woman of his acquaintance, to take Margaret under her wing. In the home of Mrs. Waring she meets with artists and would-be artists, and incidentally a manager of grand opera.

Peeved with Mrs. Waring's attempt to discourage her with the idea of seeking a career without the aid of love, she leaves for the city. Here she is lured by Mrs. Waring's husband to an apartment paid for by him, under the pretense that she is to keep it for a friend of his. When she realizes the truth of the situation and is spurned by Martin, who refuses to believe her story, she appeals to the impressario, and is dismayed when he also insists on taking advantage of her ambition. Finally persuading Martin of her innocence, they decide to join forces on the production of an opera he has written. Their marriage is followed by the success of the opera.

"Slaves of Pride"

Vitagraph Presents Alice Joyce Revealing the Tragic Side of Mercenary Mariage.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

SLAVES OF PRIDE," by William B. Courtney, penetrates the surface of a marriage of convenience and lays bare the selfish soul of a young millionaire. He is inocently selfish, a callow youth flattered by a business secretary into believing that he is already a great man and on his way to becoming an autocrat of finance. He sees no deeper than what pleases his vanity. Neither the shallowness of his pretence, nor the folly of it dawns upon him at any time until his collapse. It is a poor and unsympathetic character that Percy Marmont is called upon to portray, but he carries it consistently to the end.

Slavery Days

Expressed here by Alice Joyce in her Vitagraph, "Slaves of Pride."

In delicate contrast, is the role assigned to Alice Joyce. She is urged into a union with the aimless and stupid young man of inherited wealth, and makes the best of her trying situation. Her performance is the highest value in the picture.

There is a tendency shown in both construction and treatment of "The Slaves of Pride" to elaboration and explanatory subtitle, causing it to move slowly at the start, but a strong interest is set up by the two leading characterizations, which compensates when the climax is approached. In the summing up, "Slaves of Pride" stands high because there is a definite impression made. Such was the effect on a crowded house at the Broadway Theatre, where the picture held close attention.

Story by William B. Courtney.
Directed by George Terwilliger.

The Story.

"Slaves of Pride" are the impoverished mother of Patricia Leeds and the millionaire, Brewster Howard, to whom Mrs. Leeds manages to marry her daughter. Patricia accepts the situation in order to provide her mother with comfort and security in her declining days. She accepts it cheerfully, putting up with her husband's inordinate selfishness and vanity from the point of view of intellectual superiority. He has a one-cylinder mind, and no one is better aware of it than his wife. He has an almost incredible idea that he amounts to something, though he does not even manage his own affairs. He leaves all business transactions to his secretary, John Reynolds.

Reynolds hates his popinjay employer and plots his ruin. He is compelled to carry orders from the husband to the wife and manages to make them as offensive to her as possible. In this way, he graudally breaks down her serene philosophy. She is resting in the garden one day when he carries a demand for her to return to the house at once. She refuses. Her husband appears and commands her. She gently and firmly declines to be humiliated in the presence of others. Howard now refuses to speak to her unless she humbly apologizes.

As an extreme measure, Patricia leaves her husband. She is pursued to her retreat by Reynolds, who wishes to compromise her. The husband follows with detectives. Reynolds escapes. A long chase follows to determine who is the man in the case. It is discovered that Reynolds is the guilty one at a moment of his tragic death. Howard returns home to find himself abandoned by his wife and ruined by his business secretary. It dawns upon him at last that he hasn't a true friend in the world. He prepares to commit suicide, but the girl he has so grossly insulted returns and forgives him, even loves him now with motherly sympathy because he is so utterly helpless.

"Pollyanna"

Mary Pickford's First Production for the United Artists is a Gem of Exquisite Pathos and Humor.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN viewing Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna," children will be charmed by the playful humor in swift contrast with delicate notes of pathos. Mature minds will discover in its theme a suggestion for their own life-quest of happiness—that sweetness of personality is the golden rule of personal conduct. Because of Mary's truthful interpretation of this tender motif, "Pollyanna," as pictured, is bound to far outreach the influence of "Pollyanna," as printed. It will also be much more extensively enjoyed as a story. It is that much more important as a medium of extending a simple philosophy of happiness.

Miss Pickford's role is one of the most difficult because of its bare simplicity. It is merely that of a very young girl radiant with the beautiful glamor of pure childhood. Yet she appears on the screen but a few moments, before she arouses heart-felt interest. It is because of her keen sensibilities that "Little Mary" is able to convey all shade of emotional impulse and the swift-flying thoughts passing through her mind. She is disconcertingly affectionate when, coming in out of the rain, and, soaked to the skin, she leaps into her aunt's arms and makes a mess of a handsome silk dress. She disarms anger among the grown-ups at one moment by her amusing awkwardness, at another by the very innocence of her exuberant joy. She nourishes a dream of making everybody glad, and her philosophy radiates among the weak, the sick, the halt and the blind, by both example and contagion. When misfortune lays a cruel and crippling hand on her and she is tense with the anguish of a spiritual struggle, nothing could be more exquisitely portrayed than her attempt to mask her suffering by forcing a faint, quivering smile. Her mastery of the role is an inspiration.

In the supporting cast there are many fine types, all of them so well chosen as to hold the mood of the play, but honors go to Katherine Griffith as Aunt Polly Harrington and to young Howard Ralston as Jimmie Bean. These two distinct characterizations contribute heavily to the abundant humor of the story. The atmosphere of an old New England village is well preserved, considering that the play was produced in California. There are, in fact, no marring elements. The sum of values is therefore so high that "Pollyanna" must be ranked as a gem and entitled to a place of honor among classics of the screen.

The Story.

"Pollyanna" tries to sing her father to sleep at the moment he is dying. He makes a feeble response and inspires her to try to be glad herself and make others so. It is no easy matter at first, but the idea grows with her until it dominates her mind and conduct. She is sent to her Aunt Polly ,a middle-aged lady of acid temper. She arrives in a rain storm and is drenched, but she makes the best of it and reaches the house soaked but cheerful. The impression she makes is not favorable. Her attention being called to her wet feet, she tries to not soil the carpet by attaching sheets of paper to her shoes. She becomes entangled in the threads of some lace her aunt is making and undoes the work of weeks as she goes up stairs. Her enthusiasm is dampened when she is ushered into a garret room. She attempts to escape from it to a better one and reaches that of her aunt, nearly frightening the latter to death.

After this bad start, Pollyonna becomes more thoughtful. In one of her wild moments she discovers another orphan, Jimmie Bean, and attempts to have him adopted by her aunt, even hiding him in the cellar, where he is discovered and driven out. Pollyanna sticks to him and aids others to be glad. She visits a bedridden woman who rather enjoys being an invalid and takes along a blind man who plays the accordion and a deaf woman of no particular accomplishments, by way of cheering up the invalid. Everywhere she spreads her doctrine, "Just be glad—that's the game."

Pollyanna is caught stealing apples from a neighbor ,rich Mr. Pendleton, and jumps from the tree directly into his arms, knocking him down. She reluctantly permits him to take her into his house. He there unveils a picture of her mother, whom he once loved. He thereafterd becomes her staunch friend ,and he adopts the orphan, Jimmie Bean. On all sides she accumulates warm friends, particularly among the poor and unfortunate, but her Aunt Polly remains obdurate. She is heart-sore over an early romance with the village doctor. One day when Aunt Polly goes to town to do some shopping, Pollyanna runs wild in the village. In an attempt to save a child she is run over by a motor car and badly disabled. When she is carried to the house, it is found that her lower limbs are paralyzed. All her friends are grief-stricken. At last Aunt Polly realizes how much the child has meant to her. She softens and gives Pollyanna cause to be glad, with little demonstrations of affection.

Pollyanna has time to think of many things while confined to her bed. She declares at last that she will have none other than the village doctor. Thus is Aunt Polly's old flame restored to her. The doctor makes a careful survey of Pollyann's case and decides one day to test her ability to walk. The whole village is interested. Those who have been helped by Pollyanna's bright philosophy gather in groups near the gate to await the news. The test is made. Pollyanna can walk feebly. There is general rejoicing.

Jimmie Bean is among the last to congratulate Pollyanna. He does so bashfully —he has learned to deeply love her. He places a ring on her finger and conveys the astounding information that he will be able to shave in five more years. They discuss their prospects. He has decided to become a street car conductor. The last seen of them is in their vision, Pollyanna, with a half dozen children, taking a free ride on Jimmie Bean's street car.

"The Woman in the Suitcase"

Thomas H. Ince Production Starring Enid Bennett Reveals Good Heart Interest.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE are sure-fire themes that need only half a chance to make a novel, play or picture a success. The theme of "The Woman in the Suitcase" belong to one of the surest of the sure-fires. Since the days of 'The Little Treasure" the devoted daughter, whose love for her parents prompts her to make every effort until her erring father is brought back to the wife he is neglecting for another woman, has been a favorite character with both author and public. In the Thomas H. Ince production, starring Enid Bennett, the story loses none of its effectiveness. It gathers speed slowly and the director has been too anxious to drive home some of the points; but the development is always straightforward and the sympathetic interests is never permitted to slacken.

Matters never reach the tragic state, but the characters are real human beings and the drama in their lives is as true today as it was the first time it did duty in a tale of fiction. The scenes involving the heroine in what are known as "sporty" surroundings are handled with discretion, and every detail of production is of excellent grade. The comedy relief is supplied by the hero, a novel and welcome scheme which leaves all of the heroics for his sweetheart, while the spectator laughs with, and not at, the young man. "The Woman in the Suitcase" should please any normal being.

Enid Bennett is a happy choice for Mary Moreland. The part is that of a clever, attractive and true-hearted little woman, and Miss Bennett is all this to a most satisfying degree. William Conklin, Claire McDowell, Dorcas Matthews and Roland Lee are the leading members of the admirable supporting company.

Story by C. Gardner Sullivan.
Directed by Fred Niblo.
Supervised by Thomas H. Ince.

The Story.

"The Woman in the Suitcase" refers to a photograph which Mary Moreland finds in her father's suitcase when he returns from what is supposed to have been a business trip, but which had for its object a dishonorable affair with a woman named Dollie. Knowing that her mother's heart is being broken by the neglect of the man who promised always to cherish her, Mary determines to meet her father's charmer and send her about her business. She learns that Dollie has arrived in New York and is frequenting the cabarets and restaurants with her father. Having no male friend in whom she feels she can confide, Mary advertises for a young man to be her escort in the "White Light" district. The son of the proprietor of the paper which carries the "ad" scents an adventure and secures the position. Without revealing her name, but dressed in one of her most becoming frocks, Mary meets her escort in the lobby of a Broadway hotel, and together they start on a round of the lobster palaces.

That night Mary sees her father and Dollie at a cabaret, and hears the woman make an appointment with one of her own harpies for the next afternoon. Learning that her escort is on speaking terms with the latter woman, Mary has him take her to the restaurant the next day and introduce her under a false name to Dollie's friend. Matters progress until Mary is invited to Dollie's flat, and it is arranged that she shall come the next night and Dollie wil have not only her protector there, but a lively young gentleman to entertain Mary. By this time, the hired escort is so fascinated by his pretty employer that he is ready to go through fire and water for her.

The plan is carried out and Mary finds herself alone in a room with a man whose attentions are rapidly approaching the danger point, but the faithful escort break in on the scene and chases the now completely cowed young gentleman out of the house. When Mr. Moreland arrives and Mary hears her father talking in the next room to Dollie, she pretends to burst into a fit of drunken laughter. Her father recognizes her voice and opens the door. Shocked at finding her there, Mary explains what has brought her, and Moreland goes back home with his daughter and asks his wife's forgiveness for his conduct. There is a happy and united family in the Moreland house that night, and a message over the phone informs Mary that her escort has found out her name and address and is coming up the next day to tell her how much he loves her.

"Blind Love"

Lucy Cotton Starred in the Gerald F. Bacon Six-Part Production Holds Her Own with Grace and Beauty

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

AN adaptation of "The Substitute Prisoner," by Max Marcin, is presented in the Gerald F. Bacon production, "Blind Love," featuring Lucy Cotton. The picture, which will be distributed by Nathan Hirsh, is rich in both exterior and interior settings, and especially in its earlier stages glimpses of real merit in direction occur. As the picture progresses, and one is still alive to the charm of atmosphere, and the star, there is also a consciousness that the story is not being worked to its limits, that one or two of the characters are miscast, and that the director has failed to supply the action with sufficient color.

The story has a good theme, but not an unusual one; and the picture suggests that a great deal of money, time and care has been spent on its production. George Le Guere does one of the most effective pieces of work of the cast, and Charles Butler is excellent in a small part.

The picture should succeed through the beauty and charming personality of Lucy Cotton and the richness and extensiveness of the settings.

Adapted from "The Substitute Prisoner," by Max Marcin.
Direction by Oliver Bailey.
Length about 5,500 feet.

The Story.

The story of "Blind Love" centers about Josephine Burden, a beautiful young heiress, who is sojourning at a summer resort with her guardian, Herbert Whitmore. At the same hotel, is George Collins, a New York broker, and his wife, a former sweetheart of Whitmore's. At the casino, Josephine meets Horace Beard, who is wasting his forces in gambling. Upon being introduced to the beautiful girl, of whose identity as an heiress he is ignorant. Horace resolves to quit the gaming-house.

Collins, in sore straits for money, sees in Josephine's fascination for Beard a chance to refill his coffers. He takes advantage of a moment when Beard is under the influence of liquor to get his signature to a note for $50,000 to be paid in the event of Beard's marriage to the heiress, as a reward for making the introduction.

The marriage of the pair takes place, and after the honeymoon, Collins springs the note. Josephine overhears the conversation between the two men, and decides to renounce her husband, at the same time that she makes the check out for the $50,000. Beard enters the Collins home by stealth in search of the agreement. In doing so he comes in contact with Collins and Whitmore. A fight which ensues ends in the discharge of a pistol which lodges a bullet in Whitmore's side, causing his death a short time afterward. Whitmore leaves a note beside him and a pistol on the floor ,to proclaim to the world that he has committed suicide, thus exonerating the husband of his former sweetheart. Josephine accepts the explanations and is reunited to her husband on the scene of their romance.

Story of a Crook Who Forges a Note on His Friend's Heiress Wife.

Exploitation Angles: Don't forget that Max Marcin is the author of a number of big stage successes, such a "The House of Glass," "Cheating Cheaters" and others. This will probably prove your best selling angle. Tell that it is a crook play along the lines of the other Marcin successes and sell on past performances.

Comments

THE FLOOR BELOW (Rolin-Pathe).—A one-reel comic, featuring "Snub" Pollard. He plays the role of a henpecked husband who joins an equally unhappy man on the floor below. They rebel and turn the tables on their wives. This is full of knockabout humor of the burlesque type and shows some interesting phases of life in an apartment house.

WEST IS BEST(Western), Jan. 17.—A two-reel subject, featuring Hoot Gibson and Josephine Hill. The latter is called to her Western home from an Eastern college and brings a party of girls with her, accompanied by one man. Dramatic incidents scare out the visitors, but the heroine remains and weds her cowboy hero. This is not as strong in action as some of its predecessors, but carries the interest quite well. It makes an average number .

IN THE LION'S DEN (Universal).—Chapter 5 of "The Lion Man," in two reels. Stella and Westcott escape from the depths of the well, into which they had plunged. Both are later surrounded in Westcott's cabin, where a lively gun-fight ensues. The Lion Man appears and gives timely aid to Westcott. The number carries the interest well and winds up with a strong climax.

THE HOUSE OF HORRORS (Universal). Chapter 6 of "The Lion Man." Stella and Lacy escape after their plunge from the roof of a house into the lion's cage. Westcott impersonates a priest and performs a fake wedding ceremony in order to save Stella from an unwelcome marriage. The latter flees and enters the house occupied by "The Lion Man," and is followed by Lacy. The number contains much new and interesting action.

BLIND CHANCE (Western), Jan. 23.—A two-reel subject, featuring Robert Burns, Charles Dorian, Alice Wakefield and Peggy O'Dare. Th plot has a good holding interest, though rather crudely handled in places. It concerns a murder for which the hero assumes the blame in order to shield a woman's name. The woman's son grows up and seeks revenge upon the hero, but the mother finally speaks. The closing scenes are quite dramatic.

NAUGHTY LIONS AND WILD MEN (Century), Jan. 28.—A fine comic number, in which the heroine promises to marry the bravest hunter among her men acquaintances. The burlesque hunting experiences are very laughable ;also the adventures with the cannibals. Many animals, including young lions and leopards, appear, and the baby cannibal add a number of laughs. The number will please everybody and children in particular.

HE AIN'T DONE RIGHT BY OUR NELL (Fox).—An extremely laughable Mutt and Jeff subject, in which the pair take an active part in a burlesque play. The old time melodrama comes in for some original treatment. This goes ahead of the usual average for these animated numbers, which is very high.

ON STRIKE (Fox).—Bud Fisher, creator of Mutt and Jeff, appears in this number personally. Mutt and Jeff go on strike, demanding a 75 per cent. increase in pay, a three-hour day and a five-day week. They leave Bud and put on a moving picture of their own, but it falls down and they are glad to return to him. An original subject.

HUNGRY LIONS AND TENDER HEARTS (Sunshine).—A typical two-reel comic, introducing Jack Cooper, Glen Cavender, Marcel Rea and others. A large troupe of lions also takes part and they stir up a considerable riot on the part of the principal actors and a bevy of pretty chorus girls. The number is a good laugh getter.

BROWNIE'S BUSY DAY (Century), Jan. 28.—The Century wonder dog takes a prominent part in this two-reel comic, performing some amusing and almost human feats. The story concerns a salesman who falls in love with a girl clerk in a small store. The grocery scenes are entertaining. The capture of a masquerading thief is a feature of the story.

SLIPPERY SLICKERS (Rolin-Pathe).—A comic number, featuring "Snub" Pollard. He attends a masque ball, where jewels are stolen and passed about in burlesque fashion. The costumes are good and the action quite amusing, though there is not much story interest. The "Owl Drug Company" gets some pretty conspicuous advertising on one of the costumes.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E.T. KEYSER

Crandall's New Washington House Is Full of Meritorious Features

CRANDALL'S York Theatre, a beautiful one-floor house, the eighth theatre in the Crandall Chain in Washington, opened November 27. It occupies the entire end of the square of ground fronting on Georgia avenue, 131 feet, and on Quebec and Princeton streets, 72½ feet. The seating capacity is approximately 1,000 and the cost of the building was about $125,000. It is an extraordinary theatre, in view of the seating capacity, and the elaborateness of the house for such an outlying residence district. There are numerous innovations which have been introduced into the design and construction of the theatre by the architect, Reginald Wyckliffe Geare, of Washington, D. C., who has previously designed several theatres for the Crandall interests, the most important of which are the Knickerbocker and Metropolitan. He also has under-construction for the same interests the Strand Theatre at Cumberland, Maryland, an 1,800-seat house.

Seven Display Boards.

The exterior of the building is treated on three sides with a series of arches about six feet wide and fifteen feet high. In the center of each is located a three-sheet poster display board electrically lighted from in front by an over-hanging X-ray bracket.

There are seven display boards indicating the picture schedule for the seven days in the week. The material of the exterior is biege-toned brick, while the arches around the poster frames are finished in marble cement stucco, a new method of treating the exterior of monumental buildings.

This treatment gives the arches the appearance of being finished in variegated marble. The walls of the building are of brick and hollow tile while the gypsum roof, which is the first to be put on a theatre in the East, is supported by steel trusses. The gypsum used has many advantages as a roofing material, in that it has a very low heat conductivity which will save many tons of coal in addition to being one of the strongest and most fireproof of materials. The theatre throughout is absolutely fireproof.

An Attractive Lobby.

The entrance is located at the northerly end facing Georgia avenue and is protected from weather by a segmental glass and iron marquise which extends to the curb.

The segment of the marquise follows the line of the large segmental arch twenty-five feet in length, which forms the entrance to the vestibule where the ticket booth is located. The ticket booth is of bronze and glass and built into the front wall of the lobby. Access to the lobby is gained by two doors on either side of the ticket booth. The lobby is twenty feet wide, fifty feet long, and thirty feet in height. The unusual height of the ceiling insures adequate lobby ventilation. The lobby walls which are finished in a soft green tone, are paneled with gilt mouldings.

A Beautiful Auditorium.

Set into the wall at either side of the lobby and not occupying any of the floor space are four one-sheet self-lighting poster frames. At the end of the lobby opposite the entrance is a large crystal mirror with a circular top in front of which is a marble seat. The lobby is appropriately sub-divided with brass poles and chains for handling the crowds with safety and dispatch.

The auditorium which is thirty feet

Good-bye delayed slides!
Good-bye broken slides!
Good-bye dirty looking, blurred, illegible slides!

There is something new on the screen—it's the new celluloid unbreakable slide.

Just as rapidly as we can increase our capacity Producers are adopting the new Fine-Art Celluloid Unbreakable Slides in place of the uncertain, easily broken old-fashioned glass slides.

During the past 60 days we have been forced to refuse (on account of lack of capacity) an average of 30,000 slide orders weekly.

Since July 15th we have made and sent out hundreds of thousands of these great screen innovations.

INTERNATIONAL LANTERN SLIDE CORPORATION,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

I have just completed a trip covering many of our important branches.

I made it a special point to ask our branch managers for a criticism on your celluloid slides which we have been using on all of our releases since the last of July.

Your slides are decidedly successful with all of our exhibitors, who seem to appreciate uniform, easily read, clean advertisements that always reach them in time to advertise coming productions.

Your slides also seem to have done away with one big annoying problem that our branch managers have had to handle heretofore, namely, the difficulties in delays and breakage caused by parcel post, second class mail or express shipments of the old-fashioned glass slides.

Yours very truly,
W. R. SHEEHAN, General Manager.

1493-1505 Broadway

New York, December 4, 1919.

INTERNATIONAL LANTERN SLIDE CORP., New York City.

Dear Sir:

Regarding your lantern slides, as you perhaps now, we are using them exclusively now and have abandoned glass slides altogether.

We find that your slides are superior to glass chiefly because of the fact that they can be mailed and are unbreakable and are not destroyed by the heat of the lantern. We also find them better artistically. Undoubtedly his will be the only style of slide used for show purposes in the near future.

Yours very truly,
N. T. GRANLUND.

TO EXHIBITORS:

In answer to the many requests that we are receiving daily, we wish to advise exhibitors that we have not as yet made up any stock slides—such as "Goodnight", "Tomorrow's Features", etc. We shall make a series of stock slides for exhibitors' special use shortly and announce them in the trade papers.

Floor Plan of York Theatre.
Note generous lobby and aisle space provided.

high, is rectangular in shape with side walls divided into panels by seven arches. Between the arches a relieving motif of two pilasters is introduced.

At the center of each of the arches and hung from a point in line with the spring of the arch is a large oval gilt picture frame with gold ribbons displaying pastels of picture stars. The note of color gives to the auditorium a domestic touch which is often lacking in theatres. The screen is located in the center of three proscenium arches. The two side arches being arranged to afford special effects in scenery and scenic lighting. The scenery is composed of lattice work representing a conservatory through the arches of which are shown in the distance, a pair of beautiful fountains, while the side drops provide the shrubbery and trees in the foreground.

The arches are arranged in a semi-elipse, which is crowned by a scenic ceiling upon which sky scene has been painted with a cupid sitting on branches blowing a pair of pipes which are outlined on a golden moon electrically lighted from behind.

The color note in the auditorium is a combination of gold and soft olive greens, four or five tones of which were used. The curtains for the three arches were designed especially for the theatre by the architect and are of gold "Baronet" satin relieved with applique, in black, silver and blue.

Unique Lighting System.

The lighting system of this auditorium is most unique. Between each of the seven pairs of pilasters on the side walls are located gold and green lambs' heads, which are in keeping with the style of the architecture, and upon the heads are mounted frosted glass urns, decorated in ivory and gold.

The urns are lighted by colored lamps placed inside. This lighting is continued throughout the picture. In the ceiling of the auditorium are ten glass panels measuring six feet by eighteen feet, the frames of which are in bronze. The glass is a soft amber tone for cathedral lighting. Above these glass panels in the roof space are located 58-100 watt lamps with reflectors which are directed downward and throw an even illumination into the entire auditorium, so that one may read a newspaper at any point in the house and still not have the illumination interfere with the picture on the screen. With this method of lighting all of the illumination is thrown upon the seats and aisles. Moreover, it illuminates the entire auditorium.

The lamps are arranged on three separate circuits, allowing for the use of full, secondary and very low intensities at will. The lamps on the circuit which give the lowest intensity have been so graded in size as to furnish very little illumination at the front and a higher value at the rear.

Heating and Ventilation Distinctive.

Another distinctive feature of the theatre is the heating and ventilating system, especially designed for it by the architect and patterned after that which he designed for the Knickerbocker and Metropolitan theatres, both of which have proven great successes.

Heat is introduced without the use of radiators or mushrooms and may be regulated to any desired temperature, the audience being constantly supplied with fresh warm air in the winter and, by the same method, with fresh cool air in the summer; the Typhoon equipment being capable of changing the entire atmosphere of the building twice per minute.

Orchestra Pit a Feature.

Another feature worthy of mention is the orchestra pit which is located under the stage at a level two feet below the floor of the auditorium, the same being separated from the auditorium by a monumental bronze railing.

Goergen's Aparatus in Operation.
The plant in the flower pot is having its development recorded on the film.

U. S. Agricultural Department Photographer Improves Camera

GEORGE R. GOERGENS, motion picture photographer of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., has devised an automatic motion picture camera which will photograph slowly growing and developing plant, insect and animal life.

This camera is operated by electrical power connected with timing clocks, so arranged that at regular intervals the lights will turn on, one or more exposures or as many feet of film as is desired will be photographed and when the operation is completed the lights will be extinguished and the shutter will close until the next interval for exposure arrives.

Previously, where any attempts have been made to photograph the development of slow developing plants or insects, it has been necessary for a camera operator to stay with the machine so that at the stated periods the stage of growth could be filmed. Where the work was continued for periods of twenty-four hours or longer this necessitated the services of three cameramen working in shifts of eight hours each.

The Goergens camera minimizes the services of the operator, as all that is necessary is to wind up the clocks used for timing purposes once every twenty-four hours.

Timing Clocks Used.

As shown in the accompanying illustration, the lights which abet the picture taking operations are connected directly with two timing clocks, which, in turn, are joined to respective relays which start and stop the cranking of the camera and in order turn on and extinguish the lights.

The starter clock has a special mechanism and a spring motor, which throws on the lights at the appointed time, and at regular intervals thereafter, while the other clock is provided with another spring motor, as well as an electrical magnet which shuts off all the current at the specified periods after each series of pictures or desired amount of film have been exposed. The current passes directly from the first timing clock into the starter relay, which governs the length of time the motor will run for each exposure. Subsequently, after the motor has run the desired period, the second timing clock, through the stopping relay, shuts off the power.

Clock Set for Any Interval.

The clocks can be set for any interval, a common practice in photographing growing plants being to adjust the camera to make exposure every half hour throughout the day and night. The amount of film exposed at each interval is also capable of easy regulation. This automatic camera is adapted as a valuable aid to scientific investigations, which cover many and diverse conditions and territories.

It provides the effective means for photographing the life cycles and activities of all varieties of insects—both beneficial and obnoxious, while it is an energetic policeman in locating and clearing up complications which attend the infestations of plants and crops with different kinds of pestiferous fungi and allied plagues.

In pictorial form, it renders the deepest secrets of the scientific laboratory available to the average layman, so that he can understand the "how, why and wherefore" of the disease or discovery.

Mr. Goergens is also the originator of what may be termed the "sprint camera." During the war emergency, Uncle Sam conducted various investigations conected with the wearability and durability of different kinds of footwear.

In these studies it was necessary to photograph the legs and feet of many pedestrians, in order to ascertain just how they lifted and lowered their feet, what bend of the shoes resulted and how they slid or scuffled their feet.

Mr. Goergens decided to speed up his camera to obviate the blurred and indistinct negatives. He devised a gear case with four gears, which he fastened to the side of the camera. This device engages the crank shaft and gears up the speed of the camera.

Such an attachement does not disable the camera for ordinary work, as there are two separate shafts provided for a crank handle, one filming sixteen pictures a second, while the other makes 128 exposures during a like period.

Explaining the Jam.

This accessory was successfully used also in making pictures of machine gun jams, for the instruction of aviators in how to avoid or remedy mishaps of this character. A British officer became familiar with the use of the accelerator for use on motion picture cameras and officially requested that his government also be permitted to utilize the Goergens' invention.

And, subsequently, all the English cameras used in war service work were equipped as "sprint cameras."

They have demonstrated their value wherever pictures of very rapid motion have had to be made. It is anticipated that some official recognition, both on the part of the British and American governments, will shortly be forthcoming in appreciation of what a talented movie photographer did in helping to overthrow the Huns.

The Evolution of a Great and Successful Business

We have said and we repeat, that the RITCHEY LITHOGRAPHING CORPORATION, is the greatest organization of poster artists and poster printers in the world! Why is it the greatest? For many reasons, and it is our present purpose to sum those reasons up—briefly—definitely—concisely—but without the slightest exaggeration.

In the first place, it is an organization founded upon an ideal. An ideal that had long been in the mind of MR. JAMES V. RITCHEY when the corporation, of which he is the president, was formed. As the head of a producing company he had spent hundreds of thousands of dollars for poster advertising. He found it was impossible to secure the kind of posters he was insistent upon having, real posters—convincing posters—powerful posters with a positive advertising value.

Although that was many years ago, even then there was one man, and one man only, who could make that kind of poster. That man was MR. DANIEL PETIGOR, the founder of the Poster Artists Association of America, and universally conceded to be the greatest poster color artist in this country. Practically every great poster had been made under his direct supervision. They joined forces and the result was the formation of the RITCHEY LITHOGRAPHING CORPORATION, MR. PETIGOR becoming Vice-president.

Every man added to the organization has been literally hand-picked from the industry. Each one of them is an eminent poster specialist, with a reputation that is built upon great native talent, plus long intensive training. It is a diversified staff, each one doing his own special work, in his own special field of the poster art—and under the leadership of MR. PETIGOR they have been welded into a perfect ensemble.

The efforts of the entire organization are directed toward one definite end—the production of perfect motion picture posters! It is not possible to make a better poster than the RITCHEY poster at any price, for there is no poster talent left to form another such company!

FOR sheer entertainment value "Why Change Your Wife?" has never been surpassed. It's as up-to-date as tomorrow's newspaper and yet it has a theme as old as life and love itself—a theme more entertaining than any story the mind of man has yet conceived. who has seen "Huckleberry Finn" says: "This picture is going to be the biggest money-making picture for exhibitors ever released!"

Millions have read—millions are still reading the book. And the picture is the book itself brought to life.

——masks, music, money! the soul story of a Slavic temperament, lassoed by a wedding ring. The tale of what New York did to four persons tossed in its bitter-sweet caldron!

——beautiful girls! the click-clack of high heels on polished floors to the soft throbbing of music and the swish of incredible gowns!

——and Manhattan! the entire vanity box of the world's wonder city turned over and spread out for the delectation of those who've seen and those who've never seen New York!

And the Copperhead said: "Who was there left to tell? Ma and Joey—gone?"

Daughter of his daughter: I've always felt that way down in your heart there was something glorious and that some day you would tell."

Still Breaking Records

"EVERYWOMAN" is everywhere reaping a whirlwind of profits. Day by day come the telegrams telling of its wonderful record-breaking business—in big and little theatres, here, there and everywhere. Like this:

"Everywoman" broke the house record at the Queen Theatre, Dallas, Texas, by more than $200."

"With highest admission prices ever charged in Denver and with disagreeable weather prevailing both the Rialto and Princess Theatres played to continuous capacity with that marvel of the screen, 'Everywoman.' Three in a row each bigger and better than the others, is placing the word Paramount just where it belongs."

"Everywoman" broke record at opening at Broadway Strand, Detroit, yesterday by $200. Very favorable comment from all who saw it. Looks like another long run."

You can't miss making big profits with such a picture marvel as

THE GREAT FBO FILMWAY

Open Letters to American Producers—I.

The Great Filmway

DOES it ever enter your head to doubt the efficiency of the Railroad System? No; you take your ticket and leave the rest to the Railroad!

Just as a great Railroad is a centralized system of transport, so is The Great Filmway the centralized system of Film distribution for the United Kingdom. The Producer entrusts his Feature to F. B. O. and the Feature reaches the extreme limits of its chain of Exhibitors.

The American Producer who has a good opinion of his Production—and has that opinion backed up by its wonderful success on his own ground—is frequently disappointed by his failure to make good in the United Kingdom. The system to which that Producer entrusted its distribution was imperfect.

The result: Loss of cash and loss of prestige to the American Studio concerned.

We are prepared to pay immediate cash for every acceptable Feature—as a live organization we can assure the limit of publicity for your Features and your Stars.

The result to you is not only success but the added prestige which The Great Filmway can bring both your Studio and your "Stars."

THE Great Filmway devised a scientific system, based on practical experience, to ensure that every Production with which they have been entrusted should appear in every worthwhile Picture Theatre. As a result, Film Booking Offices (1919), Ltd., have achieved top rank among British Film Exchanges as the most perfectly equipped organization in the United Kingdom.

From their Central Office in London, their activities radiate in every direction and are linked up with nine branches located at the nine central points which nucleate the operations of every Exhibitor in the country. Each of these Branches is fully equipped with Travellers, Private Theatres, Despatch Departments, Telephone System, etc.

The Central Offices at 22, Soho Square consist of an eight-floor, self-complete building, housing two Private Theatres.

These are the bare details. Here are a few of the recent achievements of the F. B. O. organization.

During the past 18 months their notable successes have been:

Ex-Ambassador Gerard's "MY FOUR YEARS IN GERMANY," which appeared in every Leading Picture Theatre in the United Kingdom.

"COUNT BERNSTORFF'S SECRETS," better known in the United States as "THE EAGLE'S EYE," which achieved record bookings in the United Kingdom.

"SHERLOCK HOLMES"

"RAFFLES"

THE ESSANAY-CHAPLIN COMEDIES

"ON TRIAL," "THE ARGYLE CASE," "BAIRNSFATHER'S CARTOONS," etc., etc.

American Producers who want to secure "Britain's Best" in the way of prices, prestige and publicity will find it to their best advantage to get into communication at once with The Great Filmway.

The test of its value to exhibitor and public is the frequency of the 'beats' a News Service scores by giving the news first—and the reason International Film Service scores more beats than any two of its competitors combined is because it sets no limit to expense in maintaining maximum efficiency in news-gathering and speedy distribution. That is why International with three news reels a week, released through Universal, gives you the news while it's news—first.

LIVE SPARKS

By CAROLINE SAYRE

Directed by ERNEST C. WARDE

There are not many screen stars who cause audiences everywhere to say: "I like that star." They say this about J. Warren Kerrigan.

There are really not many stars who invariably and without exception have perfect direction and technical production. All Kerrigan productions have both.

There are but few screen stars who persist in their popularity; who roll up increasing popularity that is traceable directly to themselves even without taking into account their stories, direction and production. J. Warren Kerrigan has grown consistently through sheer liking on the part of the public.

"Live Sparks," his latest production, will cause exhibitors and the public to like him still more.

"Here is another production as big as 'Desert Gold' or 'The Westerners'!... with a bigger heart story than any Benjamin B. Hampton has produced before."

Every word of this is true.

"The Sagebrusher" is a very big, very powerful, very human and very beautiful screen production of a great novel; done in the spirit its author intended.

It has pathos and tears; it has love and laughter; humanness and sweetness. It is genuine. Big exhibitors are booking it for immediate play dates.

WHAT SORT OF ATMOSPHERE GETS MONEY INTO YOUR BOX OFFICE?

That's a new angle! Have you ever given thought to it? You know, players and direction aside, that atmosphere in the picture is something to think about—that certain settings and locales do appeal to your audiences, while others miss. Which are the money-getting scenes? No surer guide to this vital box-office problem can be found than is presented by

Richard Harding Davis'
"SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE"
An Allan Dwan Production

Tiny scenes pull the spectators out of their seats and make whole audiences burst into applause. Ask Tom Moore, E. J. Bowes, Bernard Depkin, Ken Finlay, L. M. Boas and other big-time exhibitors who have run the picture to immense business. Book this Special for as early in 1920 as the nearest Realart Exchange can let you have it.

REALART PICTURES CORPORATION

It Cost Realart—

No, you're mistaken; it isn't the same old story. This really concerns you—involves a fundamental principle.

MARY MILES MINTER'S

greatest motion picture

"ANNE OF GREEN GABLES"

Directed by William Desmond Taylor

Scenario by Frances Marion, based on the four "Anne" books by L. M. Montgomery did cost Realart more than can be collected from it in rentals. There were two troubles—poor photography, due to the wettest summer in New England's history, and inadequate portrayal of some of the roles. There was one remedy—to return the whole company to New England and retake most of the scenes.

It was tough luck for an infant concern. But the answer was, and always will be: A production must be right, or be made right, before it can carry the Realart trade mark.

REALART
PICTURES CORPORATION

And It Is Right!

"ANNE OF GREEN GABLES" has brought more enthusiastic messages from exhibitors than have resulted from any five previous pictures! It has been shown at the Rivoli in New York; America, Denver; Rialto, Washington; Tivoli, San Francisco; New Miller, Los Angeles, and there has not yet been an unfavorable report. It is a picture with heart punch—with universal appeal—and it gets and holds the crowds!

MARY MILES MINTER

They're All Talking about the remarkably natural transition of the heroine of

"ERSTWHILE SUSAN"

from a browbeaten, ignorant household drudge to the beautifully gowned, cultured wife of the Governor. There have been few greater character interpretations in the history of the screen than that by

CONSTANCE BINNEY

Direction of JAMES S. ROBERTSON,

in the role of Barnabetta Dreary. Usually, you know, audiences must imagine such a transition. In "ERSTWHILE SUSAN," they see it!

That is one reason the stage play was such a success when Mrs. Fiske appeared in it. That's one reason so many thousands have read the book, "Barnabetta" by Helen R. Martin, on which the play is based. That's one reason this Constance Binney picture has been marching across the country to the sweet music of steadily click-click-clicking turnstiles.

ALICE JOYCE

in the Spectacular Drury Lane Melodrama

"THE SPORTING DUCHESS"

By Augustus Harris, Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton

Scenario by Lucien Hubbard Directed by GEORGE TERWILLIGER

The sporting duchess was sporting, but not sporty. Women envied her beauty and social position; men begrudged her husband's possession of her love. Between them they sought her downfall. Although guiltless, she was divorced. Her child was taken from her. Her fortune was lost. Then she sacrificed her jewels to bid in Clipstone, the duke's thoroughbred, when he was put up at auction. The big, thrilling racing scene is a big part of the story, and a glorious section of the picture.

Miss Joyce has had many roles in her glorious screen career, but it is doubtful if any ever equalled that of the Duchess of Desborough in this incomparable production.

Gentlemen:

I am writing this unsolicited letter in appreciation of the excellent laboratory work you are now doing.

On a recent tour of the United States I dropped into small theatres in out-of-the-way towns, and in checking up several of my productions in which you have done the laboratory work I found the prints of excellent quality, and also that the small towns receive the same fine quality of work as do the bigger cities.

My experience in the past has been that film laboratories would give me good prints only in the bigger cities, where they knew I might make a visit; and it is very gratifying to find that besides the excellent quality of your work, that producers can obtain a square deal in getting every print from your hands, one as good as the other.

You did my printing on "Daddy Long Legs", "The Unpardonable Sin", and "In Old Kentucky", and I am pleased to give your firm all work on my future productions.

Wishing you every success for the coming season, I am,

Yours truly.

Gest Throws a Bomb

MORRIS GEST, stage producer, stirred up things when in Chicago on January 19 he paused to remark that "the American theatre is going to hell." For this condition he blames Wall Street "doughboys" who have "placed more than $100,000,000 in the movie pastime." The financial men are slowly killing the spoken drama, Mr. Gest declares, by buying up the country's leading theatres, the star actors and actresses and the "big league" producers.

"With the exception of those of a half dozen producers most of the theatres in America are now owned and controlled by motion pictures," the producer complains. "Unless something is done within the next three years Wall Street will be in complete control of the theatre."

Arthur Hopkins, another stage producer, expresses the opinion that Mr. Gest is correct in the main. Carl Laemmle suggests Mr. Gest is paying a genuine compliment to the motion picture industry when he says Wall Street is investing in theatres and converting them into motion picture houses. The former declares that if the statement is true it is an admission that these men of admitted business astuteness recognize that the great bulk of the American people want moving picture entertainment. Mr. Laemmle recalls that the present season has been one of the most successful in the history of theatricals and points out that the motion picture is acting as a stimulus for all forms of entertainment.

Gore Bill the Limit

THE bill introduced in the Senate by Mr. Gore, of Oklahoma, eliminating from interstate commerce all pictures including anything of a criminal nature would seem to mark the peak of the movement to attend to your neighbor's business. That its logical working out would spell the end of the motion picture business as an industry probably would in no wise disturb the sponsors of the measure. While unquestionably it is true that 2,142 churches now are using screens in their edifices, also it is true that the men who make motion pictures are not prepared to give over their studios to production restricted to this limited market. That is what the passing of Senator Gore's measure would mean.

An editorial writer in the New York Times, in commenting on the bill in question, very aptly remarks: "Indeed, these are days in which almost anybody can get encouragement and sympathy in efforts to stop people from doing almost anything, but there are also folk in considerable numbers who are a bit weary of restrictions and inhibitions upon action hitherto left in the domain of personal responsibility, and it may be that the Oklahomans also will hear voices, loud and many, saying that there is little, if any, more excuse for banning all films dealing with criminals and crime than there would be for excluding from public libraries books the authors of which used the same material."

A NEW producer is with us. He is not new to the industry, however, by a goodly number of years. He has been through the preliminary mill—especially that of distribution. He knows all the ropes. Here's best wishes to Arthur Searles Kane.

Camera May Aid Bertillon

SUPPLEMENTING the Bertillon system by the use of the motion picture camera in the identification of criminals, as suggested to the San Francisco police by Thomas H. Ince, would seem to be a wise step. To throw on the screens of a community or of a state or a group of states the figure of a person sought by the police means that the authorities will have the aid of thousands instead of leaving the detection of the one sought to the comparative few of the professional detectives. The adoption of the scheme would mean that the "fierce light that beats upon" the screen would contain new terrors for the hunted; the latter would find no safety in places large enough to support a theatre; he would be restricted to haunts where men do not congregate—if it so happen that previously he has been in the hands of the police.

IT is an interesting fact that both Maurice Maeterlinck and Vincente Blasco Ibanez are great believers in the sterling worth of the moving picture, as demonstrated by their printed statements. The author of "The Blue Bird" has already viewed his work on the screen, and the Spanish novelist will see the most celebrated of his stories in film form before he leaves this country.

Exhibitor Interests Around Twin Cities Are Combined

SENDING of delegates to Washington to appear before Congress in protest against a five per cent. tax on films by the government, is to be taken up at the meeting of the Exhibitors' Protective League at its next meeting in Minneapolis February 3, H. L. Mitchell, executive secretary of the new league, has announced. The directors are now considering appointing one delegate from each of the seven states represented in the organization.

The league has moved its headquarters to 357 Loeb Arcade, Minneapolis, the former headquarters of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Co-operative Association of the Northwest, which has disbanded and joined the league en masse. All the fixtures of the defunct association have been purchased, and a congregating place will be established for exhibitors who come to Minneapolis on business. Free telephone, checking, and bulletin service on the latest films will be furnished the exhibitors.

Two Organizations Combine.

"Virtually every member of the old organization has joined our league," said Mr. Mitchell. "Complete harmony reigns in our ranks.

"We expect to add from time to time new features of service to our organization. At our February meeting we expect to have several one-reel films that have been voted the approval of the directors to present before the members.

"The league is proceeding rapidly with its plans for the abolition of free advertising in films. The complete scheme of the organization in its fight to put a stop in the practices that have taken money out of the pocket of the exhibitor will be ready soon to present to the league members."

Kentucky Legislature Considers Censor Bill

ON the first day that bills were introduced in the Kentucky Legislature, House Bill No. 6 was introduced by Representative T. C. Pryse, of Lee County, providing for a board of three moving picture censors to be appointed by the governor from lists submitted by the Federation of Womens' Clubs, moving picture exhibitors and state superintendent of schools, each to be paid $1,000 a year, and a board of two examiners of moving picture operators, to be appointed by the governor from a list submitted by the Federation of Motion Picture Operators, at $1,500 each a year. This bill was referred to the Committee on Public Health.

Exhibitors believe that the bill has not much chance in view of the fact that the present administration, and especially Governor E. P. Morrow, is a business administration which is pruning all unnecessary expense and fighting against the creation of any offices which will mean expense. It is felt that moving picture bills are unnecessary and useless.

Loew Finances Theatre Planned for Baltimore

THE Marcus Loew Theatrical Enterprises are back of the project to erect a theatre with a seating capacity of 3,000 at North avenue and Charles street, Baltimore. This theatre will cost aproximately $1,000,000. A magnificent ballroom and other original features are to be incorporated in the new structure. A corporation is to be formed.

This action was decided upon after the directors of Loew's Hipodrome in Baltimore had a preliminary consultatoin with Mr. Loew. A meeting was held on Friday, January 16, and the plan was ratified. The location of the theatre will be on the property now occupied by Marston's University School. The price paid for the property was $165,000. The theatre is to be used for motion pictures and vaudeville.

Watson E. Sherwood and Howard W. Jackson are among the Baltimoreans connected with the enterprise. This site is diagonally across from the Parkway Theatre, which is now owned by the Whitehurst Theatrical Enterprises, also owning the New, Garden and Century (now building) theatres. George A. McDermitt is at present manager of Loew's Hippodrome in Baltimore.

Painstaking Yeggmen Get Whole Lot of Exercise

THE Apollo Theatre at Kansas City was visited by a painstaking group of yeggmen the night of January 10, after the show had closed. The burglary, which was not discovered until the following morning, yielded little remuneration to the burglars, Manager O. D. Rose announced.

A safe weighing 1,200 pounds was taken from the box office through the manager's office, across a waiting room and down the aisle to the rear of the theatre. A door was removed from its hinges to permit the safe to pass. The safe then was blown open and the door, weighing fifty pounds, was hurled from the rear of the theatre into a balcony at the front, a distance of about 130 feet.

The safe blowers are believed to have concealed themselves in the dark theatre and remained inside after the doors were locked. Only a small amount of money was taken. A larger safe in the manager's office withstood rifling, although the combination was broken.

Louisville Minister Joins Mayor on "Sunday Opening"

MAYOR SMITH, of Louisville, has refused to prohibit the operation of moving picture theatres on Sunday or take any action whatsoever which would enforce the so-called "Blue Laws." He advised the churchmen to start their planned community movements, Sunday music, Sunday free pictures, etc., and stated that such plans might afford amusement to many citizens, but that he would not interfere with the harmless amusement of some 70,000 people who enjoy Sunday shows.

Some of the ministers at the conference sided with the Mayor, and some were opposed. A frequent statement is to the effect that if there is a statute, that statute should be enforced or else repealed. The ministers as a whole have continued friendly with the mayor.

On Sunday, Jan. 10, ministers in nearly every pulpit preached for or against Sunday shows. The Rev. E. L. Powell, of the First Christian Church has announced a series of sermons, in which he will endeavor to show that the public can not be forced to attend church, and that it is none of the affair of ministers whether the theatres are open or not.

Dr. Powell is one of the brainest clergymen in that section, and is given a great deal of consideration. He is frequently referred to as "a good sport," as he fraternizes with business men, and knows more about business, civic affairs, etc., than any three other ministers in the city.

Ontario Ends Censoring of Serials by Episodes

AN important change in censorship arrangements just ordered by the Ontario government requires Toronto exchange companies to secure all episodes of a serial before it can be presented to the Ontario Board of Moving Picture Censors for examination and approval.

In the past, it has been customary for the censors of Ontario to view the various episodes from week to week. The exchanges have been able, under this plan, to start releasing the early episodes of a continuous story before the final reels have been received or probably even made. Under the recent ruling, the exchanges will be required to hold all episodes until the serial is complete, and then it will be passed or condemned in its entirety.

This order came as a bombshell to Toronto exchange managers, and if it is carried out there is a possibility that gaps may occur between the final showing of serials now being screened and the first episode of entirely new serials. It is also pointed out that the new management will mean that Ontario audiences will have to wait in some instances for several months before they can see a new serial.

in Short Snappy Statements

Minneapolis Territory Sees New Theatre Deals

AS evidence of the growth of the motion picture industry in the Northwest, six new moving picture houses will be completed this month in the territory now served by the Minneapolis exchanges.

Arrangements have been completed by Jensen & Von Herberg, Great Falls, Mont., for a new motion picture theatre in that city, to seat 2,000. Work is to begin immediately.

After having its movie business in a chaotic state for several months, Bleu Earth, Minn., will have amends done to it in the form of two new motion picture houses. Several firms have entered the field there with indifferent success, although it has always been known as a good show town. Blaisdell & Hulet, two old-time theatre men, have purchased the Royal and are remodeling it. V. B. Valleau, who operates theatres at Albert Lea and Marshall, Minn., has leased the opera house and will remodel it.

H. L. Krohling opened this week the New Rex at Mineota, Minn., with a seating capacity of 350. Mr. Krohling will manage personally his new theatre, which is one of the finest in the small towns of Minnesota.

W. A. Matlock is building a new theatre near the Iowa Agricultural College, Ames, Iowa. He will cater to the student trade.

A new $100,000 motion picture house will be completed this month at Cherokee, Ia., by Slick & James. The theatre will have a seating capacity of 650.

Dan Eselin, one of the oldtime theatre men of the Northwest, sold his interest this week in the Gopher Theatre, Minneapolis, to a group of men with whom he was associated in the Gopher Theatre Company. He has purchased the Grandview and the Ione, two of the best paying suburban theatres in Minneapolis. The purchase price of the two was reported to be $12,000.

Charles Moore has purchased the Triangle Theatre, Howard Lake, Minn. Mr. Moore, a newcomer in the moving picture field, will install all the latest appliances in moving picture theatredom, he announced.

Lane Proposes Plan for Lincoln's Birthday

DEFINITE plans for the start of the Americanization program of Secretary Lane's committee of the motion picture industry for Lincoln's birthday have been announced in Washington.

Secretary Lane has made a personal appeal to the 18,000 exhibitors of the country to hold special exercises on February 12. In his letter to the exhibitor, he suggest that a Lincoln film or a picture of a patriotic subject be shown on that day. If a picture is not available, he suggests that motion picture slides be used. He also urges the various managers to have a patriotic music program.

It is also suggested that the exhibitor co-operate with the American Legion and have that organization to make a short patriotic address. It is suggested that the speaker be a member of the local post of the American Legion and preferably one who has an unusual war record.

Civic League May Resume Fight for "Closed" Sunday

UP to the present time, the New York State Civic League is sitting back, rather undecided as to just what it will do in the way of backing or opposing any legislation of interest to the motion picture industry. The league, which has been a well-known factor for the last three or four years in Albany in fighting the Sunday motion picture bills, is now busily engaged in working for a prohibition enforcement bill, and motion picture legislation has been sidetracked for the time being.

"Of course we will favor a bill which will have for its purpose the repeal of the one passed a year ago, which permits Sunday motion picture shows," said the Rev. O. R. Miller, of the league.

"The passage a year ago of this bill was really an insult to the church and I rather think that some effort will be made in the next few weeks toward closing the motion picture houses on Sundays, in other words, repealing the measure."

When asked if the league would back the bill, which it is expected the State Conference of Mayors will recommend to the legislature as providing the way for cleaner pictures through censorship, Mr. Miller said that he would first have to see the bill as he was not favorably impressed by the personnel of the State Conference of Mayors, because of the members' attitude a year ago on Sunday picture shows and Sunday baseball.

Vitagraph Attorney Denies His Company's Absorption

WILLIAM M. SEABURY, attorney for the Vitagraph Company of America, has issued the following statement under date of January 22:

The Vitagraph Company of America has directed my attention to the publication in today's issue of Wid's Daily that control of the Vitagraph Company of America has been acquired by one of its competitors.

I regard the statement as libelous and highly damaging to the Vitagraph Company, which has instructed me to institute suit immediately for $100,000 damages against those responsible for its publication and against any other papers or persons who give it circulation.

Suit will be filed tomorrow.

The absolute falsity of the statement sufficiently appears from the following telegrams, which also seem to place the full responsibility for the statement with the publisher:

The telegrams are as follows:

"J. A. Berst, President, United Picture Theatres of America, 1600 Broadway, New York, N. Y.:

"I call on you to make immediate denial of the statement that the United Picture Theatres of America is about to acquire or has acquired control of Vitagraph. I have instructed our attorneys to take immediate proceedings against whoever is responsible for this statement, which is absolutely untrue and without foundation. Your reported refusal to deny or affirm the truth of the statement only encourages its belief and is unfair and damaging to us.

Women Would Ban Serials on Days Children Attend

THE serial seems to be getting it in the neck from several angles in Canada. The Ontario government recently decided that its censors must see the whole of a film serial before it can be passed upon. On top of this comes the news that the Sydney, N. S., branch of the National Council of Women has called upon the Nova Scotia censors to prohibit the showing of serial episodes on Fridays and Saturdays because of the presence of many children in the theatres on the two days of the week mentioned.

The argument was presented that children were more affected by exciting incidents throughout the serials than were adult patrons, and that therefore these pictures should not be presented on days when many youngsters attend film houses. No suggestion was made by the Council of Women for the keeping of children from the theatres on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

Mr. Cassard, when made sales manager, was placed in full charge of the domestic department of the Nicholas Power Company and now goes on his western trip as the personal representative of President Edward Earl.

Abrams "Breaks No Shackles," But Decries "Chain Theatre" Control

MOVIE magnates are always most magnanimous and more easily handled, from an interviewer's standpoint, immediately after meals. I talked to Hiram Abrams, president of the United States Artists Corporation, just after dinner, when he was full of peace, good will and several choice items from the Alexandria bill of fare.

The only mistake I made was to choose the time for the interview very near to the time for the departure of the train that was to carry Mr. Abrams away to San Francisco. I feel that he would have said more if there had been more time; but as it was, the few remarks he made are worth passing on, particularly so, because in speaking of the theatre chain movement, he touched on the angle of a possibility that does not seem to have been discussed.

"I have just finished up a busy week," said Mr. Abrams, "gathering up loose ends and perfecting the plans and business arrangements of the United Artists Corporation for 1920. Things look very good so far as the future is concerned.

Flouts An Old Saying.

"It is an old saying that a prophet is never without honor save in his own country, but that day has passed for us. The wisdom of our plan is recognized inside as well as outside of the film industry.

"We are like the pioneers who went out into the forests to build a home followed by the dire predictions of their friends and neighbors. They afterwards had the pleasure of seeing their examples followed by the ones who jeered at them.

"There is not a single member in our organization who has ever doubted for a moment the wisdom of our course in forming the United Artists Corporation. It is very good to feel that others also see the wisdom of the move and are paying us the sincere flattery of imitation."

In speaking of the buying up theatre movement, Mr. Abrams said: "I would dislike very much to have any of my money tied up in the brick and mortar that represents the theatres that are being bought up." In amplifying this statement, Mr. Abrams continued:

Questions Success of "Monopoly."

"When the people who are trying to monopolize the exhibition of pictures get through buying up and tying up all of the houses that they can control I am afraid that they are going to find themselves in a peculiar predicament. They will be in the position of the chap who thought he saw a good opportunity of opening a garage in his neighborhood, but found after the place was finished that all of the neighbors had garages of their own.

"Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks, Charlie Chaplin and D. W. Griffith, who have formed the United Artists Corporation, are independent of any monopoly. Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Maurice Tourneur, George Loane Tucker, Allan Dwan and Marshall Neilan have stepped out independently.

"Before the year is much older many other stars and directors who have been hampered with the footage rule, office-made stories and office-made stars will follow their example. So it looks to me that when the monopolists get all the film theatres tied up they will have no films but their own to show in them.

Free Lancing Brain Stuff.

"Brains cannot be monopolized. It has never been done and it never can be done. The set program is gone.

"It does not matter what kind of an organization owns the theatre in a town, nor how much money there is behind the organization, nor how much advertising and publicity is given the film shown in the theatre, the public will not attend the house unless they can see the kind of films they want to see.

"I am not going into a long dissertation on the freedom of art or indulge in any of the usual stuff about breaking the shackels from the exhibitor's limbs. That has all been said and it is not necessary for me to repeat it.

"The aims and intentions of our organization," concluded Mr. Abrams, "are well-known and the exhibitor knows just what it will do for him: That he will be able to book United Artists Corporation pictures on their merits and at a price that will guarantee him pleased patrons and entries on the right side of his ledger." Officers of Directors' Body Fete Members at Dinner

THE officers of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, New York lodge, entertained the members of the organization at dinner in the Monastery of the Friar's Club, Tuesday evening, January 20.

The novelty of the entertainment was that the business usually transacted at the regular meetings was carried on between the courses of the dinner, which was served promptly at seven.

Director James Vincent, recently elected chief executive of the lodge, presided as toastmaster. The speaker of the evening was Director Sidney Olcott.

Mr. Vincent welcomed the members in behalf of the officers and dwelt briefly upon the progress of the association, its activities for the coming vear and realization of ambitions.

During the dinner each director received a certificate of membership, engraved in gold and blue, the colors of the association, suitable for framing for their office or home.

Among those present were George B. Seitz, Travers Vale, C. Jay Williams, John Joseph Harvey, William F. Haddock, Emile Chautard, J. Searle Dawley, S. E. V. Taylor, Dell Henderson, Frank H. Crane, Ashley Miller, George Archainbaud, Charles Giblyn, O. A. C. Lund, J. S. Robertson, Tom Terriss, Van Dyke Brooke, Wally Van, Oscar Eagle, Robert G. Vignola, George L. Sargent, Harley Knowles, Edward Dillon, Chet Withey, Harry Millarde.

Telegrams regretting they could not be in the gathering were received from George Fitzmaurice and Charles A. Miller, both of whom are making exteriors and therefore unable to join the party.

Buys Rights to Curwood Novel.

Vitagraph has secured the motion picture rights to "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," James Oliver Curwood's story of the Canadian Northwest. It will be made as a special production at the West Coast studio with a special cast. David Smith, who directed Bessie Love's Vitagraph features, will be the director.

This will be the tenth of the Curwood novels to be produced by Vitagraph in motion picture form. Mr. Curwood knows his mountains and snows, his French trappers and half breeds and has written a story that is tense and exciting from the first chapter. It is a man's play in which strength and daring deeds play an important part.

United Wins First Round of Fight With Finkelstein and Ruben Chain

Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 21, 1920.

UNITED ARTISTS won the first round in what promises to be a fight to the finish with Finkelstein & Ruben, owners of more than thirty motion picture houses in the Northwest, with the announcement by Ralph O. Proctor, assistant general manager of the corporation, of the formation of a co-partnership with the Minneapolis Orchestral Society to convert the Minneapolis Auditorium into a home for Pickford, Chaplin, Fairbanks and Griffith pictures.

Proctor today in Minneapolis completed a deal with E. L. Carpenter and Hovey C. Clark, two of the wealthiest business men in Minneapolis, representing the symphony orchestra, for the opening of the auditorium on March 29 as a movie house, with "Pollyanna," and Mary Pickford in person. A lease has been taken on the building with an option for four years.

Sam Rothapfel, director of music for the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York, will be brought to Minneapolis to supervise the music, Proctor announced. He is also negotiating with Emil Oberhoffer, leader of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, to bring thirty-five members of the orchestra to the house and to lead it.

More than $100,000 will be spent in renovating the building to make it the finest in the Northwest, Proctor said. Pictures will appear of the "Big Four" at the same time they are run in New York. He closed a contract with the Pathe office here for Harold Lloyd comedies to run with United Artists. Prices will not be over 50 cents.

Well Supported.

Proctor closed negotiations today with the New York office by wire and announced: "Our company will cut prices to no exhibitor. The situation here is favorable to our entry. We are determined that people of Minneapolis shall see the best pictures while they are new and not wait until old and sold at reduced prices.

"We have sufficient moral support pledged here to assure Minneapolis of a square deal on pictures. The time when one man or a group of men can dictate the policy of a whole section of the country is past. We are going to throw the throttle wide open and give Minneapolis an era of greatest pictures. All our pictures will be shown here as fast as they can be released. Carpenter and Clark are enthusiastic. The public has jumped at the idea of real pictures while they are new. I predict that the Auditorium will become the center of motion pictures in Minneapolis. If our company does not turn out enough pictures to supply the house, we will buy good pictures from other exchanges here that have excellent material going to waste."

Auditorium Fine House.

The Auditorium has the largest stage in the Northwest and a seating capacity of 2,500. It has been the home for years of the symphony orchestra. It was sold recently to Benz Brothers, St. Paul, said to be remotely connected with Finkelstein and Ruben. The orchestra had previously taken a four-year lease on the building. By contract, the orchestral society is made partners with the corporation. This gives the company the backing of several hundred financial, professional and social leaders of the city, and guarantees prestige for the house.

Proctor, who has been touring the country with Hiram Abrams, general manager of United Artists, left tonight for New York, to complete details of the contract with the home office. He will be represented here by J. F. Brett, manager of United Artists Minneapolis branch exchange.

Proctor will then return to Kansas City, from where he will go to St. Louis, Omaha, Des Moines and on east on an inspection tour. Before leaving he announced other plans and affiliations in making for new additions of theatres.

Ruben and Finkelstein have had a clear field in the Twin Cities and Duluth for some time. In all cities they have virtually 90 per cent. of the motion picture business. J. W. JONES.

Northwest Exhibitors Convene Soon to Oppose Rigorous Sabbath Laws

Minneapolis, January 21, 1920.

TWO new organizations of Northwest exhibitors are in the process of formation as the first step in the fight against the continuance of Sunday closing and the enactment of laws for the creation of a censors' committee. North Dakota exhibitors will meet on February 4 and 5 at Fargo to perfect the state association in response to a statewide call sent out today by S. C. Cornish, owner and manager of the Strand Theatre, Fargo. Exhibitors will be assessed $20 each to form a fund for opposing the efforts of the State Ministerial Association to make more rigid Sunday laws throughout the state.

Good Organization.

The new organization will work in harmony with the Exhibitors' Protective League recently formed in Minneapolis, H. L. Mitchell, league secretary, announced, and will have from it whatever assistance is needed. League members are expected to outline a course of action to help North Dakota exhibitors at the meeting in Minneapolis on February 3. Messrs. Mitchell and P. W. Myers, members of the league board of directors, will start immediately after the meeting here for Fargo to assist in forming the organization.

North Dakota ministers have long been organized and have practically completed a working agreement with a nonpartisan league, assuring the continuance of Sunday closing laws and making probable legislation for the appointment of a censors' committee, acording to reports. Michigan exhibitors are reported as well along in the new state organization. This will draw from the exhibitors' league more than 100 exhibitors in the upper penninsula of Michigan. Release of the first films in the Northwest where national advertisers paid exhibitors, was begun today by the Exhibitors' League, Mitchell announced. J. W. JONES.

Roanoke and Atlanta Speak Up and Tell Folks Their Troubles

By NAT BREGSTEIN

ELINORE D. HINES, of Roanoke, Va., is without a doubt a record holder when it comes to fast talking. When the film boys visit his bailiwick they just have to sell him.

Mr. Hines is the manager of the Roanoke Amsement Company, controlling the American, Isis, Jefferson and Roanoke theatres and the Academy of Music.

Mr. Hines "boosted" as follows: "Roanoke's the best show town in the South for its size. We have a population of 60,000 (according to film companies nearly a million). Forty-five thousand are whites. At least 30 per cent. attend the pictures.

"The pictures that get money for me are the ones with leading men who are familiar to Virginia's 'society stuff.' I am an old subscriber to Moving Picture World and read it thoroughly."

Atlanta Musician Trouble

Local 148 Musicians Union, Atlanta, passed a resolution January 5 at a meeting raising the scale of organists from $37.50 to $45 and in cases where there is an orchestra in any theatre that organist is to be known as a relief organist and is to receive $2 per hour for actual playing time. In the regular scale of prices where there is no orchestra organists were to receive $45 for four hours actual playing time each day.

This resolution was passed on January 5 to take effect January 6, in spite of the fact that the managers of the various theatres in Atlanta had a two-weeks' give-or-take notice agreement with the union relative to a change of scale.

M. W. Rennon, manager of Forsythe, Rialto, Strand and Vaudette theatres, refused to abide by the union notice and immediately served two weeks' notice of cancellation to the organists in his employ. He has decided to install photoplayers in all his theatres if the Local Branch of Musicians' Union does not rescind its resolution.

Congress to Act on Bill Stopping Interstate Stolen Film Traffic

HENRY T. RAINEY, one of the most prominent Democratic members of the House Ways and Means Committee, is about to introduce in the House of Representatives a bill designed to eliminate interstate traffic in stolen films as well as to do away with the equally bad practice of making unauthorized copies.

Mr. Rainey, who is one of the friendliest members of Congress from a "movie" point of view, heard recently of the vast amount of films that were being stolen and called on the Washington bureau of Moving Picture World for information on the subject. At its suggestion, and armed with a number of facts presented by Jack Connolly, Washington representative of the National Association, Mr. Rainey proceeded to draw up his measure.

This bill has been drafted after the bill recently passed by Congress designed to put an end to the interestate traffic in automobiles. In addition there is a provision dealing with "pirating," "duping" and copying.

Existing Laws Inadequate.

"It is my understanding that existing laws are not adequate to reach this evil," said Mr. Rainey to the Moving Picture World correspondent. "I had no idea that the industry suffered to such an extent from film thefts.

"It is my impression that in some states and under some conditions my bill will also catch those who illegally sub-rent films. I have learned that it is sometimes the practice of unscrupulous moving picture theatre exhibitors located near a state line to rent or lease a film from an exchange and then to sub-rent or sub-lease it to other exhibitors in other towns. If the sub-lessee is located over the state line the original lessee would be guilty of a violation of the proposed law."

The bill provides that "the term interstate or foreign commerce as used in this act shall include transportation from one state, territory or the District of Columbia, to another state, territory or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, or from a foreign country to any state, territory or the District of Columbia. The term motion picture film, or films, shall include the original negative and any copy thereof, made by the owner of the original negative, or his authorized representative, or representatives, or lessee, or lessees, and any unauthorized copy in whole or in part of any motion picture negative, or copy thereof.

Provides Severe Penalty.

"That whoever shall transport or cause to be transported in interstate or foreign commerce a motion picture film, or negative, knowing the same to have been stolen or to have been copied in whole or in part by any person not authorized by the owner, or lessees, or representatives, of the original motion picture film, or copies thereof, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both.

"That whoever shall receive, conceal, store, barter, or in any manner dispose of any motion picture film, or films, or unauthorized copy thereof in whole or in part, moving as, or which are a part of, or which constitutes interstate or foreign commerce, knowing the same to have been stolen, or to have been copied in whole or in part without authority of the owner, or his authorized lessee or lessees, or representative or representatives, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment of not more than five years, or both.

"That any person violating this act may be punished in any district in or through which such motion picture film or films have been transported or removed by such offender."

Connolly Approves Bill.

"I think this law is just about what the industry needs to check the ever-increasing amount of film thefts," declared Jack S. Connolly when a draft of the law was shown him. "At any rate it is one of the most important measures that has been placed before Congress during this session and the film men should get behind it and see that it becomes a law.

"I recently took the matter of film thefts up with the Department of Justice. The officials here in Washington promised every co-operation and gave me a letter to the New York bureau. There, I was told that it would be extremely difficult to do anything in a majority of the cases. Film thefts amount to more than $500,000 annually.

"The new automobile law has been declared adequate to deal with the situation involving the interstate transportation of stolen machines. The bill prepared by Mr. Rainey is built along that line. Therefore, I am sure it will give the Department of Justice the weapon most needed to curb the activities of these bands of film thieves."

Rothacker Gets Another Accountant.

Watterson R. Rothacker wanted to take the guess work out of his film business. So H. J. Aldous, for the past five years secretary-treasurer and auditor of the Rothacker Film Manufacuring Company, called in H. C. Isbell, a cost accountant and systematizer, to co-operate with him in establshing and maintaining a cost system in all departments of the organization.

Under the new system it will be know exactly just what any operation in the Rothacker plant, large or small, costs.

Under the new system it will be known only in a general way. To go into costs in more detail was more than any one accounting expert could supervise, and therefore Mr. Aldous secured the services of Mr. Isbell.

"Ambition" Is Its Title.

"Ambition" has been selected as the final title for the Dorothy Phillips super-production directed by Allen Holubar. This picture was originally called "Ambition" and later changed to "The Gorgeous Canary." However, it was finally decided by Universal officials to use the original title.

Rothacker Aid Resigns to Develop Firm's Plans

STANLEY H. TWIST, who for the past three years has been personal assistant to W. R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, is arranging to sever his active connection with that company in the near future in order to carry out certain personal plans which he and his chief have been discussing for some time past.

With the assistance and co-operation of Mr. Rothacker, Mr. Twist is planning to launch his new enterprises within the next few months. Details of his new plans will be announced at a later date.

Mr. Twist, though still a young man, has had an exceptionally broad and successful experience in the motion picture field. Entering the business in 1908, he became identified with Col. W. N. Selig, with whom he was connected for the next five years, first as an actor and director and later as an executive in charge of publicity and exploitation.

Upon resigning from the Selig organization, Mr. Twist specialized for a number of years in the making and marketing of feature subjects. During the period he was identified at different times with the largest organizations in the industry. In this manner he was able to gain a thorough knowledge of practically every angle of the business.

About three years ago Mr. Twist entered the organization of his friend, Watterson R. Rothacker. During the past year, in addition to his duties as assistant to Mr. Rothacker, Mr. Twist has been editor of the popular Rothacker "Outdoors" series.

It was learned with regret that the sister of Diaz Callahan died last week at her home, 611 Carlisle Place, Chattanooga, Tenn. He has the sympathy of his fellow-workers in the industry.

Philadelphia Houses Prolong Runs of Equity Feature, "Eyes of Youth"

A STRIKING demonstration of the readiness of the average exhibitor to play a feature for a longer period than is his usual wont is seen in the vogue of Equity Pictures' first release, "Eyes of Youth," in Philadelphia and surrounding cities.

Whereas it is the custom to play a feature in one house on Market street, the Stanley Company has already booked the Young feature in the Palace to follow its big week at the Stanley. Other week stands in the heart of the city are at the Alleghany, Colonial, Great Northern, Locust and Majestic theatres. At the last three named houses, the usual run of a film is three days, which policy also obtains at the Colonial Theatre, Germantown, where "Eyes of Youth" is to play an entire week.

Below follows a table compiled by the Equity Pictures Corporation of Philadelphia, showing the houses in that city and suburbs at which "Eyes of Youth" is being given extended bookings, the extra days and the usual run policies of the various houses.

Theatre and City.	Usual Run Days	Run of "Eyes of Youth"
Colonial, Philadelphia....	3	1 week
Gt Northern, Philadelphia	3	1 week
Locust, Philadelphia.....	3	1 week
Majestic, Philadelphia...	3	1 week
Model, Philadelphia.....	1	3 days
Liberty, Philadelphia....	1	2 days
Fairmount, Philadelphia.	1	2 days
Orpheum, Bethlehem.....	1	2 days
Lawrence, So. Bethlehem.	1	2 days
Valentine, Mt. Carmel...	1	2 days
Hippodrome, York.....	3	1 week
Third Street, Easton.....	3	1 week
Hamilton, Lancaster.....	3	1 week
Hippodrome, Allentown..	3	1 week
Colonial, Reading.....	3	1 week
Washburn, Chester.....	2	1 week

These details are from one territory only, comprising eastern Pennsylvania. This condition obtains throughout the entire country with "Eyes of Youth," its distributors state, and plainly illustrates the susceptibility of the average exhibitor to policy change if the attraction justifies.

Pathe Schedules Another Big Blackton Production

WHILE "My Husband's Other Wife" is achieving a big success in every section of the country, J. Stuart Blackton announces that the fourth of his series of big productions for distribution by Pathe has been completed in his Brooklyn studio. "Respectable by Proxy" is its title, and it is listed for release on February 15.

Six reels are devoted to the relating of the story, which for human appeal, action and love interest has never been surpassed by any other Blackton production.

Far different from either "The Moonshine Trail," "Dawn" or "My Husband's Other Wife," the fourth link in the chain of Blackton-Pathe features has every indication of another big box office winner. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are again co-starred, and no more becoming characters were ever offered them for portrayal on the screen. The story was written by Florence Myott, and was adapted to the screen by Stanley Olmsted.

Mr. Blackton has surrounded his stars with a competent cast which is headed by William Dunn and Eulalie Jensen.

The story is one that, while rich in character drawing, has an abundance of action and suspense. It is produced with the lavishness of all Blackton pictures; and, while the director makes no claims to any unusual honors, the garden scenes shot at night are achievements of rare technical beauty.

May Allison Will Star in a Grace George Success

MAY ALLISON will play the part originated by Grace George in "The Marriage of William Asche," the screen rights to which have been purchased by Metro Pictures Corporation. Maxwell Karger, director general, announced the selection of Miss Allison for the stellar role.

English and American versions of Mrs. Humphrey Ward's novel and of Margaret Mayo's dramatization of it are speeding across the continent to Director General Karger. The novel, dramatized by Margaret Mayo, opened at the Garrick Theatre, New York, November, 1905. In it, Miss George achieved a notable success as the wilful child wife, Lady Kitty.

The novel was published in 1903. The story of the British statesman who commits the blunder of marriage with an unconventional young girl attracted much attention.

Screen Classics, Inc., will produce "The Marriage of William Asche," probably following "Fine Feathers," the drama by Eugene Walter, which Miss Allison will picturize when she completes "The Cheater," her present production.

Praises "Six Feet Four."

The gratifying box office receipts from "Six Feet Four" have moved many busy exhibitors to write commendatory letters to the producers. From Pittsburgh, J. C. Herron, manager of the Minerva Theatre, sent the following to the American headquarters:

"This feature was run during a week of wretched weather, but our receipts were above the average for our best season, and we can truthfully say that this American feature drew more and steadier business than any of the other six houses on the avenue during that week. We were more than pleased with it, both as to its merit as a real western picture and its box office value."

Gibson Writing a Book.

Tom Gibson, now directing the Gale Henry comedies, is writing a book on his observations of people who have advanced in the motion picture world within the past eight years. Director Gibson has a wide acquaintance in the industry, having directed a number of comedies and comedy-dramas in the last few years as well as having written several scenarios which have been screened.

First National Consummates Full Details of Its New Organization

COMPLETING late in the afternoon of January 21 the details of a voting trust arrangement which is said to be an absolute protection for independent exhibitors against the inroads of any financial interests seeking theatre monopoly or theatre control, the eleven directors of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., adjourned a three days' meeting in New York. An announcement of the names of the exhibitor members of the board of voting trustees, the officers and the members of the executive committee of the new organization, together with a statement of the purpose which actuated the membership in creating the Board of Voting Directors.

The board of voting trustees, elected by the directors, consists of Robert Lieber, Indianapolis; N. H. Gordon, Boston; R. M. Finkelstein (of Rubin and Finkelstein), Minneapolis; Fred Dahnken (of Turner and Dahnken), San Francisco, and J. G. Von Herberg, of Jensen and Von Herberg, Seattle.

Robert Lieber was elected president of Associated First National Pictures, Inc.; J. B. Clark, of Pittsburgh, was named first vice president; Jacob Fabian, of New Jersey, second vice president; Harry O. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer, and J. D. Williams, manager of the new enterprise.

The executive committee, which will be the official administrative body for the directors and officers, was also elected by the directors, with Harry O. Schwalbe as the chairman; N. H. Gordon and Moe Mark, of the Mark Strand Company, New York.

The Eleven Directors Meet.

The meeting of the eleven directors in New York began on Monday morning, January 19, as an adjourned session of the convention lately held in Atlantic City, at which members of First National Exhibitors Circuit gathered to complete plans for the new Associated First National Pictures, Incorporated, and the Associated First National Theatres, Inc. The assembly in New York was for the purpose of electing officers, the members of the executive committee and the board of voting trustees.

If is this latter body which, according to the directors and its members, is clothed with powers of regulation more than sufficient to successfully prevent any monopoly of theatre interests being affected within Associated First National Pictures, Inc., or in any separate territory in the country. "No matter how much money Wall Street or any other financial force might pour into theatres," declares J. D. Wiliams, "the theatre equities pledged to the new company cannot pass into other hands for voting purposes for a long time to come.

J. D. Williams Speaks.

"If monied interests sought to buy every theatre represented by franchise in Asociated First National Pictures, the executive disposition of any effort which threatened screen independence in any instance would remain exclusively and absolutely with the five members of the board of voting trustees. This body is so constituted that it is obliged to retain its powers—to work only in the interests of exhibtior independence and for the preservation of personal right and privilege for theatre owners.

"This, then, becomes tantamount to an absolute barrier to theatre monopoly by any organization, whether its function is production, distribution, a combination of the two, or simply an investment group seeking domination of screens for reasons quite obvious, but less tangible. They might buy every dollar's worth of equity in each of the five thousand and more theatres that will be affiliated with Associated First National Pictures, but the board of voting trustees would be absolutely free from the dictation of new ownership

Ten Goldwyn Companies Now Work at Culver City

Henry story, "Double Dyed Deceiver," starring Jack Pickford.

Will Rogers and his company have gone to Santa Cruz, Cal., to take exteriors for "Seven Oaks," in which he is supported by his son Jimmie, Irene Rich, Lionel Belmore, Raymond Hatton, Nick Cogley and others.

James A. Milligan
Goes from Moving Picture World's advertising department to sales and advertising managership Typhoon Fan Company.

James A. Milligan Goes to Typhoon; Wendell P. Milligan Returns to World

JAMES A. MILLIGAN, for the past three years a member of the advertising staff of the Moving Picture World, has resigned his position with this journal to become sales and advertising manager of the Typhoon Fan Company. Mr. Milligan will be succeeded by his brother, Wendell P. Milligan, who already through his service is well known to the advertisers of the Moving Picture World.

The two brothers have before rotated in positions. When early in 1915 Wendell resigned as advertising manager of the New York office of Billboard and came to the Moving Picture World he was succeeded by "Jim." When two years later "Wen" returned to his former line downtown—the dry goods business—Jim came to this paper. Now the latter returns to work that in his earlier business career was his specialty, i. e., machinery, and Wen replaces him here.

We know we are going to be the recipients of many messages of regret and of congratulation—regret at the leaving of so valued and popular an associate; of congratulations that that associate should be honored by being selected to fill such an important position and also of congratulations that the vacancy so created should be filled by one whose departure has never ceased to be a matter of regret in this office. Summing it up, Wen is one of the "best ever."

The Typhoon Fan Company is experiencing a marked expansion of its business. This is the natural result of the growth of the motion picture industry, of the large number of incoming orders to equip the great theatres springing up all over the country, and of the personal efforts of Ernest Glanzberg, president of the concern. Here in New York a large building has been taken over in Thirty-ninth street for factory purposes, in order to better take care of the demands of Eastern customers, and throughout the country factories are being equipped.

The best wishes of the entire World force follow "Jim" to his new home.

Groans from Trombone Get Crowds to Omaha's Rialto

INCIDENTAL music in motion picture houses, especially in connection with comedies, is one of the greatest business getters that has ever been overlooked by the average exhibitor, according to H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto Theatre in Omaha. Mr. Thomas came to this conclusion after he had been forced by a first night audience to repeat a part of a picture in order that they could have an encore on the music. Thereafter, he packed his theatre for a solid week by featuring the music in his advertising.

Charlie Chaplin in "A Day's Pleasure" is the production which gave the opportunity for one of the Rialto orchestra to distinguish himself. In a scene in the picture Charlie and the trombone player in a jazz orchestra subside to sea sickness at the same time. The Rialto trombonist played a solo for this part, and the series of moans, gasps and groans as well as slides he produced on his instrument, made a tremendous hit. As the picture ended the applause at each performance was loud, but on the first night the audience demanded a repetition. Somebody shouted, "Give us the seasick trombone again," and rather than have the show stopped entirely the scene was run over again and the trombonist repeated.

Mr. Thomas advertised "the seasick trombone" the next day and from then until the end of the week's run, the theatre was packed every night and many of the disappointed ones stood out in the lobby waiting for the mournful wails of the trombone.

Heavy Business the Rule With "In Old Kentucky"

ANITA STEWART'S production, "In Old Kentucky," a Louis B. Mayer-First National Attraction, continues to smash box office records.

It opened at the Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles recently and at the evening performance 1,500 were turned away. From three o'clock in the afternoon there was a continuous line from the theatre down to Sixth street.

The same thing is true of the engagement at the Randolph Theatre in Chicago, where the picture started an indefinite run last Sunday.

"In Old Kentucky" will soon open at the Madison Theatre in Detroit for a run.

That the percentage arrangement under which the production is being booked appeals strongly to the first run exhibitors is shown by the fact that a majority of them prefer putting off booking the picture until they can make arrangements to book it for an indefinite run.

The rights on "Human Passions" for Illinois and Indiana have been sold by Tyrad Pictures, Inc., to the Silee Film Exchange, Chicago, Ill.

Prominent Chicago Picture Men Buy Merrill Theatre Property in Milwaukee

A BIG real estate transaction, affecting a prominent downtown Milwaukee office building and theatre property, was negotiated Thursday afternoon, January 15, at the offices of William Kaumheimer, Wells Building, Milwaukee. By this transaction the Merrill Theatre, Grand avenue and Third street, Milwaukee, and the seven-story office building of which it is a part have been transferred from the Badger State Investment Company to Jacob Handelsman, William Hershberg and Abe Gumbiner, prominent in Chicago moving picture enterprises.

Negotiations for this valuable holding has been pending several months. It came to the attention of the Chicago theatrical men through J. S. Grauman, formerly Milwaukee manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation and now occupying a similar position in the Chicago office of that organization, who held an option on the property. Mr. Grauman had little difficulty in interesting the enterprising Chicagoans in the transaction.

Affects Leasehold Only.

The transfer affects the leasehold only and involves a purchase price of $500,000. The Badger State Investment Company assumed charge of the property five years ago on a 99-year lease. By this transaction the three Chicagoans come into possession of the unexpired term of the leasehold, namely, 94 years.

Few Chicago theatrical men are better known in the industry than Messrs. Handelsman, Hershberg and Gumbiner. Heretofore they have been operating separately in theatrical affairs, more especially of moving picture importance. This deal brings the triumvirate together in a business transaction for the first time and, incidentally, points to a powerful partnership, which combines expert showmanship, business sagacity, progressiveness and unlimited finances.

Handelsman Building Big House.

Jacob Handelsman has been associated with the W. W. Kimball Company, noted organ builders and dealers in other musical instruments, for the past 25 years. Mr. Handelsman has contracted for high priced organs with almost every important theatre in the middle west. His theatrical holdings have been many and varied. At present he is erecting a great, modern theatre, the Blackstone, on the principal thoroughfare in South Bend, Indiana, at a cost of half a million dollars.

William Hershberg, who was the prime mover in swinging this Milwaukee deal, is a valued member of Metro's Chicago organization. He is a veteran moving picture man, being one of the pioneer theatre men and distributors. In the early days he was associated with Barney Balaban, of the present theatrical firm of Balaban & Katz, in the Balaban & Hershberg Film Attractions Company. Besides his present activity as a member of Metro's Chicago organization he is interested in the Ashland Photoplay Company, which operates the Ashland and Madlin theatres, prominent west side Chicago houses.

Circuit of Ten Chicago Houses.

Abe Gumbiner, the third and highly important member of this enterprising trinity, is a local theatrical man with considerable holdings. He is operating a circuit of ten theatres in Chicago and his activities have been extended outside of the city. Among his important houses here are the Paulina, New Regent, Star, Temple, DeLuxe and Parkway. He is erecting an imposing theatre and hotel in Hammond, Indiana, at considerable cost, and expects to complete them within a few months. Like Mr. Hershberg, Mr. Gumbiner has considerable experience in theatrical matters and is regarded as one of the notable showmen in the industry.

Handelsman, Hershberg and Gumbiner intend to take charge of the Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, in the near future. They purpose making noteworthy improvements in the theatre proper and in the entertainment as well. The orchestra will be augmented by a number of capable soloists, experienced in symphonic work. There will be players of popular selections also, to insure variety and to satisfy all tastes. Cinematic surprises and theatrical novelties will be the vogue at frequent intervals and the best pictures the market affords will be the habit at the new Merrill.

Paramount-Artcraft Men Hold National Convention

A NATIONAL convention of district managers, branch managers, special representatives and exploitation men of Paramount-Artcraft throughout the country will be held at the Hotel La Salle, this city, from January 19 to 23, inclusive. The call was sent out by Al. Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution, New York.

During the convention the business affairs of the organization will be thoroughly discussed; the devising of ways and means to insure more efficient service to exhibitors will receive most careful attention, and the improvement of exploitation methods will be worked out in up-to-date fashion.

Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky, Jesse Lasky, vice president, and other prominent New York officials will be present. These together with district managers, branch managers and special and exploitation representatives from all parts of the country will form the most notable gathering yet assembled under one roof by any national film organization in America.

While the convention is on, "Pep," a weekly publication issued for the benefit of employes of Famous Players-Lasky will be issued every day.

Equity Officials Make Flying Visit to Chicago

HERBERT K. SOMBORN, president of Equity Pictures Corporation, and Harry Garson, director-in-chief of that organization, arrived in the city Wednesday, January 14, from Los Angeles, and left by the California Limited the Friday night following. James I. Schneitzer and P. A. Powers, of New York, came on to confer with them at the Congress Hotel, on matters connected with the organization.

When seen for a few minutes Friday evening, before leaving, Mr. Somborn stated that he had very little to say that would be of interest to readers except that "The Forbidden Woman," Clara Kimball Young's second picture, had just been finished, and that a big special story production is now under way, with Conway Tearle, Rosemary Tracy and Gareth Hughes in an exceptionally strong cast.

Preliminary work on Clara Kimball Young's third production has already begun. The script has been adapted from the book by Mary Ellis Ryan, entitled "The Soul of Rafael," which Mr. Somborn presumes a remarkable story, with splendid opportunities for the talented star. The director of this production had not yet been decided upon, Mr. Somborn said.

He believes that just as soon as the rate of exchange between America and the British Isles becomes normal, there will be a great demand and big money for American super-productions. He said that, even at the present rate of exchange, a British firm had paid the largest sum ever before paid for rights to the United Kingdom. This was for the first of the Clara Kimball Young series, "Eyes of Youth."

In addition to the four pictures of this series, Equity will produce three or four big, special features, with all star casts, during the year, Mr. Somborn announced.

"Money is no object, in order that we may secure the best and biggest stories, whether in books or plays," said Mr. Somborn. "We have no worry over undue pressure in our work, as we have a year in which to make the Clara Kimball Young series of four pictures and the three or four big specials already referred to."

"In Old Kentucky" Boomed.

Walter L. Hill, in charge of publicity and exploitation at First National's Chicago office, has devoted considerable attention to the exploitation of "In Old Kentucky," in which Anita Stewart is the popular star. This feature is now running to crowded houses at the Randolph Theatre and will be retained for another week.

Mr. Hill had numerous copies of the song, "In Old Kentucky," which has been written by Anita Stewart, distributed at the White City dancing academy, which has an attendance of eight thousand people daily. A number of free seats, in pairs, to the Randolph Theatre were also given out. Numerous other effective methods are being employed by Mr. Hill to bring "In Old Kentucky" prominently before Chicagoans.

Glantzberg Visits Chicago.

Ernst Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, New York, visited the Chicago office of his company recently. While here he took up the matter of increasing the Chicago office force, which is now headed by John P. Gleason and Thomas Wilson. He also conferred with Rapp & Rapp, architects, on the installation of the Typhoon Cooling System in the Rivoli, a large, modern theatre in Chattanooga, Tenn., now under construction. When completed, the Rivoli will be one of the most beautiful theatres in the south.

Jack O'Toole Becomes Triangle Chicago Head

JACK O'TOOLE, division manager of the central district for United Picture Theatres, Inc., took over the Chicago office of Triangle in the Mallers Building, Sunday, January 18, in conformance with telegraphic notification from the New York office of the purchase of Triangle by United.

Manager O'Toole succeeded C. W. Bunn in the Chicago office of United on September 22 last year. Before that he had been Minneapolis manager for United, for over a year, and prior to that engagement he was manager of the Chicago office of the Fox Film Corporation for two and a half years.

Mr. O'Toole has numerous friends among exhibitors and is well known in Chicago.

Private Showing of "Beloved Cheater."

A trade showing of Robertson-Cole's comedy drama, "The Beloved Cheater," was given in the private projection room of that organization, Consumers Building, last week. Max Levey, Chicago manager for the company, secured three pieces of music to accompany the presentation, which was viewed by over 250 exhibitors. Manager Levey states that there has been an unusually strong demand for the picture at increased prices.

Louis Levin, of Fox News Staff, Visits Chicago

LOUIS LEVIN, a live member of the Fox News staff in the New York office, spent two days in the city last week conferring with C. W. Eckhardt, Fox Chicago manager, regarding the benefits of the Fox News to exhibitors. Mr. Levin left for Detroit and Montreal.

Mr. Eckhardt says that the Fox News started off with great success in his territory, and that a steady improvement has been shown ever since. Mr. Eckhardt holds many letters from exhibitors commending it and stating that it is being held in greater and ever increasing demand by their patrons.

Mr. Eckhardt has increased the selling force in the Chicago office to twelve people, owing to the added units of service. The general business is exceptionally good, he states, and the outlook promises even better results.

R. T. Smith Appointed Triangle City Salesman

R. T. SMITH, who has been Chicago manager of the Triangle Distributing Corporation for the past three months and who has increased its Chicago business several times over its former volume, has been retained as city salesman in Triangle's office, in the Mallers Building, for United Picture Theatres, Inc., which recently purchased the interests of the former organization.

Mr. Smith has had phenomenal success in booking all the re-created pictures of Triangle in the largest and most important theatres in Chicago, including the Playhouse, the Lubliner & Trinz and Ascher Brothers circuits, the Castle, etc. This has been the first instance in which "loop" houses were ever known to run re-issue pictures on such an extensive scale. Mr. Smith entered upon his duties as city salesman for United, January 18.

Rubbernecking in Filmland

In Straight Dramatic Role Fatty Arbuckle Shows Varied Emotions With Ease

By Giebler

THE holidays are all over and Filmland has settled down in its Christmas socks, ties, smoking jackets and pajamas to the serious business of settling up.

The weather is fine and sunshiny, but it will not be that way very long, if the Neck is any kind of a goose-bone prophet. A number of beetle-browed clouds have been holding a caucus up around the top of Mount Baldy; the foothills are hazy, and the gophers are carrying straws in their burrows.

However, "into each life some rain must fall," as a chap named Longfellow once remarked when he stepped in at a neighbor's to borrow a gum coat, and as we are still holding a coupon for ten of the fourteen inches of rain we get every winter, and as Hiram Abrams, "Doc" Shallenberger, Isaac Wolper, A. S. Aronson, Mack MacArthur and several other visitors we wanted to impress with our climate have steamed away on the eastern rattlers, let 'er precipitate!

No Ill Feelings.

Owing to the fact that the A. P. and other cold and unfeeling distributing agencies seem to care more for stories about the earthquake in Mexico, the Jap birth rate and Charlie Murray getting touched for his diamonds than for interesting items about the sore finger of a celebrated writer, I am forced to take advantage of this opportunity to inform an anxious world that the damaged digit which I sustained while engaged in the perilous pursuit of gathering news at the Lasky plant last week, is getting along as well as might be expected.

I did not say much about my visit to Lasky's last week, in spite of the fact that they assaulted me with the remains of a kitchen set, I still hold them in such high esteem that I did not want to color their story with the gloomy thoughts that surged through my mind every time I bumped the sore finger on the space bar of my typewriter.

A Flint Age Cabaret.

I saw a lot of interesting stuff at Lasky's. Sam Wood was making "The Dancin' Fool," with Wallace Reid and Bebe Daniels in the leads. Sam was staging a most unusual cabaret scene in a garden with trees, palms, flowers, grottoes, bowers. Wallie, in a costume that was in vogue about the time that Stanley Waterloo's "Ab" was going to cabarets, and Bebe in the chic and fetching skins of a Flint Age flirt, did a cave-man dance that knocked the spots off anything I've ever seen done in the dancin' line. Exhibitors book this and bill it strong.

William De Mille, who is screening Edward Peble's fine stage play, "The Prince Chap," was working in an interior somewhere in Soho, which is to London what Greenwich Village is to New York.

Ribbon-Winning Beauties.

"The Prince Chap," which is to be a William De Mille Special, is being made on a most pretentious scale. Tom Meighan is the Prince Chap, Casson Ferguson is Jack, Kathlyn Williams has the part of Alice, Ann Forrest is the slavey. Peaches Jackson plays the part of Claudia, the child, at four; May Giracci at the next age, and Lila Lee is the completely charming Claudia at eighteen.

Charles Maigne was making exteriors for "The Fighting Chance," and talk about a bevy of beauties! You know the kind of women Robert W. Chambers describes in his books—and the gowns they wear? Well, a bunch of them had stepped right out of Bob's book into the scene, grace, manner, clothes and all. Anna Q. Nilsson, Dorothy Davenport, Ruth Helms, Maud Wayne and a lot more that I didn't recognize, but there wasn't one in the crowd but would have taken all the ribbons in a beauty show.

I saw Bryant Washburn, who is working in "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," but not when I saw him. He was among those present on Sam Wood's set when Wallie Reid and Bebe Daniels were doing their dance, and he stuck around until little "Sonny" Washburn, who is visiting the studio came and led him away.

Donald Crisp was also in the crowd, and he told me all about "Held by the Enemy," William Gillette's Civil War thriller, which he will start on in a few days.

Arbuckle as the Sheriff.

Don is going to have some cast in the piece. Lew Stone, from the regular stage, is going to play Gordon Hayne; Jack Holt will be Colonel Prescott; Clyde Fillmore, who has just made the hit of his young life as the lead in "Civilian Clothes," twenty-seven straight weeks at the Morosco Theatre, will be Brig. Surgeon Fielding; Wanda Hawley will be Emma McCreery; Agnes Ayres will be Rachael Hayne, and Walter Hiers will be Tommy Beene.

"Barring" Fay Tincher.
Christie comedy star in her newest, "Go West, Young Woman!"

The treat of the day, however, was when I struck Director George Melford's set, where he was making "The Round-Up," with Roscoe Arbuckle as the sheriff. Can you imagine Fatty in a straight dramatic role? Well, he's immense, that's all, and I'm not trying to pull any fresh insinuations about avoirdupois when I tell you that he is there with every ounce in the heavy stuff. Do you remember the "Nobody loves a fat man" incident in the stage version of "The Round-Up," and what a hit it made? Just wait for Roscoe, that's all.

A Light Touch in a Heavy Role.

Mabel Julienne Scott—Great Gosh! How often I wrote that name back in the old days when I was doping out movie dramatics for a St. Louis newspaper—and Mabel and Mitch Lewis were knocking 'em dead with "The Barrier" out at Billy Siever's theatre on Grand Avenue—well, at any rate, Miss Scott is supporting Fatty.

Wallace Beery is the tough half-breed; Raymond Hatton, Tully Marshall, Ernest Joy, Ruth Ashby, Irving Cummings, Eddie Sutherland and Tom Forman, who is doubling in brass by writing the scenario of the piece, are all in the cast of "The Round-Up."

I stopped for a long time at "The Round-Up" set, watching Fatty running up and down the dramatic scale with ease and grace. And don't get it into your head that the dramatic scale Roscoe uses resembles a hay scale, either. His dramatic touch is light and delicate. He presses gently on the soft pedal, irises in and out from the subtle shades of humor, self-pity, scorn and anger with the art of a master and, what is still better, the inimitable Arbuckle mannerisms.

Selig Plant Grows Rapidly.

I paid a visit to Col. W. N. Selig's plant this week, together with Mack MacArthur, Doc Shallenberger, of the Arrow Films, and Paul Hurst, director of the "Lightning Brice" serial.

Col. Selig always has had a big plant and just now it is growing still bigger. If they keep on they'll have to move the lake in Lincoln Park to make way for the new buildings. Three big stages and a new administration building have been added to the plant since my last visit.

We saw Bertram Bracken making Arthur Hornblow's story, "The Mask," into a picture. Hedda Nova, who is Mrs. Paul Hurst, Jack Holt, Fred Malatesta and William H. Clifford are in the cast of the film.

Franklyn Farnum and Mary Anderson are working in a serial at Selig's, but they were on location or somewhere; at any rate they were not at the studio and we didn't get to see them shooting, but we did get to see Billy Wing, who wrote the story of the serial.

Many Productions Planned.

Col. Selig has a lot of stuff up his sleeve in the production line. Many of the books from his famous library are to be put on the screen in the near future. As soon as "The Mask" is finished, work will start on James Oliver Curwood's "Kazan." This will be followed by "The Kingdom of Slender Swords," and then one of E. Phillip Oppenheim's stories, which will be presented as a fifteen episode serial.

Louis B. Mayer's studio is next door to the Selig plant and we went over and talked to Arthur Rosson, who has just finished filming "Polly of the Storm Country," with Mildred Harris Chaplin as Polly. This Storm Country story is by the same author who wrote Mary Pickford's "Tess of the Storm Country," and Art Rosson says Polly will be as big a smash as Tess ever was.

We saw Bennie Zeidman with one of his famous nine-inch cigars, and Dick Rosson and Harry Northroup, who had parts in the "Polly" picture, and Emory Johnston and Anita Stewart and her husband, Rudolph Cameron, who have just got through with "The Fighting Shepherdess," and then we spent an hour looking at Col. Selig's zoo.

Tourists Marvel at Animals.

I never saw so many lions, tigers, bears, ostriches, porcupines, cockatoos, owls, humming birds, monkeys, ducks, geese, swans, elephants wolves parrots and alligators in my life, and neither did Mac nor Doc Shallenberger.

The Selig zoo is one of the show places of our fair city and maybe the tourists don't eat it up. They come in by the hundreds and feed the elephants peanuts and watch the ostriches swallow oranges, skin and all, and rave over the cute little baby lions, and take duck fits when they see the baby monkey that one of the storks from the lake dropped in at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ring Tail Monk, who live in the round cage just across the street from the yellow bears' den.

"Yes or No" for Norma Talmadge.

Joseph M. Schenck has purchased the picture rights of the Broadway success, "Yes or No," for Norma Talmadge's third First National picture. "Yes or No," from the play by Charles Coodrich, which had a long season run in New York at the Longacre Theatre, where it was produced by G. M. Anderson, is now being put into continuity form by Mary Murrillo.

Numa Plans February Showing in New York for "Return of Tarzan"

THE Numa Pictures Corporation's picturization of the latest of the Edgar Rice Burrough' stories, "The Return of Tarzan," is expected to be ready for a New York showing by February first. The production is said to have been made with a lavish hand. The thousands who are familiar with the exploits of the romantic ape-man will recall that this story opens on board a liner. Tarzan's adventures start with his answering the call for her from a stunning Countess who is being persecuted by a worthless brother named Rokoff. This same Rokoff becomes Tarzan's enemy and it is the pursuit of him, and his fiendish efforts at revenge on Tarzan that furnish the dramatice props of the picture.

Later he finds his way to the jungle and reverts quickly to the half-savage ways of his early training. The appearance in the jungle of Jane Porter and party bings the story's romance to a happy ending.

There are many incidents of jungle fighting said to be startingly realistic, notably Tarzan's two hand-to-hand encounters with lions, and a furious struggle with a man-sized ape.

More than 3,000 extra people have been used. Joe Martin, the famous screen-ape, is among the animals present, as well as seven lions and lionesses.

Under the direction of Harry Revier and George Merrick, the attraction promises many spectacular scenes, combining luxurious interior settings with the exterior and jungle background. The water episodes, including the blowing up of a big yacht, a dramatic incident in a life boat, and the swimming feats of Tarzan when thrown overboard, are said to be highly exciting.

An excellent cast includes Gene Pollar as "Tarzan," Karla Schramm as "Jane" and Walter Miller, Armand Cortez, Estelle Taylor, George Romain, Donna Ramirez, Peggy Hannon, Estelle Evans, Louis Stearns, Franklin B. Coates, Fred A. Turner, Evelyn Fariss, Phil Gastbrock, Arthur Morison, Jack Leonard, Harry Lonsdale, Betty Turner and John Sturgeon. James Hutchinson and John K. Holbrook are the cameramen.

Golden Takes Cast South to Film Scenes for Serial

ELEVEN members of the cast of the Allgood Pictures Corporation serial, "The Whirlwind," left recently for a trip to the South, where a number of important exterior scenes for the later episodes of this serial will be filmed. The company includes Joseph A. Golden, who wrote and is directing the serial; also Charles Hutchinson in the leading role, Edith Thornton who plays opposite, and Richard Neil, the heavy.

A. Alperstein, of Allgood Pictures, states that the trip would consume from six to eight weeks. The first stop will be made in Asheville, N. C., and from there the company will go to Jacksonville to film shipyard scenes, and thence to Miami for coast and additional water scenes.

The scenes to be filmed in Florida involve several stunts in which alligators, motor boats, yachts, etc., figure prominently.

Darling Now Scenario Editor.

W. Scott Darling is now scenario editor for the Christie Film Company, having been advanced to that post by Al Christie on the recent acquisition of four new scenario writers by that enterprising firm.

"Help" is Latest Gale Henry.

The title of the latest comedy starring Gale Henry that has just been completed at the Bulls Eye studio in Hollywood is "Help." The star illustrates her idea of privileges that should be allowed a modern maid, wherein she entertains her friends in the parlor and otherwise enjoys herself at her mistress' expense. Billy Franey and Hap H. Ward assist in making the story amusing. Tom Gibson directed.

Great Interest Being Manifested in Warners' "Lost City" Serial

KEEN interest is being manifested by exhibitors in "The Lost City," the wild animal serial, say the Warner Brothers, who are releasing it, and reports from the state rights buyers state that pre-release bookings records are being broken. In response to the trade magazine, scores of exhibitors have booked "The Lost City" without seeing it.

"Box office logic tells the exhibitors that a serial of this magnitude, with the African jungles for a background, uncivilized natives and wild animals depicted in their natural haunts will appeal to the masses. Who, at some time or other, has not read of the dangers of the jungles without a desire to see these adventures? And this desire has not alone been confined to the younger element," says an official of the company. "And in the presentation of this serial story the producer whisks the spectator into a strange land, among strange people, amid a long series of adventures that could never be described in words as it can be shown in thrilling motion pictures."

To get the desired sensations the animals were permitted to attack the various characters, of course, being foiled at the danger instant by the intervention of the rescuing performers.

The result is said to be an unusually realistic and sensational story.

Big Booking for Christie Films.

The Peerless Film Service of San Francisco, of which E. H. Emmick is head, has scored again with Christie Comedies. The popular brand has been booked by Ye Liberty Theatre, Oakland, to be shown with the newest Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks releases. This is a first run theatre, with advanced prices. As each feature is to run nineteen days, this makes a total of thirty-eight consecutive days for the Christie comedies.

Robert Whittier in Supreme Serial.

Following their new plan to feature famous screen names in every episode of their million dollar serial, "The Mystery Mind," Reeve and Grey have engaged Robert Whittier, known in this country for his productions of Ibsen and Russian plays.

Whittier gained his training abroad in the French and Italian pantomimes. A few years ago he toured Europe as a co-star with Maurice De Feraudy, and there joined the Grand-Guignol Theatre, where for three seasons he played characters dealing with mental derangement.

The Cohns Offer $100 for Suitable Theme for a Hall Room Boy Comedy

WERE you ever broke? This is the question to which Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of Hall Room Comedies, are seeking an answer which may be woven into a story for a Hall Room Boys Comedy. For the best answer to this question, with a description of the circumstances and details occurring at the time of financial embarrassment, the Cohns are willing to pay $100 according to an announcement by Jack Cohn this week.

"So many suggestions as to what the Hall Room Boys should do next have come through the mail in recent weeks," said Jack Cohn, "that we have decided to pay $100 for the best suggestion, if it is received by February 15. All suggestions should be confined to the most ludicrous circumstances under which the writer went completely 'broke.' Everybody, it would seem through the large amount of mail we receive weekly, offering suggestions for stories for the Hall Room Boys, Percy and Ferdie, had at some time in his life, lived in a hall bedroom or had been 'broke' under humorous circumstances.

"The letters submitted should describe a situation in such a way that it can be woven into a story for a Hall Room Boys Comedy."

To date, although there have been but ten Hall Room Boys releases, their success has been established in the best theatres all over the United States, according to Mr. Cohn. A survey of all the exchanges handling them made during the last month shows that their greatest success has been in the more important houses of each territory. Repeated bookings have been common, the survey showed, and exhibitors are pleased at the manner in which they have been received by their audiences.

All letters should be addressed to "The Letter Editor, Hall Room Boys Photoplays, Inc., 1600 Broadway, New York City."

The current Hall Room release is "Neck and Neck," for which the scenarist borrowed his theme from the idea of grafting interstitial glands from executed prisoners into the anatomies of others, so that old age is held at arm's length, and the blood of youth courses once again through the patient's veins.

Heavy Bookings Reported on "$1,000,000 Reward"

THE feature serial production, "$1,000,000 Reward," starring Lillian Walker and made by Grossman Pictures, Inc., at the Ithaca studio, has been released in New York City by Aywon Film Corporation and in Boston and New England by the Eastern Feature Film Corporation.

Reports from the offices of Grossman Pictures, Inc., are to the effect that orders from the various exchanges for paper and accessories on the serial have been particularly heavy, indicating widespread bookings.

Great popularity is predicted for this serial, which has an excellent cast and fifteen thrilling episodes.

Henry East Directing.

Henry East, formerly connected with Fox, has been made casting director for the Gale Henry comedies and is at present busy casting people for the twenty-fifth in Miss Henry's series of twenty-six two-reelers.

Strong Cast Portrays Bacon's "Blind Love"

GERALD F. BACON, whose latest picture, "Blind Love," starring Lucy Cotton, supported by George LeGuere, Thurlow Bergen, James Cullen, Eduarde Durand, Lillian Bacon and Bert Leigh, was recently placed on the state rights market for distribution by Aywon Film Corporation, 729 Seventh avenue, gave a private review showing of the picture on Tuesday morning, at Miles Projection Room.

Mr. Bacon's latest production is a story of Max Marcin's. The screen adaptation was made by Basil Dickey, and the picture was produced under the personal direction of Oliver D. Bailey, a prominent director for both stage and screen, whose best known productions for the silent drama was represented by "The Whirl of Life," starring Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Castle in "The Melting Pot."

Supreme Pictures Officials Noted for Their Past Serial Successes

WITH the completion of more than half of their new serial, "The Mystery Mind," starring J. Robert Pauline, Reeve and Grey announce that Supreme Pictures, Inc., will be known as "The House of Serials," and that believing that the time has come to inaugurate a new policy, the serials made by them are to be produced by men whose work is a summary of success in the serial field.

The men back of Supreme Pictures have been closely asociated with a large number of serial successes, either as authors or exploiters.

The new plan of Supreme Pictures involves the engagement of J. Robert Pauline, known world-wide as a hypnotist and scientist—and also an excellent actor.

Secondly, the featuring of the names of prominent actors and actresses especially engaged for each episode, such as Violet MacMillan, Paul Panzer, Peggy Shaner, Frank Montgomery, Robert Whittier, Ralph Locke, Edward Elkas, Irene Blackwell, Morgan Thorpe, Edwin Rogers and John Smiley. Others will be added as the serial progresses.

Thirdly, lavish sets, unusual mechanical effects, scientific instruments and machines of absolute accuracy.

And lastly, a real story, the joint work of Arthur B. Reeve and John W. Grey.

Arthur B. Reeve is known as the creator of the "Craig Kennedy" stories. Reeve is said to be responsible for the first serial thrills of intellectual type. He has done the physical thrills, too. Some of his serials were "The Exploits of Elaine," the "Romance of Elaine" and "The House of Hate," "The Hidden Hand" and "The Tiger's Trail."

John W. Grey was advertising manager, later in charge of publicity for Mutual and handled many successful serials for Universal. He also wrote and directed one-reel productions.

He was then placed in charge of the exploitation department for International. Later he became head of the scenario department for Pathe, supervising productions, among them many serails.

Connection with Pathe brought Reeve and Grey together. Together they wrote "The Master Mystery" and "The Grim Game" for Houdini; "$1,000,000 Reward" for Lillian Walker; "The Carter Case" for Herbert Rawlinson. Their new serial, "The Mystery Mind," is being produced in their own studio.

"It Happend in Paris"

Lane Joins Character Pictures.

Tamar Lane, for the past year associated with the Selznick company, has joined the Character Pictures Corporation in the capacity of manager of production, according to an announcement from the offices of the company.

Though still in his twenties, Mr. Lane has had a long and varied career in both the theatrical and picture business as motion picture editor, exhibitor, actor, scenario writer, publicity man, etc., and his thorough acquaintance with all the different phases of the motion picture game fits him well for his new position.

Harry Cohn Leaves for West.

Accompanied by Gladys Clark and Henry Bergman, the vaudeville team of Clark & Bergman, who have forsaken the stage for the movies, Harry Cohn, of the firm of Jack and Harry Cohn, producers of Hall Room Boy Comedies, will leave for Los Angeles today to supervise production. While Harry Cohn is handling the business of the Hall Room Boys Photoplays, Inc., on the Coast, Jack Cohn will remain in charge of affairs in the East.

Schomer-Ross Report Territory Selling Fast on "The Sacred Flame"

JUDGING from the sales now progressing on 'The Sacred Flame,' starring Emily Stevens, we will have the entire territory sold before very long," says E. S. Manheimer and Agnes Egan Cobb handling the selling end of the Schomer-Ross business. "We've shown this picture to every type of state rights buyer and they agree this is the type of production that draws business because of its deep human interest story."

"Many theatres everywhere," says a prominent state right man, "want pictures with smiles, tears, joy, sorrow, emotional stuff with a smash at the end that sends them away talking. I believe that 'The Sacred Flame' is that character of picture. It picturizes the struggles of a school teacher, her trials and her tribulations, her zenith in the engagement to marry a young lawyer. Then the crash that holds audiences until the end when it lets them down easy and carefully with a perfect finish. My people want that type of story because it tells a tale of everyday human beings."

Director Schomer, who has many successes to his credit, says it brings to the public the entertainment they seek and enables the theatre man to hold the picture over for a run of several days "The Sacred Flame brings glimpses of life in the heart of New York, showing the striking contrast between the upper ten and the lower masses of the metropolis.

Schomer-Ross productions have now on the press an elaborate campaign book that boasts of being one of the most complete, original and unique advertising and publicity helps issued.

"We've not only produced a picture that gets across in a big way, but we've doped out unusual helps in advertising that any exhibitor could possibly ask for," says Mr. Manheimer. Complete accessories in the way of a full line of striking posters, lobby displays, heralds, slides, specially written song with slides and other complete helps are ready.

Jans Secures "Nothing a Year" for Second Olive Tell Picture

NOW that work is progressing so satisfactorily on "Love Without Question," the first production of B. A. Rolfe for Jans Pictures, Inc., Mr. Rolfe anounces that "Nothing a Year" has been selected as the second vehicle for Miss Tell. The title, it is understood, will be changed.

"Nothing a Year" is a novel by Charles Belmont Davis, brother of the late Richard Harding Davis and for years editor of Collier's Weekly. He entered the literary field as a short story writer, branching out later as a novelist of note.

Delineates Society.

Mr. Davis's novel deals with New York society. The plot is said to be unique, and the character of the leading woman unusual.

In selecting this novel the Jans Pictures feel that they are offering a story with a distinct public appeal and one that will aid the box office receipts of the exhibitors. The scenes give the producers a chance, it is claimed, for the presentation of lavish sets and an expenditure of money that will assure the finished production to be one of the best.

In the film version, it is anounced, the mystery of the story is more forcibly brought out.

Chet Franklin to Direct Annette Kellerman Film

SOL LESSER announces the engagement of Chet Franklin to direct Annette Kellerman in a series of pictures, first of which will be taken from a story especially written for her by Bernard McConnville, who recently adapted such successes as "The Hoodlum" and "Heart of the Hills" for Mary Pickford.

Chet Franklin has directed such as Olive Thomas, Bessie Love and Constance Talmadge.

In this new picture, Miss Kellerman will depart from stories such as "Neptune's Daughter," and "Daughter of the Gods," and will appear in a role with a society background, permitting her to wear some beautiful gowns. The plot is a blending of society life, with sea adventures, giving Miss Kellerman the opportunity to display her aquatic feats

The cast is now being engaged, and the entire company will be sent to the Hawaiian Islands, with a probable trip to Australia and New Zealand. The interiors are being made at the Brunton studios.

In order to help in the exploitation, Mr. Lesser is arranging a personal appearance of Miss Kellerman, in which she will tour the country with the picture and appear in a prologue.

Lesser Reissner "Spoilers" in New York Territory

THE Sol Lesser Exchange announces that the Loew Circuit has booked "The Spoilers" for many of its houses, starting January 19 at the Standard Theatre. This Rex Beach picture, starring Wiliam Farnum, supported by Kathlyn Williams, Thomas Santschi and Bessie Eyton, is being re-issued in Greater New York by Sol Lesser. The Lesser organization sold the New York state rights to the Noxall Film Co., of 729 Seventh ave., who have reported a heavy booking. A new line of advertising accessories is available, and many exhibitors who have played it three and four times are arranging to play it again.

An Unusually Extensive Campaign Prepared for "Who's Your Servant?"

AN unusually extensive exploitation, advertising and publicity campaign is announced in connection with "Who's Your Servant?", the sensational photodrama written by Julian Johnson, the well-known motion picture critic.

L. L. Hiller, who controls the world rights to this picture, declares that when the picture reaches the public, one of the greatest national advertising campaigns will have made "Who's Your Servant?" a byword in homes throughout the country.

A sixteen-page campaign book is being prepared. It will be in four colors and contain more than a hundred useful hints as to how to put this picture over. Every help has been compiled from a showmanship angle. The book is illustrated by well-known artists, and special attention has been given to outdoor advertising, lobby displays and a co-operative plan sheet. From full page layouts to teaser ads are to be found, and a unique mail campaign is suggested.

Another book containing sixteen pages of news of the picture, printed only on one side of the sheet, also one, two and three-column cuts.

Advertising Aids.

"When I closed the deal for the world rights, I was asked to release the picture at once," says Mr. Hiller. "Realizing the worth of the production, I decided to hold it until the campaign would be a reality and it will be several weeks before the prints will be given to the public.

"There will be more than twenty-five other accessories. In planning the campaign, I employed showmen who know how to exploit this picture. The books prepared are practical and I predict will revolutionize this form of salesmanship."

The settings of the picture afforded ample material for effective posters. There is a twenty-four sheet, a six, two threes and two ones, also two sets of beautiful 22x28 and 11x14 lobby display. Also, two each of the four, three and two column advertising cuts, three one-column and cuts, and six one- and two-column scene cuts.

The heralds and window cards are in two colors, and there is an elaborate musical setting. Besides the co-operative plan sheet there are blotters, postcards and numerous other aids.

In preparing "Who's Your Servant?" Mr. Johnson desired a strong box office attraction and based on his experience, he decided that the servant problem was the best bet. He conferred with the police department heads in several of the largest cities, and the result is said to be a picture with a kick, that does not hinge on the impossible, but deals with everyday life.

"You cannot pick up a paper without realizing that the servant problem is one of the crises that face the country. In this picture you will find things that make you sit up and take notice, evils that confront you, arguments that must be settled, and in fact every theme bearing on the servant problem."

Ethel Clayton Reissues Handled by Jacob Mills

SPECIAL attention will be given to the editing and titling of all Foundation Film Corporation releases, says Murray W. Garson, general manager of the company, as the favorable comments on the titling of "Blindness of Youth," has convinced him that the editing and titling of a picture can be made as strong a talking point as the direction, star or story.

Mr. Garson believes that the average audience is quick to detect faulty editing and titling. The titling for this picture as well as the editing was done by Harry Chandlee and William B. Lamb, who are at present at work on two other Foundation features scheduled for early release.

Brandt Reports Intense Interest in "Confession"

JOE BRANDT, who has just returned from an extended trip, reports that "Confession," in the territories in which it has been sold, is playing to unusually heavy business, with many return dates. He also reports the sale of Canadian and Newfoundland rights to H. Porter Baldwin of Springfield, Mass., who will organize at least two road shows, and is preparing for a pretentious showing in Montreal or Toronto.

The Equity Pictures Corporation of Michigan, located in the Film Exchange Building, Detroit, has also bought the rights to this picture for Michigan.

Mr. Brandt expects to leave shortly for an extended Southern trip.

Arrow Is Releasing Two Art-O-Graf Six Reelers

THE new six-reel feature released by the Arrow Film Corporation, formerly titled "The Wolves of Wall Street," has had its title changed to "Wolves of the Street." This is the feature produced by the Art-O-Graf Film Company and features Edmund F. Cobb, supported by Vida Johnson.

"Wolves of the Street" is a combination Eastern and Western feature. The story opens in Wall Street and the action deals with a young broker, who later is called West to quell a strike in a mine.

Edmund F. Cobb was born in the West and he is as thoroughly at home on a horse's back as he is in a dress suit. He is also said to have exceptional dramatic ability.

"Wolves of the Street" was released January 15.

"The Desert Scorpion" is another six-reel feature which also stars Edmund F. Cobb. This feature is thoroughly Western, and the action takes place in its entirety in the West.

This feature was also produced by the Art-O-Graf Company and was directed under the personal supervision of Otis B. Thayer.

Charles Mackay Joins Jans.

B. A. Rolfe announces that Charles Mackay has been engaged to portray the role of a spiritualistic country doctor in Jans Pictures, Inc., initial production, "Love Without Question," adapted from C. Wadsworth Camp's novel, "The Abandoned Room."

Mr. Mackay's wide experience in the motion picture field is said to have made him particularly adaptable to this fantastic role.

Allan Dwan Will Leave Mayflower When Present Picture Is Finished

ALLAN DWAN, director of "Soldiers of Fortune" and "The Luck of the Irish," for the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, has announced that he will sever his contract with Mayflower as soon as the production he is working on now is completed.

Mr. Dwan will begin work immediately on his initial picture as an independent producer and member of the Associated Producers, recently formed by Dwan, Maurice Tourneur, Marshall Neilan Mack Sennett, George Loane Tucker and Thomas H. Ince. Dwan's announcement, which is made on the heels of a denial of the rumor by Isaac Wolper, president of Mayflower, comes as a surprise, since it was stated at the time of the formation of the "Big Six," as the Associated Producers are called, that each member of the organization would complete the contract he was then operating under before beginning productions under the new plan.

In commenting on his action Mr. Dwan says that his relations with Mayflower have always been pleasant and that his sole reason for severing his connection with them is that he is very anxious to get started on his work on the Associated Producers schedule.

Just before leaving Los Angeles for the East, Isaac Wolper, president of Mayflower, reiterated his statement that Dwan was not going to leave his company and said that Dwan's contract, which is said to extend into the late summer and to call for four more pictures, would be finished.

Ray Producing Company Formed.

Charles Ray Productions, Inc., is the name of the company that has just been organized to produce the Charles Ray pictures for the First National Exhibitors Circuit. The company has a capitalization of $100,000 and the following officers have been elected: Charles T. Ray, the star's father, president; Richard Willis, first vice president and general manager; A. A. Kidder, secretary and treasurer; Gus Inglis, second vice president. These officers, together with Charles Ray, comprise the board of directors.

Charles Ray's contract with Thomas H. Ince expires on February 1, and on March 1 production on the first of the First National features is scheduled to begin. The month of February will be spent by Ray in making his first visit to New York.

The studios formerly occupied by Jesse D. Hampton, near Sunset Boulevard, have been taken over by the Charles Ray company. Jerome Storm, who has directed all the recent Ray pictures, will continue to direct under the new management. Players will be engaged for each production and no stock company will be maintained. Several stories suitable to Ray's type have already been purchased, and Rob Wagner, magazine writer, has agreed to write a number of comedy dramas for Ray.

Sennett Gets Big Offer.

Mack Sennett, whose comedy feature, "Down on the Farm," was completed recently, has received, through E. M. Asher, his personal representative, an offer of $250,000 for a half interest in the production from a group of San Francisco business men.

Abe Friedman, a member of the Friedman Furniture Corporation, of San Francisco, has been in Los Angeles for the past week in the interests of the capitalists of the city, who seek to engage in the business of film exploiting as a legitimate investment for their capital.

"Down on the Farm" is a five-reel super-comedy, in which all of Sennett's most expert and popular players take part. Mr. Sennett has the offer under consideration.

Ince Appoints Lusk.

Norbert Lusk, formerly of the Goldwyn West Coast publicity department, has been appointed eastern representative of the Thomas H. Ince publicity department and has established offices in the Times Building in New York.

Wolf Heads Trade Board.

Maurice Wolf, manager of the Goldwyn exchange, has been elected president of the Los Angeles Film Board of Trade.

To Supervise Morosco Pictures.

Will M. Ritchey, who for two years has been a scenario writer at Famous Players-Lasky studio, has been promoted to the position of supervising director at the Morosco film plant on Occidental avenue, where it is planned to increase production activities and to keep at least two companies at work there all of the time. Mr. Ritchey wrote the scenarios for "Everywoman," a recent Famous Players-Lasky feature, and for "The Fighting Chance," the Robert W. Chambers story now in course of production at the Lasky plant.

Tally is New Kinema Manager.

Seymour Tally, son of T. L. Tally, proprietor of the Broadway and Kinema theatres and vice president of the First National Exhibitors, has been made manager of the Kinema by his father, upon the resignation of George Dumond, former manager, who left for the East immediately upon being relieved of his duties. Mr. Dumond, it is rumored, will manage one of the Loew houses.

Seymour Tally's first presentation at the Kinema was the Anita Stewart production, "In Old Kentucky," which was put on with artistic and appropriate accompanying features. Young Mr. Tally has made a few changes in the technical force and in the orchestra.

New Studio for Glendale.

The Arts Unit Company, a concern organized for the purpose of erecting a film studio to rent out to producers, has leased twelve acres of land in Glendale, with an option on thirty acres more, on which to erect the proposed studio.

Frank L. Stobbs is trustee for the company and states that construction will soon begin on the studio buildings.

Aviator Entertains Flyers.

Lieut. O. L. Locklear, star of "The Great Air Robbery," a Universal feature, was host to all the officer and enlisted men of the Arcadia Aviation Feld one evening during the recent run of the film at the Superba theatre. Locklear was an army flyer during the war, and the Aviators' Night was arranged through the courtesy of Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, who was in Los Angeles at the time, and Arthur Wenzel, manager of the Superba.

Horseshoe the Admission Ticket.

T. L. Tally, proprietor of the Kinema and Talley's Broadway theatres in Los Angeles, inaugurated a novel advertising stunt with the opening of the new Anita Stewart feature, "In Old Kentucky," at the Kinema last week. All blacksmiths living in the city or suburbs were admitted free to the show upon presentation of a horseshoe.

Looking for Good Features.

Colvin W. Brown, assistant treasurer of the Clark Cornelius Corporation, is in town paying his first visit to West Coast Filmland, and incidentally is on the lookout for anything good in the special feature line.

New Company to Star Gloria Joy.

Little Gloria Joy, who has just finished a part in a Charles Ray picture, will again be seen as leading player in film features, if the new company now forming, with a capitalization of $100,000, carries out its plans. Gloria has had vaudeville and other offers, but she prefers to work in screen plays, and stories suitable to her age and talents are being considered for her by Jack Retlaw, business manager of the new company.

Dowling to Make Tour of Exchanges.

Pat Dowling, publicity director of the Christie studios in Hollywood, will soon leave on an extended tour of the country to visit the film exchanges that are distributing the output of the Christie studios. Pat will collect valuable data on the manner and method of presentation of Christie films in the various theatres of the cities he visits.

Promotion for Darling.

W. Scott Darling, prolific scenario writer of the Christie studios, has been promoted to the post of editor-in-chief of the scenario department, which was recently augmented by the addition of four new writers.

Film Explosion Causes Little Damage.

While H. McCollister, moving picture operator for a theatre on North Main street, was running a film through the projection machine on the night of January 13, the film exploded, causing McCollister to be burned about the face and hands and damaging the booth and equipment to the extent of about $500. The operator's burns were not serious and no damage was done to the rest of the house.

Tearle to Be Starred.

Conway Tearle, who was brought West by Harry Garson to play opposite Clara Kimball Young in "The Forbidden Woman," has now been elevated to the position of star in his own right and will be the featured player in the film production of Henry Arthur Jones' drama, "Michael and His Lost Angel," which will soon be produced at the Garson studio.

"Pollyanna" at Clune's

Mary Pickford's first offering on the United Artists program has been secured by W. H. Clune for a pretentious presentation at Clune's Auditorium, beginning January 19. Miss Pickford worked three months on the "Pollyanna" production, and those who have been fortunate enough to see a pre-view of the picture declare that she has made a 100 per cent. feature of it.

Publicists Elect Officers.

The recently organized Studio Publicists Association, which now boasts seventeen members, held a meeting last week for the purpose of electing officers. Capt. E. Walter Huntington, or Brunton, was made president; Ham Beall, vice president; Al Risley, of the Gale Henry studio, treasurer; Emily Squier, secretary, and Ted Taylor, of Metro, editor of the official organ of the association.

Looking for New Blood.

Harry Rapf, western production manager for Lewis J. Selznick, has opened what he terms a "drive" for new talent, both in stars and directors, for his organization. The work of each player in Selznick productions will be carefully noted and analyzed, and if any actor or actress gives sufficient promise of making really great success in pictures, he or she will be given an opportunity in a stellar role at an early date. Directors are to be given the same chances, and if the result justifies the expectation, the "finds" will be trained in the West and then sent on to New York.

"Big Six" Plans Studio.

The Associated Producers, which includes Thomas H. Ince, Allan Dwan, Mack Sennett, Maurice Tourneur, Marshall Neilan and George Loane Tucker, are planning to build a studio in Glendale, where each producer will have his own stages, cutting room and offices, yet will be in close connection with the other members of the association at the same time. Work is to be commenced on the new plant in about a month.

Ex-Bad Men Tell Experiences.

Al Jennings and Emmett Dalton, famous ex-bandits of the South and Middle West and now motion picture stars, made speeches at the east side and central jails of Los Angeles last Sunday, by special request, to take the place of the usual Sunday services at these institutions. Al took for his theme: "You can't beat the game and you can't get by the law."

Recovers from Sleep Sickness.

Hope Loring, well-known scenario writer of Los Angeles, succumbed to the "sleeping sickness" or "encephalitis lethargica," as her physician calls it, on January 3, remaining in a semi-conscious state for four days, during which time her limbs seemed to be afflicted with a mild sort of paralysis. Miss Loring is now able to sit up and is on a fair way to complete recovery in a short time.

Enter "The Silversheet."

"The Silversheet" is the title of a new magazine that is to be launched by the Thomas H. Ince studio, under the editorship of Hunt Stromberg, new publicity director at the plant. McCormick Now Trusts to Type to Get His Message Over Clear

ALTHOUGH S. Barrett McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis, has always used type to get over the major portion of his message, he is now turning to type faces for his titles. His hand lettered titles were always a close approximation of type face, but now he uses the actual type and is getting away from much drawing and is using almost no hand lettering. One of his best campaigns for some time was that for "The Virtuous Vamp," which lent itself unusually well to the carricature treatment. These two displays suggest the general style of the work, the copy being changed for each insertion, though the same copy was used sprightly vein to match the treatment of the story, and it makes you want to see this innocent young thing who has so deadly an effect. An even more marked departure from the layout is found in the advertising for "In Old Kentucky," for which practically no heavy layout work was done. The two designs shown are each four fifteens. One has no drawing whatever beyond the signature, while the other carries only a small design in silhouette. It is in distinct contrast for one is heavier with type than usual and the other carries less argument than we have ever seen Mr. McCormick use.

This is all in line with the present tendency toward more type and less layout. It is no longer considered that a pretty picture will sell a ticket. It will help to draw attention to the selling talk, but it cannot do the work alone, and the leaders among the advertisers are all turning toward the type display with the drawn design relegated to its proper place as an attractor. The drawings for "The Virtuous Vamp" help to sell the story, for they supplement the talk, but it is only seldom that the drawing can really help to sell and we seem to be coming to a general dropping of the artist to his proper place in the scheme of things. He can help, but he is not the chief factor in selling. It seems to be the dawn of a better day and a day for which this department has worked for a long time.

Hints and Helps from Many Hustlers

and we do not think that it would sell as well as some of his own snappy sentences. These square cuts are awkward, at best. They do not work well on the smaller spaces, and they do not fit in nicely anywhere, save as the keynote of a full page. They are always awkward and inflexible. Compare the arrangement with the use of the line cut on the right. Here, rule and house signature are so handled that the entire space seems to be a part of a single design, and the line cut comes out much better. It is a decidely poor specimen of art work, but it serves for an attractor, which is all that is expected of it. The selling is all done on the Griffith name, and the small bank of type in the lower right hand corner.

Mr. Chambers has made decidedly ingenious use of the material at his comand, but he did not have very good material to start with. It is not always possible to obtain as good an effect with the use of rule, but here the entire space is a blended display and not some type and a cut. The second pair of spaces offer an interesting contrast, threes against fours, with the threes getting the better chance. Both spaces are twelves. In the all type display, every word stands out. Every line sells. A picture is only a picture, but a type line is an argument. The top bank gives the premise, which it clinches by "His Wife's Friend," with Dorothy Dalton, jars loose the greatest problem of married life.

A Three and a Four Twelves, in Which the Three-column Space Gets the More Prominent Display.

The Chaplin reissue is "Shown for the benefit of the Sorry ones, who muffed them the first time up," which is a graceful line for a reissued series. The white space gets far more attention in the paper than does the cut. This may not sound right to a lot of old timers, but it can be easily proven. Pick up any issue of any daily paper and look at the advertising displays. You will find that those surrounded by white space show up better than a majority of those which depend upon a cut for an attractor. This is not invariably true, but the exception is a design in which the attractor is made to fit that particular advertisement and that particular space. Now and then you will encounter a cut so happily designed that it helps the type talk, but in a majority of instances a house signature beats the best of the press book cuts for getting attention. Of course, in the reproductions, the white space does not get the proper value, for its environment has been removed, but take them in the paper and you will find that white space is better than the blackest reverse cut ever planned. Mr. Chambers makes ingenious own type displays. He must think so, too, for these are in use of exchange cuts, but we think he is at his best in his the majority.

Educated His Patrons to Two-Day Runs

George Klein, of the Felton, Philadelphia, has been, running his house as a daily change theatre, but he felt that now and then he was letting some good money get away from him with this fixed policy, so he decided to break things open with Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum." Some of the special efforts were school matinees at reduced prices, two different throwaways, three styples of window cards and an extra lobby display. As a result the picture cleaned up for two days, the tradition was broken, and now Mr. Klem can run any big picture two days, if he wishes, with less strenuous advertising methods. The start is the important thing, and he waited until he could turn the trick with a "sure-fire."

Type Titles Give Best Display for Newspaper Work on Fast Presses

NINETY-NINE times out of every hundred the exhibitor who uses a type line for his title wins over the man who depends upon the cut title to get his wares over. Here are two displays from H. G. Ramsey, of the Royal, El Dorado, Kansas. Mr. Ramsey has a knack of putting his displays together well, but in these two spaces for Constance Talmadge in "The Virtuous Vamp" he gets better results from a two elevens than he does from a three twelves.

Two Displays in Which the Type Title is Far More Prominent Than the Larger Cut.

Could he have gotten a good black on the reverse cut, this larger display would have come up better, but it is seldom that newspaper printers get a really black impression. The type title comes up much better in the announcement, though in the reproduction the reverse cut will show to better advantage than in the newspaper original. Mr. Ramsey is in a small town and has to use what he can get, but he could have made a decided improvement by sawing off that larger cut just above the title, nicking the edge with a chisel, soften ing the lines with a file and getting a vignette effect, with the title in good strong type letters. These cuts look all right in the press book. They are printed on flat bed presses, with good cut ink. They look great. But when you look at a press book, think of what your own printer will give you. Don't take chances. Play safe. Trust to type, and then watch what type he gives you.

Here's a New Angle on Press Book Cuts

Phil Gersdorf Has Ideas About Press Book Stunts

PHIL GERSDORF, who for the past five months has been doing publicity for the Lynch theatres in Jacksonville, has some real ideas. It is fashionable to curse out the press book stuff and tell how utterly useless it is. Gersdorf is not a member of that club. The big house in Jacksonville is the Arcade, with 1,700 seats, and the feature runs a seven day week. As the town has a white population of only 60,000 and there are a number of houses, it takes hustle to get them in in sufficient numbers to make a week run pay.

Of course, the population of the town is in excess of 100,000, but the remainder of the census is colored and down south the whites and blacks do not patronize the same houses, so only the white population counts. When he first went down there Mr. Gersdorf used the four page color section employed by his predecessor, getting a full four pages all for the house, as was shown some time ago in this department.

But the publisher of the Times-Union had never read the fable of the goose that laid the golden eggs. Each time a section was used, the price was increased slightly and when the paper went from a seven to an eight column size, with an advance in the space rate as well, the house gave up the idea of the special section. Now Mr. Gersdorf uses a full page for his Sunday display and if he can cheat a little and make it only seven columns wide and not quite a full page deep, he saves a little extra money that way without sacrificing any of the display for a near full-page will give the effect of a full page about nine times out of ten, and the tenth time the full page is used.

He wanted a full page for Fairbanks and the press book did not include a full page design, but that did not worry Gersdorf. He got his full page just the same, only it was not quite a full. It makes a good showing and has all of the selling value of a full while it is not billed at the full page price. And there was no bill for art work on the display, either. Mr. Gersdorf went through the press book and found a three column mat which would do very well except for its size and the fact that there was an ugly panel at the top for the house announcement. It was not a particularly good example of helpful cut work, but it suited his purpose. He marked off the useless panel at the top, had the lower bank mortised to let in his own story and he had as good a display as though he had paid an artist for a special design. If you will compare the press book design with the full page you can see just how it was worked.

The Press Book Design from Which the Page Was Made.

In the reproduction the reduction of both cuts gives them equal value and the contrast does not show up as well, but the full-page really looks better than the original, for the lines are enlarged to proportion and give a bold effect which adds to the strength of the drawing. A number of other spaces are sent, which show equally good work on copy, and it is copy which counts on any advertisement. Reliance is not placed wholly on the newspaper spaces.

Hobart Bosworth in "Behind the Door" is advertised with a folder, the front showing a door with "What is behind the door?" This portion of the page is cut to give upon the third page on which is printed the advertisement of the film. The pages are stapled together to force the reader to "open" the door in order to arrive at the mystery. A card throwaway for "The Lottery Man" carries in large letters "Save this ticket," adding that it entitles the holder to purchase seats for the Arcade.

It is a mild sort of sting, but not enough of a sting to have a bad effect, and the legend will insure a more careful reading of the card. Another card plays up Houdini's thousand dollar challenge and is backed by selling talk for the film. Mr. Gersdorf started with Terry Ramsaye at the Rialto and went to Jacksonville by way of Detroit and the Majestic. He seems to be a comer.

H. A. Albright Employs Pen and Type Together

Here are two displays from H. A. Albright, of the American, Butt. Mr. Albright in speaking of the Harold Lloyd space writes: "You may think I was shooting over my head, but I am figuring on future business from Lloyd."

Two Four Fifteens from H. A. Albright.

We would have felt disappointed in Mr. Albright had he not played up Lloyd. Advertising is primarily to fill the house with the current show, but advertising which stops there is incomplete. Mr. Albright knows that he will have a series of Lloyd comedies. He knows that by making a big splash on the first one, he can keep on doing a big business with smaller spaces later on. He knows that the money spent is an investment against the future. He knows that it will pay better to feature Lloyd in his new series than to waste the major portion of the space upon a star already widely advertised and who should bring in the money on past performances if she will bring in any money at all.

Mr. Albright goes further and booms the house. He takes a line to tell that the American is the only house showing first run Paramount pictures. He takes another to tell that the American has the only Wurlitzer organ in town. He does not say the others are entirely without merit, but merely makes the inference. All of this helps the house. And note that although Mr. Albright is his own artist, he does not, on that account, figure that the drawn design is the only thing that will advertise. He is an advertising manager as well as an artist and he plans his spaces to get the greatest legibility with type. He knows how to combine art work and type to get the fullest and best effect.

It is something very few have mastered. The only thing we do not like about the space is the "Now going on" in the top of the panel. It is a slightly awkward phrase and applies more to sales than to shows. "Now showing" would be better, or "Showing today," or any similar phrase which suggests exhibition. We like better the "Tonight, tomorrow, Monday, Tuesday" in the other display. This is more definite and covers the ground more fully. For a last day alone "Last showings" would be better.

How to Combine Cut and Type in Display

Grauman's Model Displays

It is becoming almost a mark of incompetence to use a full drawn design in a large space. The leaders among the big advertisers are all turning to type to get the message over, just as S. Barret McCormick has done ever since he started. Here is an exceptionally good display from Grauman's, Los Angeles, where they have mastered the trick to perfection and turn out a combination of type and drawn design that is as good as any sent in. You cannot get away from the title, but if you want the message, there it is in type, easily read and clearly displayed.

A Pretty Example of a Combination Ad.

We are using a lot of the Grauman stuff because these spaces are good models to study. It is not saving money to have the entire ad lettered out to avoid the cost of notching. The space costs money and if you can put it to better use at a small cost for nothching or mortising, the money is well spent, since you get so much more in return for your space in the legible type faces. Old traditions die hard. It took nearly five years to persuade managers that Old English was not the most desirable face for card announcements, but today you seldom see that obsolete face. Perhaps in time we shall have no more all hand lettered species. May that day come soon!

Pictorial Full Page Is a Fort Wayne Attractor

LARGELY pictorial was the campaign of the Jefferson, Fort Wayne, Ind., to get over "Blind Husbands." This picture appeals to the class who are more surely appealed to through the eye, and the use of this Sunday page started a campaign in which the succeeding advertisements, each a two tens, picked up a single one of the incidents to elaborate upon. The smaller cuts were press book material and the full page was apparently redrawn from these illustrations. It makes a good form of display for a sensation picture in that it tells the high lights plainly and simply. This play is above the class sold purely on pictorial appeal. It can be sold with all types, but it can best be sold to type and picture readers through the arrangement used here, the pictures appealing to the melodrama lovers and the text to those who seek a mind appeal.

Too few exhibitors realize this matter of medium. They do not know that some pictures are better advertised on the bill boards than in the newspapers. They do not know that with others poster advertising is largely a loss. They do not realize that the cheap crowd can best be brought in with paper and the more intelligent with type argument, and if they have gone this far they do not understand that some pictures need to be advertised by every means at command. What to do and how to do it is a nice science and not mere guesswork.

Half Pages Common for the Saginaw Franklin

BECAUSE he did good business, H. W. Irons very naturally thinks that his advertising gets over. It requires no Sherlock Holmes to make such a deduction, but we don't blame Mr. Irons for being proud of his work. He has an advantage in that most of his Sunday spaces are cross pages close to halves. He has plenty of room to work in, so he escapes one handicap, yet on the other hand he is under the necessity for filling these big spaces, and a lot of advertisers would stuff a half page so full of space that the ink supply would give out.

Mr. Irons has the right idea and he keeps his spaces open and pleasant to look upon. He does not seem to have to worry about space bills. He used the steps idea for Olive Thomas in "Upstairs and Down" and he took about 28 additional inches in which to build the steps, for this space rose fourteen inches across the page. This display for "A Virtuous Vamp" is all press book stuff and Mr. Irons claims credit only for the layout, but we think he has obtained an unusually good effect from stock material. More original in his twelves for "When the Clouds Roll By." On the left he uses a line of personal recommendation and on the right he tells about the play. He gets the double effect of house guarantee and the selling pull of the story. He tells them it is good and what it is all about.

Outside of taking the film on a house to house canvass we do not see what more he needs to do. Mr. Irons is a bit extravagant in the use of his space, but if you can afford to take large spaces it carries a distinct moral effect, and a half page is almost as good as a full in this respect.

Art Work in a Press Booklet

The press book gotten out by the W. H. Productions for "The Lost Battalion" is an unusually sightly publication. It is printed in blue on white stock with red ornamentation, to get the national colors, and it is not only a pretty issue, but it offers some good exploitation suggestions as well, which is not always the case where a majority of the effort is put into the art work. Here the art work is made to carry the advertisement, which is a departure from the usual order.

Watch for Coal Carts on This Stunt

Press Stunt Wrecked Coal Supply and Mob Wrecked the Press Stunt

BEFORE you work a press stunt, be careful to consider its effect upon the coal supply. R. S. Ballantyne, of the Moon, Omaha, had a fine idea for a press stunt, but he is threatened with a suit for a ton and a half of coal and knows he must pay for a smashed wagon; but still he smiles. The stunt cleaned up, and if that coal truck had not crossed his path in the dark of the moon all might have been well.

He wanted to launch "When the Clouds Roll By" and felt that a Fairbanks picture needed appropriate jazz, so he proceeded to jazz. He hired a truck which he decorated with cut-outs and banners. Attached by strings to the truck were about a thousand inflated gas balloons, each with a cloth-paper tag good for admission to any matinee other than Saturday and Sunday. Aboard the truck were gas tanks, another thousand tagged balloons and six musicians. Behind the truck was a rabble of small boys, each chartered at the cost of one ticket to carry sandwich signs.

Good Until the Coal Came.

The idea was that as the truck rolled down the street the musicians were to make a more or less melodious noise while the balloon men inflated the tiny gas bags and turned them loose. Then the populace was supposed to chase the balloons until they came back to earth and rescue the ticket.

All would have gone well had not the truck happened to pass a two ton coal wagon. Just as one of the aerial argonauts floated off the truck a small boy snatched a lump of coal and hit the gas bag with deadly aim. The balloon promptly came to earth. The small boy did not get the ticket it carried, but he did get some more coal and so did a few hundred other kids. By the time the truck was a block away every kid in Omaha was on its trail with his pockets filled with coal, and every time a balloon rose it was a target for half a hundred sharpshooters. A coal driver was bewailing a loss of a ton and a half of coal while lumps of coal, poorly aimed, showered upon the show truck and made the workers wish for tin hats.

Worse Than the Trenches.

The men on the truck decided that the war was over and they were not expected to keep up hostilities without proper bomb-proof shelter, so they checked the coal shrapnell by the simple expedient of sending up no more balloons.

Thereupon the kids went over the top. If no balloons went up, they were willing to go after the balloons. They swarmed aboard the truck and did not wait for the toys to be inflated. They took them as they were and the truck made record time back to the theatre where what was left of the balloon flotilla was sent up from the balcony over the entrance with each supporting post guarded by a husky with a stout club.

These got a fair start for there was no more coal in sight, and they floated all over the city, carrying their freight of passes, and served to advertise the stunt as originally intended. They were supposed to stay up for five hours and many of them escaped far beyond the city limits.

Each ticket was printed up "A tip from the clouds. 'Wait 'til the Clouds Roll By.' Good for one admission to any matinee except Saturday or Sunday. Moon or Muse."

Cost Little, Brought Much.

The cost of the stunt, apart from the tickets, was about $60 and Mr. Ballantine got more than that in the space he won for the miscarriage of the idea. The story as it broke was far beyond his fondest hopes, and got the whole town laughing—except the owner of the coal. The original stunt was a good idea, but the unexpected denouement was a ten times winner.

Another good idea was a jumping jack figure of Fairbanks so arranged that it seemed to climb up and down a chain suspended from the huge moon which serves as the sign for the house. Two small boys who were told that their free tickets would not be good if the figure did not keep busy, supplied the motive power more cheaply than an electric motor. A simple eccentric movement gave motion to the arms and legs.

Made a Disappointment Bring a Large Profit

MAKING an extra profit out of a disappointment was a simple stunt for the Walnut, Cincinnati, when the censors refused to pass the attraction they had booked for a week.

It was late Friday afternoon when word was received that the feature had not been passed. The picture was advertised to open Sunday. The First National Exchange was notified to send any good print not working, and Saturday afternoon word was received that Constance Talmadge in "A Virtuous Vamp" was being sent.

It was too late to change the Sunday ads and the Saturday papers were already off the press. The lobby was changed and on the screen a slide was run reading: "In order to keep faith with our patrons we have gone to heavy expense to provide you with a stellar attraction in place of the one we expected to have. We have not had time to notify the public that it is here. Will you please tell your friends your candid opinion of this picture."

Evidently many did, for the house played to overflows, and a lobby sign was sprung "If you can't get inside this week, don't feel disappointed, we have another First National attraction next week." This was repeated in the daily advertisement with the addition of the title—Mary Pickford in "Heart o' the Hills."

It all seems very simple, but it took thought to make money out of a disappointment.

Couldn't Keep His Keys But—

THIRTEEN of the sixteen Omaha houses which run serials booked "The Adventures of Ruth," the 'athe-Ruth Roland serial, and it seemed to be up to William Prosser, of the Muse, to do something if he wanted to make business. He worked the "lost key" stunt to the extent of 150 keys and got 76 back the first day, promptly "losing" them again. The first episode was in for three days and the keys were worn smooth through repeated findings.

Pathe Dempsey Poster Is Going to Sell Tickets

PATHE specializes on pictorial displays, especially for serials, but the 24-sheet put out for the new Jack Dempsey serial is good even for Pathe and should prove a ticket seller. It is strong in drawing and color and will attract attention as far as it can be seen. It will be widely posted by the Pathe Exchange and should prove the best selling poster they have brought out.

United Artists Revives an Old Idea With New and Useful Improvements

REVIVING an idea originally employed by another company two or three years ago, the United Artists Corporation is issuing a press sheet which gives both mats and cuts for the small town exhibitor and some artists' drawings for those who prefer to make their own layouts. Formerly these were issued on a sheet of photographic paper, which accounts in part for the lack of success, since it is not easy to handle the photographic print in the mails on the drawing board. The United issues these drawings as a part of the regular press sheet and not as a supplement. They can be cut and pasted without fear of spoiling the gloss or cockling the print.

In the layout for "Pollyanna," for example, there is a large head of Miss

An Original Drawing for "Pollyanna," About Seven by Eleven Inches.

Pickford with an ornamental lettering below. This can be used entire, or the head or the lettering alone may be worked in connection with some other sketch. There are two legends carrying the star's name and one with the title, so that a choice is afforded. Where an entire layout is given, with a mortise, a table shows the depth in various column widths.

How It Works.

Take, for instance, the front page drawing, which shows Miss Pickford's head with the legend below. The original is seven and a half inches wide. Being drawn to proper scale, the lines will coarsen if enlarged and reduce if a smaller size is indicated. Whether the cut goes up or down, the lines are still properly proportioned to the size of the drawing. A single column reduction will give a close effect, but an enlargement will still further emphasize the bold open drawing. Of course, the reproduction will close in, but the original is a clean piece of drawing.

In a Newspaper.

This same drawing was used as the foundation of a display in Boston. Here the Boston idea of black splotches threw out the lettered name. The cut was pasted on to a card and a new design drawn below for the display. Two little birds were also added to further break the white space—for Boston shudders at the bare idea of an uninked surface.

The Same Cut of Miss Pickford Made the Foundation of a Single Column newspaper Display.

This reduced the art work of the Boston house to straight lettering, and considerably cut down the bill, while enhancing the effect. It shows a practical utilization of the idea. It works better where a larger space is used, but it is practical for a single column.

A more novel departure was using the same cut for a press book mat. Here a copy of the first design was pasted down. A second piece of paper was pasted over this, cut to give the window effect. Then the sash was drawn in, the background inked and the other details of the window added. With a little work, a second cut had been developed from the first. Many house managers already use the press book cuts for their own layouts, but they are hard put to it, at times, to get just what they want, since the large layouts are generally planned as a whole.

A Press Book Cut Using the Drawn Face as the Basis for an Entirely New Design.

The merit of the United scheme is merely that these displays are especially made for this use. You can get an entire head and not part of a head cut off by lettered text. Care is also taken to see that the sheets sent out are clean, that they may be utilized. They are on dead surface paper instead of coated stock, so can be worked in better, and are thin enough to lie on the sheet without scraping.

Not to Displace Cuts.

The idea is not to reduce the cut and mat service, for this is needed by a great majority of the exhibitors. The cuts and mats are still provided for the man who either cannot afford or has not the time to get local engraving done. This is purely a supplemental service, designed to assist the first run houses.

In most layouts prepared by exhibitors the figure work is apt to be weak. The artists can swing lettering and landscapes, but is weak on faces and figures. Here a single drawing is placed at the disposal of the local man in its most convenient form.

Used Eelephants to Boom His Goldwyn Pictures

ELEPHANTINE is the exploitation used by L. B. Remy, of the Goldwyn exchange at Dallas, Texas. For the past four months the two elephants with the Gentry Dog and Pony show owned by Ben Austin and Jake Newman, friends of Mr. Remy, have been doing their parades with blankets lettered with an advertisement for Goldwyn pictures. The message has been carried all over the route of the show in Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma. As the show makes even the small towns where general publicity is not apt to penetrate, the exploitation has been worth while. This seems to be the first instance of a tent show helping the local picture houses.

Thirty-six People Failed to See "The Hoodlum" in Trescott's Town

INTENSIVE advertising" is a phrase much overworked, but when a manager can play to an even 800 people in a town of 836, "intensive" is the very word to be used. I. H. Trescott, of the Pictureland, Livonia, N. Y., is the man to hang up this record and what he intended to be a kindly deed proved that a good intention, like virtue, carries its own reward.

Mr. Trescott saw Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum" in Buffalo. He was keen for it, but when the First National Exchange told him the price he felt a little shaky. He wanted it, but it would take 600 admissions to put him in the clear and he figured that he would have to cut the corners pretty close. Then he saw the picture again and booked it. He was willing to stand a loss if necessary to give his patrons a treat. An 800 town cannot support many big shows, but the town had been nice to Mr. Trescott and he was willing to reciprocate. He booked it for two days.

Tilling the Soil.

Then he went home and got busy. He was willing to take a loss if he had to, but he was not going to have to if he could help it. He was willing to go to the mat with Lady Luck, but he wanted to have a good grip when the clinch came.

He got out a throwaway telling about the film. Then he added his personal endorsement and dropped a remark that those who could not come the first night could make it the second day. He figured that Daddy might have to stay home with the baby while Mother came and get his turn the next night.

Then he put fifteen boys out with instructions to see that one of his circulars was placed into the hands of every householder in Livonia. He told the boys to ring the doorbell and wait until someone came and then hand in the bill with the remark "It's the biggest picture that was ever shown in Livonia." When the kids reported back he questioned them as to what the people said and made certain his instructions were carried out.

He worked other stunts with paper and lobby display and then he waited.

The first night 388 persons paid admission for the two showings. That looked like better than his necessary 600 on the two days, but the second day they got busy talking and 412 people planked their money down on the box office shelf, and Mr. Trescott put on the smile that was deservedly his.

Loud Speaking Telephone Works Big for Ballyhoo

NEW YORK fakirs are using a loud speaking telephone to attract attention to their store "pitches." The same thing can be made to work for picture houses and would prove infinitely effective for a short time. Any telephone company can put up an instrument. This can be placed in the lobby on traveled streets, with a concealed speaker to do the lecture. If the phone is concealed behind a gauze screen, the source of the voice makes the stunt a real mystery.

Where the house is off the traveled line the same idea can be used in some vacant store window "downtown," or a hook-up can be arranged with any large store, the lecturer dividing his announcements between the theatre and the store. The installation requires little preparation, and if it can sell "slum" on New York's busiest thoroughfares, it can sell tickets anywhere between the two oceans.

Atlanta House Attracts with Animated Lithos

REALIZING that action tremendously multiplies the drawing power of an advertisement, J. Greene MacKenzie, of The Picture House, Atlanta, Ga., does wonders with a small motor and simple mechanism.

One animated poster which attracted much attention for "Daddy Long-Legs," the First National Pickford attraction, was made from the fishing three sheets. A cut-out was made with loose arms, and a real fishing rod was fastened to the hands. An idler lever attached to the arms ran on a cam which was notched to give a jerking motion suggestive of a bite, then a smooth surface raised the pole and permitted it to be lowered again into the water, which was represented by a small goldfish globe in which a weighted celluloid boy doll stood upright as the game. Another display showed the star at the blackboard, a more simple eccentric giving the motion of writing. Between the cam and the eccentric almost any simple action may be imitated and these vivified figures work wonders in store windows.

Attractive Wagon Is Used for Novelty Street Display

IF it's worth while to use a perambulator advertisement, it's worth while to have the best is the theory of the management of the Park Theatre, Boston, the home of the Paramount-Artcraft Super-Specials. Parading the streets of the Bean City heralding the attractions at the Park Theatre is an old-time circus parade wagon. That is, it may have been old-time once, but now it is spic and span with red and blue paint and glistening with gold decorations, reminiscent of its palmy days with the "greatest show on earth."

In place of using paper or cloth signs; which are never able to stand hard weather, the Park management has the wagon panels painted on oil cloth. If there happens to be a one-sheet litho which may be used as a cut-out, this is carefully pasted on the oil cloth. The entire sign is then given a coat of varnish, which protects it from the rain, snow and mud. Each morning the entire wagon is carefully cleaned by the driver with a damp cloth. A number of theatre perambulators which tour the streets of Boston present a sorry sight from contact with the weather, but this cannot be said of the Park Theatre advertisement. Sleigh bells on the harness help call attention to the display, so unless one is deaf and blind they cannot fail to note "what's what" at the Park Theatre.

It's easy to advertise. Have something to say and then say it so it can be read.

If You Don't Like Your Lobby, Change It

Publisher's Tie-Up for "Her Elephant Man"

WITH the completion of "Her Elephant Man," the screen version of Pearl Doles Bell's circus story in which Shirley Mason makes her debut as a Fox star, the exploitation mechanism has started with a will.

In addition to the attractive press-sheet, the lithograph stock and the paper designed by men who know the circus and circus billing, Robert M. McBride & Co., who published the book, are arranging with Fox Film Corporation to tie-up with the film producer on the release of the picture.

In every first-run city McBride & Co. plan to bring before the booklovers a big drive on "Her Elephant Man" through the medium of leading book stores and department stores.

Attractive window cards and one-sheets will be used by this combination of film producer and book publisher, and a new edition of "Her Elephant Man" is now en route to many cities.

Lobby All Dressed Up to Advertise "Jubilo"

BUILDING a shack over the lobby was an idea which put "Jubilo" over big at the Colonial, Seattle. The cut gives the details of the exit side of the lobby, the door being back of that portion where the figure is leaning against the bush. The effect of the display was better than the photograph suggests, for a flashlight cannot do justice to perspective and coloring. The false lobby seems to be getting more popular lately, perhaps a return to the days when the entire lobby was masked in by one and three sheets. It is effective if done only occasionally, but care must be taken to comply with the fire laws or there are apt to be violations recorded against the house. The better plan is to center attention on the box office and let the rest of the lobby remain as it is. An oddly dressed box office will often sell many additional tickets. The suggestion of extra effort carries with it the suggestion of a specially good film offering.

This Is a Winner for Snow-Bound Attraction

BUS lines over routes where transportation is not of the best, and by means of bob-sledges has proved to be a profitable sort of exploitation for a motion picture theatre by Manager A. April, of the Rex Theatre at Genesco, N. Y. Mr. April broke all house records at the Rex with this idea, even after deducting the costs of the eleven sledges used for the purpose.

He advertised the innovation as a series of sleigh rides in conjunction with a showing of the "most pleasing picture ever produced." He employed newspaper space to make the announcement of what routes the "bobs" would run and the approximate time they would pass certain corners. There was five feet of snow on the ground and sleigh riding was at its height. On the opening night Mr. April had his "bobs" out early, the horses on each carrying many deep toned bells, sufficient to attract attention even on streets which were crowded with the snow vehicles. On both sides of each bob were painted banners, reading:

"Hop aboard. We're bound for the Rex Theatre to see Mary Pickford in 'Daddy Long Legs,' the most pleasing picture ever produced."

He raised prices for the run of the picture, so that his top was fifty cents, yet he was unable to accommodate the crowds the "bobs" brought in, in addition to the patronage which his newspaper advertising had brought him. The popularity of the sleigh rides, however, had convinced Mr. April that he can crowd his theatre at any time by employing them again when he books a special attraction when the locality is snowbound.

"The Westerners" Still Strong When Exploited

Benjamin B. Hampton's "The Westerners" took Minneapolis by storm again last week. Long before its presentation Minneapolis folk were regaled with the thrilling and entertaining powers of the Stewart Edward White story in newspaper teaser advertising and through other publicity mediums.

With the aid of Phil Reisman, Hodkinson manager at Minneapolis, tie-ups were arranged with three of the largest department stores in the Northwest. The show windows used by the book departments of Donaldson's, Dayton's and Powers' department stores were the choicest on the avenue. Mr. White's popularity as an author was evidenced by the large number of sales during the campaign, and the popularity of the production was attested by Manager Rosen's statement that it shattered all records for receipts in the history of the house, including the days when the Unique was the most popular vaudeville theatre in Minneapolis.

Mr. Rosen, who arranged the displays in the department stores, devised a gorgeous and attractive, "front of the house" show on "The Westerners." The Unique lobby was decorated with specially made cut-outs from a score of powerful scene stills. In the centre Mr. Rosen had a brilliantly illumined portrait of Steward Edward White and surrounding it were large pictures of Roy Stewart, Mildred Manning, Wilfred Lucas, Robert McKim and Frankie Lee, the boy star. The youngster was given special mention in all Unique advertising with the result that many of the weekday afternoon performances and the Saturday matinee were attended by hundreds of school children.

Specially devised heralds of the Hodkinson release had a hand in attracting a record attendance. These accompanied a circular letter describing the Black Hills of Dakota, where the story is laid, and the rush for gold that inspired it.

How a Stage Hook-Up Helped Screen a Play

BENJAMIN CAPLON, Goldwyn's publicity man in Washington, fell upon easy lines when "Jubilo," with Will Rogers, was launched in Washington. The song Jubilo is used in the musical comedy, "She's a Good Fellow," which was shown in Washington coincidentally with the first screen showing, and a big hook up for the theatre and screen was arranged in the window of the largest music store. The phonograph record was also used to the limit and Mr. Caplon was "in soft."

The World's Classified advertising is a quick and low priced means to business end. Buy, sell or exchange something? That's an effective method, as hundreds can testify.

Look Below for an Old-fashioned Front

Street of Many Colors Forms the Detroit Great White Way

DETROIT has a street unique in the history of showmanship in Monroe avenue, which leads in a few short blocks from the heart of the business district to those rookeries where dwell the manual workers in the great automobile works. Locally the quarter is known as "Little Italy," but the squalid sector houses a score of nationalities from the slums of Europe.

Here showmanship, as it is generally understood, does not hold good in its principles. Many, if not most, of these men and women speak little or no English. To them the appeal of the best in pictures is wholly lost. They want only two classes of entertainment, the comedy and the vivid melodrama, and they select their entertainment from the posters since they cannot read the legends.

The man who would sell entertainment on Monroe avenue must offer lights and color. He cannot offer features. As a rule the house with the brightest lights or the gaudiest pictures gets the night's business, the overflow going to the house having the next best display, and so until the pleasure seekers have been accommodated.

About the Limit.

No one understands this angle better than L. H. Gardner, of the Royal, a Kunsky house in the very heart of the district. He also manages the Liberty and Garden theatres, but the Royal is the one which keeps him thinking and thinking hard.

Recently he ran Chaplin's "A Day's Pleasure" for a four-day stay, and he knew that the name of Chaplin was magic to this territory, for they all know him. The only problem was to give him the fullest publicity. How it was done the cut will show. The front of the house was masked in with a false structure splashed with the most vivid red and the most angry yellow the paint manufacturers could supply. Those were the only colors used, but they were used in profusion.

The name of the star, the title of the play and an attempt at talk were added as a concession to convention, but the cut-out portraits were what Mr. Gardner depended upon to sell the picture—and they did. The front barely allowed ingress, and the box office was plastered with stills until they had to cut a window for the ticket sale. It was all grotesque and wretchedly inartistic, it was what was needed, for Mr. Gardner has made a study of the exploitation.

Different from Others.

"The show business on Monroe avenue is different from that in any other section of the country," he said. "It is true that we are only a few short steps from Woodward avenue and the high class first run theatres, yet our street is in many ways like a small town. We have the same class of people all the time. Their wants are always the same, but they don't know what they want. We have to tell them and we have to use fancy colors and designs and simple words to do it.

"The average amusement seeker on Monroe avenue would pass up the greatest picture of the day if the theatre showing it didn't use a fancy display to attract his eye. The simpler the announcement the better, providing the paint brush has been wielded heavily and colorfully.

"Charlie Chaplin is the best known actor by far with my clientele. Many of the foreigners, just over, have seen him on their own screens. If they can't pronounce his name in English they recognize him and they will describe him for you by pointing to their trousers or their shoes.

They Know 'Shar-los.'

"Recently while I was superintending the placing of a new front at the Royale, I noticed a half dozen Bulgarians in their quaint attire, gazing at the signs. One of them asked me, in broken English, when they could see 'the funny man.'

"I was unable to gather just who they meant and after naming over all the comedians that I knew, including Chaplin, I went inside and returned with a bunch of pictures. They immediately picked out a still of Chaplin, with his cane, baggy trousers and long shoes.

"'Shar-los, Shar-los,' they cried, and when I explained with some difficulty that they could see him at the Royal shortly, they shuffled happily on their way."

According to Mr. Gardner, the fronts cost him little, but keep him busy with an artist most the time designing new eye knockouts in advance of his play dates.

Even if Unable to Read

You would have no trouble in guessing what this Detroit house offered Chaplin. That's the big idea.

Two Big Publicity Ideas for New Roland Serial

HERBERT JENNINGS, of Allen's Danforth theatre, Toronto, launched the new Pathe—Ruth Roland Serial, "The Adventures of Ruth," by means of a teaser campaign. Dead black stock, lettered in white, asked when Ruth would be there, ringing the changes on the phrase. Local stores were hooked up with such lines as "Ruth Likes Blank's Chocolates" and similar endorsements. A contest was also inaugurated and by the time she arrived on the screen Ruth was better known than any other woman in Toronto.

One good stunt was a slide reading "If there's a plumber in the theatre who can tell us—." This was hand lettered to suggest an emergency slide asking for real information. It was followed by "When Ruth will be here." It got a laugh and helped along the mystery.

Harry Pomeroy of the Strand, took a different angle. Defying the hoodoo idea he plastered his house inside and out with huge thirteens in red on white. By refusing to give any particulars, he had excitement raised to fever heat.

Local Angle Won as Usual

PLAYING up the appeal to local pride made good business for the Broadway Theatre, Brooklyn, when they ran J. Stuart Blackton's "The Other Man's Wife." Robert Gordon and Sylvia Bremmer were the stars, but the Broadway made Warren Chandler its feature because he is a native of that annex to the real New York. It got more money for the feature through this appeal t local pride than would have come to the box office through the usual exploitation. They played to more than 7,000 persons in a one day run.

Projection Department

By F. H. RICHARDSON

New Type Portable Projector

At the request of the Educational Films Corporation of America, the editor recently examined their Rotary Portable Projector, the name being derived from the rotary intermittent movement. This machine, which is designed to perform the usual service of the home or portable projector, is enclosed in a leather covered case of convenient suitcase dimensions.

The interior of the case is divided into four sections, namely, the lamp, mechanism, motor and film compartments, each of which is lined with asbestos, with a metal lining placed over the asbestos. This machine, in its general construction, follows closely along the lines of other similar projectors, but when we examine the mechanism, a very radical difference is discovered.

The mechanism frame and some of its parts are composed of the new maglanite, which has all the properties of aluminum, plus added strength. The intermittent movement is a modified type of the beater movement, composed of a single finely balanced metal part, somewhat in the shape of an artist's palette board.

This part revolves, and in so doing acts upon the film between the aperture and the controlling sprocket, pulling the film down exactly one frame at each revolution. The film remains in constant contact with this "beater."

Framing is accomplished by means of a movable part, attached to what appears to be a rotating idler, over which the film slides. The rotation of the part through perhaps 25 degrees of a circle, bends the film or presses it inward, thus shortening the distance between the controlling sprocket and the aperture, and pulling the film down through any portion of one frame.

All That Could Be Desired.

The gate and tension springs are all that could be desired, even to a very simple method of adjusting the tension. The condenser is composed of two plano convex lenses, about three inches in diameter.

The film is carried on two reels, viz., the feeding and the take-up reel, located in a single compartment, immediately below the mechanism. The motor, which has a speed control rheostat, is hinged to the bottom of the case, its weight being carried by the drive belt.

This has the advantage of supplying exactly the amount of tension required to drive the machine, without unduly loading the motor or wearing the bearings. The take-up is of the friction type used in standard professional projectors. The machine is equipped with a crank for hand-drive when desired.

Taken as a whole, the Rotary Portable Projector seems to be a very practical machine, in excellent form for portable purposes. I cannot, of course, give an authoritative opinion as to the action of the form of intermittent employed, because it is something entirely new, but I did see a picture projected which was rock-steady; also there was no evidence of chromatic aberation due to filament focusing at the screen.

I see no reason to believe that the form of intermittent employed would be anything else than as easy, or even easier on the film than the standard intermittent, except the possibility of strain on splices.

In making that last remark, we have only in mind the effect that the old-type beater movement, which, while a splendid movement in itself, was very hard on splices. The inventors of the modification contained in the Rotary Portable Projector, however, claim, and with seemingly good reason, that this objection does not obtain by reason of the fact that the film movement is started slowly, comes up the speed and stops slowly. As to the justice of their claims in this respect, we are unable to say, but a little time will tell the story. It looks reasonable on the face of it.

Leading the Way

For years, this department and its editor has advocated the recognition of efficient, faithful service in the pay envelope. It has striven to impress the fact that the union scale was not a scale at all, but merely the minimum amount employers should pay, presumably to the least efficient employe.

At last the management of the Rialto and Rivoli, New York City, has announced that it will pay a weekly bonus above the union scale to projectionists who render satisfactory service. This is as it should be.

One of the men involved, in commenting on this action, argued that the pay plus the bonus would be no more than the men ought to receive in any event, and that bonus should only begin when the men were paid, as straight salary, the amount they should receive.

Poor Reasoning.

This is, in the opinion of the editor, very, very poor reasoning. It is the sort of reasoning which discourages exhibitors and managers from advancing their projectionists beyond the union scale.

We hope and believe that the man in question will, upon further consideration, conclude his position is not the right one.

Conceding the proposition that the projectionists in such houses should receive five dollars above the union scale, is not that, after all, exactly what the bonus amounts to because of the fact that the man who does not render satisfactory service and thus forfeits the bonus is not a man who ought to be continued in the service in any event.

Giving the Best.

This department desires to announce right here and now that, while it does not approve of boot-licking service (which is never good service), it does most emphatically approve of every man giving the best there is in him in return for whatever pay he consents to accept. We firmly believe in high pay in return for high class service. We therefore give to the proposition of the minimum wage scale plus a satisfactory bonus for high class service our unqualified approval.

It means that whatever is paid over and above the wage scale will go where it belongs—to those who have striven to earn it.

We stand with the man in question to the extent that very high class houses ought, as a matter of course, to pay something in advance of the minimum scale for their house, because they play to big money, with consequent heavier responsibilities to the men, but nevertheless it must not be forgotten that anything the management may do beyond the wage scale requirements represents voluntary action, and if they prefer to pay what the man in question claims they ought to pay anyhow, in the form of a bonus, there is and can be absolutely no legitimate objection on that score.

Should Show Appreciation.

We would like, in closing, to emphasize this one point: The management has offered a bonus which will raise the pay of all deserving men to fifty a week. It is to be paid to all men who give satisfactory service.

Unless the men show some degree of appreciation of the act of the management, it is not unlikely (this is merely our own opinion) that the same will be withdrawn after fair trial.

If the advance or bonus is found to be reflected in the service, thus justifying itself, it requires no stretch of imagination to presume that it will be continued, and even perhaps substantially increased as time goes on. It is also to be presumed that if the management of these theatres find the advance to justify itself, other managers of high class houses will follow suit, so that this beginning may mean big things in the end.

It's up to the men themselves.

Providence Projectionists Banquet

Local 223, Providence, Rhode Island, invited the editor to place his nether limbs under the eats supporter on the occasion of their eighth annual banquet, held in Grand Army Hall, Sunday evening, January 11. The occasion served as a welcome home for the returned service members of 223.

We would have liked to been there, for we have had experience of Providence projectionists' ability as entertainers, but it was impractical.

Hope the boys had a scrumptuous time and that there was Rhode Island chicken a-plenty—feathered kind, of course.

From the Canal Zone

From the land of connecting waters, heat and canal locks comes a letter which describes conditions as distinctly bad. Here are a few excerpts:

There is a license law but any one who can splice a film and thread a projector has no trouble getting license.

Projection is in the hands of men who are non-progressive and do not have sufficient interest in their business to study and improve. There is but one progressive in all the Zone. His name is Curl and he is projectionist at the Fort Thomas theatre.

I understand that Curl tried to organize a union, or club of Zone projectionists, but that the rest of the men take no interest at all in such progressive moves.

Well, we are glad to know there is one good man on the Zone anyhow—in projection, I mean, of course.

Perhaps it may be that he is the yeast which will eventually leaven the mass.

We have been told before that projection conditions in the Zone are very far from good, and that the men, as a whole, were non-progressive. Too bad!

From the Philippines

From Manila, Philippine Islands, comes an X in U. S. money with request that war posters be sent. The writer, who requests suppression of his name, then says:

Friend Richardson: You notice I call you "friend." Well, while it is true that I don't know you personally, still I have been in the business twelve years and during all that time have kept up with your writings, so I guess the "friend" is properly applied, especially when it is known that I am, or was, a projectionist.

At present I am showing a war picture in the Philippines, but will make China, Japan, Java, India, Egypt, the Mediterranean ports and on to New York City via London.

Expect to hit the Great White Way in about one year. If you want anything on the Orient just lemme know. How is the old motorcycle? Took a Filipino for a trip on my side car. He climbed out at the end and remarked, solemnly, in Spanish: "Never again!"

Must Have Hit the High Spots.

Which shows that Filipinos are bum judges in the matter of modes of transportation. Must have hit the high spots, huh?

Sure I want something on the Orient. Give us a short description of following in various places:

Size of theatres, decoration, ventilation. Kind and size of projection room. Size of picture. Kind of screens used. Projection equipment used. Voltage and kind of current. Wages of projectionist. Are there any license requirements for projectionist. Price of admission. Condition and kind of films.

You will understand that I don't want all this as applied to the individual theatre, but general conditions as applies to above points in cities or in countries. Just want to give a sort of line-up on general conditions.

You certainly will hustle some if you make the route you have mapped out and shake hands with yours truly in a year from now.

Good Words for the Handbook

The Howe Theatre Supply Company, Portland, Maine, orders a dozen handbooks and takes occasion to remark:

We are trying, in our small way, to spread the gospel of better projection through the state of Maine by pushing the handbook, of which a great many are already in use.

But in the interest of the industry there should be more because, while we have many fine men and very competent projectionists, Maine, like all other states, also has many who could improve immensely by study, and we propose to encourage this needed improvement all we can by spreading the handbook.

Thanks for Compliment.

First thanking the Howe Theatre Supply House for the implied compliment to the handbook, we would like to impress upon Maine projectionists these basic facts: No man can intelligently and efficiently handle anything which he does not thoroughly understand. The profession of projection has become so wide and so deep and includes necessary knowledge of so very many things that no man's life lasts long enough to learn them all without assistance. That man who wants increased pay but who makes no effort to study and fit himself to be worth even what he is already receiving, is not deserving of the increase. He is neither honest with himself, with the industry, with his employer or with his union—if he belongs to one.

A Practical Book.

The handbook is not a "fount of all knowledge," but it is a thoroughly practical book of practical projection knowledge for practical projectionists, as well as for apprentices. Many thousands handbooks been sold, and to date not one dissatisfied buyer has been recorded.

On the other hand, we have letters from hundreds upon hundreds of projectionists who express enthusiastic satisfaction with it, some even declaring they would not accept its weight in gold if another were not available—an extravagant statement, but indicating the esteem in which the work is held by those who have paid good money for it.

Every projectionist should have a handbook just as every professional man has the text books of his profession.

A 190 ? Lamphouse

From a small Pennsylvania town called Betula comes a letter signed Stanley Sherwood:

I have a handbook and have studied it thoroughly. From it I learn new things almost daily.

I also have the question booklets, but wish you would publish them in book form, with answers.

You doubtless never heard of this small town, and were you to visit our small theatre would probably condemn everything in sight, in so far as applies to equipment, although you would have to admit that we have a very good picture, notwithstanding the hand power Powers Five and 190? lamphouse.

But it is to the handbook that I owe the fact that the good picture is on the screen nevertheless. I see you are strong for the outside shutter, but my Power's Five has an insider and gives a flickerless picture, which is as plain six feet from its surface as at sixty feet away.

Hands Buffalo a Love Tap.

I visited several Buffalo theatres not long ago. They all had bad keystone effects, and some of the auditoriums were so profusely lighted, and the lighting was done with such poor judgment that the screen effects were utterly ruined.

All the pictures that I saw flickered more than mine, so I am still proud of our little show shop out here in small-town. The reason we have such antiquated equipment is that we just a bit more than break even each night (twice a week) that we run.

I subscribe to the World for the Projection Department, which I enjoy very much. Like the title "Projectionist" for such as deserve it, but for myself I don't —yet anyhow.

Will you tell me why wheels of moving vehicles often seem to revolve backward, what causes picture to jump four times to each turn of crank and what causes a steady jump?

Why Wheel Apparently Reverses.

The good brother winds up with some very complimentary remarks as to the editor, which we won't repeat here.

First as to your queries: The wheel appears to revolve backward because photographs of it are being taken at the rate of from sixteen to twenty per second, and if one picture taken is followed by another just when the wheel has revolved far enough to bring the spokes to exactly the same position (I say "same position," but really mean one position advanced), then the wheel will appear not to revolve at all but slide along the ground. If the spokes have just passed the former point when the next picture is taken, then the wheel will revolve in the right direction, but if they have not quite reached the former position the wheel will appear to revolve backward.

Do you get the idea. Four jumps to turn of crank indicates (A) dirt on one side of face of intermittent sprocket; (B) intermittent sprocket shaft not true; (C) intermittent sprocket not true; (D) intermittent movement not true. Constant jump may be due to many things.

If some films run without jump then fault is in film itself. If all films jump all the time, then fault is in machine, and may be dirt on intermittent sprocket face, worn intermittent movement, worn intermittent sprocket shaft bushings, weak tension springs, worn intermittent sprocket teeth or a combination of some or all of these things.

It Does Not Follow.

It does not follow that we would condemn your equipment. We make allowance for small town conditions and, always provided it be in good condition, one may get a very excellent result from a Powers Five, provided the illuminant be not too strong.

Flicker may result from many things, one of which is brilliant screen illumination. The outside shutter IS best—very much the best for several reasons.

The Buffalo theatres that you visited probably could not use the inside shutter at all with their amperage. It is, however, quite likely that Buffalo projectionist might, by intelligent work, eliminate flicker, always provided it were not due to their power source, which, unless motor generators are used, is 25 cycle.

We are glad, that, even though a small town man, you have love for and pride in your work. We suspect many Buffalo men would benefit by an injection of those two things.

Objective Diameter

The more the editor considers the matter the more firmly he is of the opinion that a standard diameter for projector objectives, with an iris for diaphraming down, offers the best solution for the diameter proposition.

Just what the diameter should be we are not prepared to say with certainty, but doubt the advisability of using anything over 2¼ inches for arc light projection.

State Your Views.

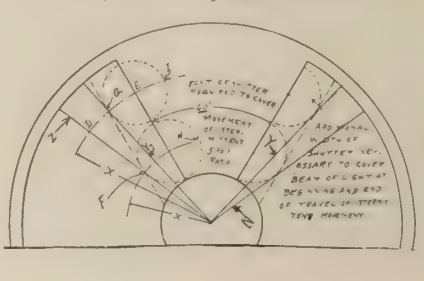
The objections of added cost and inability of some projectionists to use a diaphraming iris intelligently may be raised, but we do not believe the first ought to stand, and as to the second, if we are to hold up all improvements until all projectionists are able to handle them intelligently we are not apt to get ahead very fast.

We would like the views of projectionists and manufacturers as to this suggestion.

Boylan Even Tension Reel

The Boylan Even Tension Reel, which has been favorably mentioned in this department several times, is at last on the way to success. It has been purchased by one of the leading projector manufacturers, is being redesigned and will be put out by them, probably as a part of a new and radical departure in reels—a reel with practically unbendable sides, which is still very light in weight.

This reel, which is now in process of formation, looks very much better to us than anything ever before attempted in reels, and when we add the even tension feature, in improved form, it looks like a stem-winding winner.



Manuel Nosti Returns

Our old friend, Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Florida, is back in God's country again. He sends a postcard photo of himself in uniform, one look at which shows why Uncle Sam can put up such a scrap—his boys are regular fellers and look the part. Nosti says:

It has been a trifle more than two years since I last wrote you, but I have not forgotten either the Moving Picture World or the Father of Projection. It would be hard to do either.

I have recently returned from service in France—Uncle Sam's army, of course—and expect soon to again be shooting pictures at a Tampa screen.

I am enclosing four dollars for a handbook. Will certainly need it in order to catch up.

Glad you're back. Suppose you'll be full o' pep and energy. Good luck to you. My regards to all the Tampa men.

Very Well Put

W. Ernest Wood, Baltimore, Md., submitted the following very illustrative solution of the prize offer problem. Concerning the drawing he says:

The size of the over-laps of main blade of revolving shutter depends on diameter of light ray and distance from its center to center of shutter shaft, same being denoted by "X" in diagram.

This distance varies in different projectors. The greater "X" is the less the necessary blade width in degrees.

In order to design a shutter to fit any projector it will be necessary to draw a straight line (shown dotted in diagram) through outer edges of circle representing light ray.

As this line will not touch center of shutter it cannot be measured in degrees. Lines "Y" and "Z" show how these lines would be if carried to center of shutter. Obviously every change in X would alter angle of blade.

Diagram of Value.

Brother Wood's diagram is of value in that it visualizes the effect of increased distance from center of shutter shaft to center of the light beam. But the thing has puzzled the editor a bit. Assuming the light beam to be at the lower position and the intermittent to start acting when the blade reaches point H, at which time the beam would just be covered, what would be the effect were we to move the beam to the outer position shown?

The intermittent would then not begin to act until the blade edge had passed point I by a distance equal to D-G, assuming the blade edge Z to travel to the right as we view the diagram.

It seems, therefore that we might trim off shutter blade on that side equal to D-G and an equal amount off the other side. In other words, the two circles and lines Y-Z seem to represent the exact effect of additional rapidity of movement across a given diameter under the exaggerated condition shown.

At least that is the way it seems to me.

The Moving Picture World carries a message to exhibitors in small towns by the hundred where salesmen seldom, if ever, visit in their travels. It is to benefit this great prosperous exhibitor element that the World is compiled—as much to help the little fellow as to help the "first run" man in the larger cities.

Prizma Indian Group Is Ideal for Children Shows

AN idea that is being projected by the National Kindergarten Association may prove interesting to others seeking to solve the problem of the Children's Matinee. At the Hotel Plaza, New York City, they are giving a series of Saturday morning moving picture entertainment for the children, each of which covers one certain subject. For instance, on January 17 the American Indian had the floor. The Prizma natural color picture of the Blackfoot Indians called "Skyland" was first exhibited, followed by a brief talk which encompassed particularly facts and legends on which songs she sang were founded by Watahwaso, daughter of Chief Nicola of the Penobscot tribe. Her songs, "By the Water of Monnetonka," the "Blanket Song," and the "Cuckoo Song," were rendered with fine vocal effect and dramatic force.

"The Last of the Seminoles," showing the life and customs of the Indians of the Florida Everglades, led up to a remarkably interesting series of songs, dances and Indian folk-lore by Oskenonton and Chinquilla, son and daughter of Chief Lone Star, Cheyenne and Mohawk Indians.

To those unfamiliar with the Indian race in civilization, this demonstration of vocal and dramatic talent, the ability to tell the white man the story of the red man, in the language of the white, more polished than that used by the ordinary American, this occasion was a revelation.

"The Apache Trail," "Apache Indians at Home," and "Ruins of the Cliff Dwellers," were the last numbers on the program. An interesting fact in connection with the entertainment is that the children were attentive to the last, and even ventured in some cases to put questions to the Indian performers on points they did not quite understand.

Other subjects to be handled in the same way by the National Kindergarten Association are "Children of Many Lands," "The Great Outdoors" and "China, the Young Republic." These programs are being arranged with the co-operation of the National Motion Picture League.

Goldwyn Pictograph Has First Colored Cartoon

THE three subjects in the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph No. 7023, to be released February 8, are of unusual interest. For the first time in the history of motion pictures, exhibitors will receive an animated cartoon in colors, an innovation that marks an important step in the advancement of screen cartoons. Then there is a mycroscopic study of "Dew Fall," under the general title of "Marvels of the Universe," and finally one of the "Master Minds of America" series, having Gutzon Borglum as its subject.

As a nature study the screen has brought nothing more interesting and scientifically valuable than the mycroscopic analysis of dew and frost. It gives, with a clearness that no printed description could equal, a comprehension of the mysterious workings of nature in the formation of dew drops and the chemical processes that water undergoes in becoming frost. Some of the scenes in this picture were taken when the thermometer registered several degrees below zero. Subtitles are arranged to give continuity to the picture and unfold a whimsically interesting story.

The study of Gutzon Borglum is a fitting contribution to the Americanization propaganda on the screen advanced by Secretary Lane and other advocates of militant patriotism. Borglum is the type of American that the country welcomes as a great force for progress. Born in this country of Danish parents, he has become a sculptor of world renown, whose greatest work reflects the highest spirit and sentiment of the land.

Chester Cameraman in Land of Evil Pygmies

CHARLES COTTAR, big game hunter and explorer has reached the land of the pygmies in the heart of darkest Africa and is busily engaged in photographing these tiny people for the C. L. Chester Productions. Never before has the strange life of these jungle villages appeared on the screen.

It is less than fifty years since the Akka tribes, as they are called, were discovered. Famed in Greek mythology as the pygmies and known as the Lilliputians of Gulliver's travels they had long been considered the creation of imaginative writers until adventurous explorers, prowling about the forests in the Aruwimi district of the Congo Free State, found such human beings actually existed.

They are a negroid race with coffee-colored skin and hair. Their average height is less than four feet, though many are much smaller. Nomads of the forest, they hunt with poisoned arrows, pitfalls and traps. They gather ivory and honey and manufacture poison which they bring to market in exchange for cereals, tobacco and iron weapons. They are courageous hunters who do not hesitate to attack the largest elephants.

Their habits of life are curious. Round huts built of branches and leaves are their homes. Those who have seen them trailing wild game through the jungles report them possessed of an astounding agility, for they leap about in the tall grass like grasshoppers.

In the presence of strangers they are timid and retiring, but on the slightest provocation give way to wild bursts of treachery and malevolence..

Animated Report of Catholic War Work.

The first public presentation in this city of "American Catholics in War and Reconstruction," was presided over by "Seeing It Through" Means Heartache, But ZaSu Pitts Rises Above the Pain.

Glimpses of this Brentwood production, to be released as a Robertson-Cole Superior Picture.

Rev. Patrick J. Hayes, D. A., Archbishop of New York, when it was shown at the Cohan and Harris Theatre January 18. At the showing of this six-reel production prepared by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation under the supervision of the National Catholic War Council were members of the Catholic hierarchy, clergy and laity.

The evening marked an innovation in that for the first time it introduced the animated report to the members of any organization. The means taken to make a report of the vast sums contributed by individuals to the Catholic church's war work chest establishes a precedent, which was evidently highly acceptable to the audience of several thousands who watched every item of the expenditure of their contributions.

One of the most interesting parts deals with the services of 1,525 volunteer Catholic chaplains who served under the direction of Archbishop Hayes, who was camp bishop of the American naval and military forts in charge of the interests of the American Catholic service men. One reel, entitled "Over There and Back with the K. of C.," depicts the war work of that organization.

"Elklands" is Prizma Release.

"Elklands" is the title of the latest Prizma Natural Color picture, which is being released through the Republic Distributing Corporation.

This picture was taken in the Wyoming mountains in the valley of the Shoshone River, and combines the beauties of scenic grandeur with the thrill of the hunt. It takes one far back in the mountains, through canyons and past mountain torrents, to the home of the elk. There one sees large herds of elk as they are feeding at early dawn. Numerous scenes are shown of the rugged mountains, the thunderous cataracts and crevice-like canyons of the rivers flowing into the Shoshone.

Churches and Schools in Omaha Heavy Film Buyers

CHURCHES and schools, many of them paying more than theatres in the towns where they are located, are among the best patrons of the Fox Film Exchange in Omaha, Neb.," says Manager Sidney Meyer.

"We deal with them as regularly as with an exhibitor, and most of them pay more than would a theatre in a town of the same size," said Manager Meyer.

"The superintendent of schools in Beatrice, Nebraska, who is an official in the state teachers' association, runs a show once a week in the auditorium of his city. He was dissatisfied with the class of pictures shown by his local exhibitor, he said. He charges a nominal admission fee and pays us a guaranteed price and all above that which he takes in.

"At Grand Junction, Iowa, we sell a church regular service at $100 a picture. Many churches pay us that much.

"Besides our thirty regular customers, we have a list of about eighty with whom we deal occasionally. Nearly all of them have booked 'Evangeline.' At Schuyler, Neb., the schools were dismissed early to permit the children to attend a special matinee at which 'Evangeline' was shown.

"The standard of pictures demanded by these institutions is high. This is helping to put motion pictures in our states on a higher plane, I believe, as well as giving the highest aproval to our business. We are making every effort to encourage this kind of business. It does not hurt the local exhibitor—it merely makes a greater following for the motion picture in his town, that is all."

Educational Film Shows "Glory That Was Greece"

THE screen has become a medium through which the glory and grandeur of Greek architecture can be presented to the American public. Most fruitful in photographic results was the visit which representatives of the Minerva Theatre and Amusement Company, Inc., of Pittsburgh, paid Greece recently. The party traveled all over the country, visiting all the important historic and classic places and obtained many interesting and instructive pictures.

These views of ancient and modern Greece will serve to enlighten the American public regarding the little republic overseas. While many people have been told that "Hamlet" is a wonderful play because Shakespeare wrote it, do they also know that the Parthenon is a masterpiece because the Greeks built it? In fact, if the average person is questioned about the Parthenon, he usually shows that he knows very little about it.

The pictures taken show Greek architecture in the various stages of its development. There are novel pictures taken from the air, despite the difficulties of transportation in Asia Minor. Often it was necessary for the party to travel great distances on camels. The operator had to pose as an American in certain countries which are hostile toward the Greeks.

The movement has the approval and support of the Greek government. In the future it is intended to produce some of the old Greek plays, with the original settings used hundreds of years ago. These plays will be enacted by Greeks. The corporation will take about 7,000 feet of film monthly in Greece, and it is hoped that these educational pictures will be welcomed by the theatre-goers of this country.

Goldwyn Covers Salt Industry.

"Taken with a Grain of Salt" is the title of the Ford Educational Weekly No. 185, to be released by Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. It shows, with a completeness that is at once instructive and interesting, the manner in which salt is taken from the earth.

Workmen are seen descending in an elevator into the salt room excavations. the sides and tops of which are formed of salt. After holes have been drilled into the walls, sticks of dynamite are exploded and the great blocks of salt, which look like snow, are loosened. The next move is to shovel these blocks into waiting cars, which dump them into buckets, which, in turn, move to the big crusher, where the salt is pulverized. Screening is the mechanical process by which the coarse salt is separated from the fine. The coarser is put into large sacks, while the rest is still further refined and prepared for household use.

Some Things Worth Knowing

That according to the present outlook the non-theatrical end of the motion picture business is due for a boom in the near future. One equipment concern alone, the Interchurch Equipment Company, has on hand some six hundred inquiries for machines; and of these two hundred and sixty are from New York State. Recent installations made by this company are the Dutch Reform Church, Kerhonkson, N. Y., Ashokan Baptist Church, and the Maple Avenue Methodist Protestant Church, Stamford, Conn. The first two have Powers No. 6 and the last the Graphoscope.

That non-theatrical motion pictures are being utilized to good advantage by the Rev. Earle Wilfley, pastor of the Vermont Avenue Christain Church, Washington. Dr. Wilfley, who at one time was a Shakespearian player, is modern in his ideas and realizing that the motion picture film is the greatest medium of entertainment in this country, he has adopted it for church work. The subjects used cover a wide and interesting field, including studies on the Holy Land, tours in America and Europe, and industrial progress.

That the Exhibits and Moving Picture Bureau of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Ontario, has received a cabled request from Sir William Jury, London, England, to increase the number of prints of official Canadian Government scenic and educational releases from one to ten each. Additional profits of Government releases already sent to England are desired for distribution in the British Isles. It is intimated that the Canadian subjects, one of which is released every two weeks, have made a distinct hit in British theatres.

That the Prizma, Inc., have cameramen located in Indo-China, South Africa, and the Sahara Desert. One of the interesting products of the Chinese expedition is a picture called "The Coolie," which is now ready for release.

That the Boston Suffolk Law School is going to have a big new building and under a plan devised by Dean Gleason H. Archer is going to make moving pictures pay for it and create an endowment besides. The school auditorium in the new building will be fitted out to seat 1,500 persons and will be equipped as a high class moving picture theatre. The proceeds of the show will go toward paying off the indebtedness of the building. Dean Archer states that he has figured out that within seven years the building will have paid for itself with a surplus besides.

That the Capitol, the world's largest motion picture theatre, has booked Pathe News for its topical subject.

That "On the Borderland of Civilization," Martin Johnson's vivid screen pictures of the great South Seas, released in ten one-reel subjects by Robertson-Cole, have been so successful that many of the leading exhibitors in the country are now advertising them as features. In many sections of the country these films are being shown in schools and other educational institutions.

Sam Bullock Praises R. H. Clark for Attack on Advertising in Pictures

THE article by R. H. Clark, First National director, entitled 'Advertising in Films,' is the first direct article I have seen from anybody, besides the exhibitors' committee which has the matter in hand," writes Sam Bullock, secretary of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association, to Moving Picture World. "It is forceful and truthful. Not a statement contained therein can be refuted.

"For instance, when Mr. Clark intimates that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been 'filched' from the screen owners by producers of pictorial advertising, Mr. Clark really underestimates the amount. I should enjoy being questioned as to this and have the facts published as an eye-opener for exhibitors who have been systematically imposed upon and deliberately robbed.

"The big fellows, so-called, have been the biggest 'boobs' of all, because their screen have a real advertising value. Insert advertising when artistically camouflaged may be pardonable, but such inserts should at least net the screen owner something and his organization a percentage sufficient to finance it for aggressive and defensive work

"Insert Pirates."

"That was the idea with which we started four years ago, but for the past two years we have seen the necessity for action from a far more important standpoint—the danger of overloading our screens with advertising instead of entertainment. The insert pirates became so bold that regular advertising departments were instituted. They flooded the country with whole reels of straight 'ad' stuff, surrounded by a story plot, and rented them to the screen owner, who furnished the necessary publicity for the 'ad.' The advertiser is not to blame; the hoggish producer is the one who has killed the 'golden egg layer' of screen advertising, for the time being.

"There are some exhibitors, even now, who may accept charity from the producers whose actions are fully exposed, but they do not exhibit in cities and large towns. We have all the latter pretty well in hand and the wise advertiser knows it. Screen advertising men look to the big towns and cities first of all, so we are not in the least perturbed. We first established a 'No Man's Land' across western Pennsylvania, northern Ohio and Michigan, last July, to producers who had boldly ignored us.

"A Charity Offer."

"We then extended our trenches and consolidated our gains early in November. The producers then plotted to prevent us extending 'No Man's Land' by a charity offer to gullible exhibitors, and in their enthusiasm for 'organization' and their concern for 'non-member' exhibitors one would think that exhibitors were embarking en masse into screen advertising.

"The writer is pleased to see a man of R. H. Clark's caliber speak his mind so forcibly upon the subject. A very few others, of a different caliber, quite naturally O. K. the latest suddenly developed plan of a supposed organization chief."

The following telegram has been sent Henry Ford by Secretary Frank Rembusch, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc.:

"Protests are filed with the national organization of motion picture exhibitors against your charge for the use of Ford's Weekly. The importance, value and power of the screen is being recognized more each day. We are offered not only free rentals for showing industrial, propaganda and advertising films, but every exhibitor may now receive a nominal fee for showing these pictures.

Universal Agrees.

"The Universal company has agreed to our request and is now giving splendid industrial anl propaganda pictures free to exhibitors and pay each theatre a nominal fee for showing the pictures. We ask that you refrain from further charge for the Ford Weekly to any exhibitor and also that you pay a nominal amount to exery exhibitor who shows the Ford Weekly.

"We feel that this is very fair, and from the agitation now awakened on this question it will be very helpful to the Weekly for you to meet with our request and recommendation."

New Ownership Now Holds Exhibitors Trade Review

EXHIBITOR'S Trade Review and International Cinema Trade Review changed hands January 15, when Louis F. Blumenthal and Charles and Henry Haring retired from the company, selling their interests to A. B. Swetland, of New York City, with L. W. Boynton and Lesley Mason as his associates.

No financial or publication interests are behind the purchase of the publications, it was emphatically stated by Mr. Swetland after the conclusion of the deal. Exhibitor's Trade and the International will be owned and operated solely and exclusively by the three men who constitute the company.

"Les" Mason Retains Command.

A. B. Swetland becomes president of Exhibitor's Trade Review, Inc., as well as treasurer. L. W. Boynton assumes the duties of general manager, in addition to being a vice-president and assistant treasurer Lesley Mason, who has been successively managing editor, editor and managing publisher of the magazines since their foundation, will be editor-in-chief of both publications and a vice-president.

Mr. Swetland is one of the best known publishers in the trade magazine field, and Mr. Boynton's record in publication activities has been exceptional since he entered it. Mr. Mason has been identified with motion picture trade journalism for the past six years.

In the statement issued by the new owners it was declared that the purpose and policy of the Trade Review and International would not be changed. It is declared that there will be "no trammels or entangling alliances of any kind."

Exhibitor's Trade Review was founded in the autumn of 1916, with Lesley Mason guiding its editorial policy from the outset. Something like a year ago the International Cinema Trade Review was launched.

Neilan Engages Police Veteran.

Marshall Neilan engaged A. Leslie Martin, formerly of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, as technical adviser for the forthcoming production of "The River's End," James Oliver Curwood's latest story of the great outdoors which will be Mr. Neilan's initial picture vehicle as an independent producer.

Mr. Martin's eight years of service with Canada's police organization has made him especially well fitted for the position he holds with the Neilan producing staff.

Hugh Ford Goes West to Make Big Specials

HUGH FORD, who has been working day and night to finish cutting his last Elsie Ferguson picture, "Lady Rose's Daughter," has gone west to make at the Lasky studio one of the most ambitious special productions which will be released during the coming season.

There will be no star in this production, but one of the most important casts ever assembled for a special picture.

The name under which this picture will be released has not yet been definitely selected and it is thought wise even to withhold the nature of the story for the present. The idea, however, is one particularly in keeping with contemporaneous thought. As a matter of fact, Mr. Ford has been working on this subject with a corp of scenario writers at different times during a period of nearly six months and has himself contributed very greatly to the story itself.

Mr. Ford is accompanied west by his special cameraman, Hal Young, and his assistant, Joseph Boyle.

Cradle Rocking for an Infant Industry

Glancing Into Moving Picture World Ten Years Ago

IN Moving Picture World, dated Jan. 29, 1910, "J. E. B.," an exhibitor in Albia, Iowa, said among other things that "6,000 exhibitors were paying the Patents Company $2 a week for the privilege of running a picture machine." According to present estimates the craft has multiplied since then at an average of 1,000 a year.

The Albia man declared that in his town of 4,500 seven different houses had started and died within the previous two years. "We exhibitors are a lot of fools," said "J. E. B.," "to let the Patents Company collect $2 a week from us and not give us the exclusive they promise."

Film Comedies Were Slides.

"How Jones Joined the Masons" was advertised by Brayton Manufacturing Company. "Laugh? Yes, you will laugh" was the "punch line" in the advert. Set of twelve slides, $2.85, provided the comedy for a film entertainment that costs more today and is done in different form. The stereopticon was then having its day.

Henry Lee's "The Life of the World" entertainment at the New York Theatre was being editorially boosted by Moving Picture World. Lee was compared with Lyman Howe, Elmendorf, and Burton Holmes "in the popularization of the moving picture."

The First Educative Library.

"One thing in this delightful show, the absence of flicker in the moving pictures, so impressed us that me made inquiry as to what make of projection machine was used. It is but fair to say it was the new Power's Camergraph No. 6. The flicker was flickering out of pictures and opticians bewailed the fact.

"George Kleine, of Chicago," said a World editorial, "has been assiduously working for some time on a catalog of educational film subjects and at a private demonstration, a few days ago, we were given a glimpse * * * If we can be assured of a plentiful supply of such subjects we may safely venture the assertion that the moving picture is the most potent factor that has yet been promulgated for the world's enlightenment." Prophetic words, those, since abundantly come true.

"Well Known Writers Turning to a New Field—That of Writing Film Scenarios," was a headline that topped a story about Richard Harding Davis, Rex Beach and Elbert Hubbard having contracted for such work. Hubbard was to write for Selig; Edison announced "Ranson's Folly," by Davis. Rex Beach? Well, he's still writing for Goldwyn!

Introducin Lawrence Griffith.

On January 19, "the entire Biograph stock company, with Lawrence Griffith, director-in-chief, was dispatched on fast trains to sunny and picturesque lands in Southern California." Biograph was then growing. Fourteenth Street headquarters had become too small and "as soon as frost was out of the ground" work was to begin on new studios in the Bronx.

Lawrence Griffith, mentioned in the preceeding paragraph, was popularly known around Biograph as "Larry." For publicity purposes, it would seem, the more dignified name of Lawrence was used to designate the man known since to universal fame as David Wark Griffith. We would not advise cub reporters to call him "Larry" by way of starting an interview for present day purposes.

How about it, Larry?

A new industry was noted in news of ten years ago. It was a clean-'em-up-and-varnish-'em process applied to film by "independent" exchanges. Old Junk was renovated by this cleaning process and sent forth "good as new"—only it wasn't.

F. C. Taylor had made arrangements with F. H. Richardson to superintend the Taylor School for Operators. Yes, same Richardson who is doing our "projectionists" department these days. But Taylor, where is he?

The Movies Promised Profit.

New Companies were constantly being formed in England to exploit the moving picture form of entertainment. We read: "Plainly the Englishmen have faith in the moving picture business as a moneymaker." Faith once more brought into full fruition by Father Time.

New York Motion Picture Company was illustrating its advertisements of Bison Films with cuts made from stills. Mr. Yearsley, of First National, does the same thing in a better way nowtimes.

The General Electric Company, Schnectady, N. Y., was taking page "smashes" to tell about G. E. Mercury Arc Rectifiers. Howell Graham, manager of Theato, Chattanooga, had his letter of indorsement printed as part of the advert.

What Is a Poster?

Posters? They were coming along. Thomas H. Quill, on behalf of the U. S. Lithograph Company, was heralded as a specialist.

Vitigraph was sending out a large poster, showing half-tone reproductions of some of the scenes in the pictures advertised. "What Is a Poster?" was a headline that didn't carry an answer under it. It principally gave "Paddy Whack" to the artists who drew them.

Tarzan and the O Lady, Lady!

Gene Pollar, who plays Tarzan in Numa Pictures Corporation's production of "The Return of Tarzan," must be classed, at least in film footage, as "some boy." But gosh durn the blonds—along comes Karla Schramm, predestined by charm and the scenario, and ties him fast

"The Copperhead" Is Greatest in Its Uncompromising Americanism

By Edward Weitzel

WE have been told that "The Copperhead," as produced by Famous Players-Lasky, is among that company's most ambitious and pictorially extensive releases. This claim is well within the bounds of truth. The Paramount-Artcraft screen version of the Augustus Thomas play founded on the story by Frederick Landis, in which Lionel Barrymore gives his inspiring impersonation of that unsung hero, Milt Shanks, is a brilliant attainment on the part of every one concerned in its making. As a moving picture, its merits are outclassed by the sum of its patriotic uplift, by its inspiring example of love of country. And by its clear and human portrait of that mightiest American, Abraham Lincoln.

Milt Among the Earliest Volunteers

The story covers three periods in our national history. The war with Mexico has just been declared, and Milt Shanks, a young farmer of Millville, Ill., has decided to enlist when the opening scenes are shown. Milt's wife objects to his going, but he is firm in his determination until Abraham Lincoln, who knows him, advises that he stay at home and work his land and let the unmarried men do the fighting. The next period is during the outbreak of the Civil War. There are Southern sympathizers in Millville, and Lincoln sends for Milt as he is about to enlist in the Union army. The President wants Milt to join the United States Secret Service and pretend to favor the South and keep a watch on the Copperheads among his neighbors. Milt obeys and is sworn into the service by Lincoln himself. No one else, not even the new recruit's wife and son, are to know of it.

Milt pays a terrible price for his loyalty. Joey, his boy, goes to the front despising his father, Mrs. Shanks and the supporters of the Union sharing the same feeling. The Federal officer is arrested while apparently helping a group of Copperheads to run a number of horses through the northern lines. Joey is present when his father is caught. Tried and sentenced to be shot, Milt is pardoned by Lincoln and continues to serve his country in secret. Joey is killed in battle, and his mother dies of grief. Forty years later, when his granddaughter and the son of a loyal neighbor of Milt's fall in love, the now bent and broken man reveals the truth and removes the bar which threatens to separate the young couple.

A Characteristic Ensemble Scene.

The ensemble scenes in "The Copperhead" are many and of fine artistic fidelity. Here is one during the 1846 period: It is the noon hour in Milville and the long stragging Main street is alive with men and women hurrying toward the courthouse at the upper end of the town, where an officer of the United States Army is urging the men in the crowd in front of the building to enlist in the war with Mexico. War is the one topic of conversation and everybody shows the most eager interest in the success of the recruiting and cheers heartily as each volunteer goes up the steps and signs his name to the list.

The departure of the Milville volunteers, some weeks later, is another sight to stir the blood of anyone worthy to be called an American. The body of raw recruits, clad in motley and followed by the cheering men and women that know and love them, makes a wonderfully inspiring picture as they come down the street together.

The Return of Joey.

Let us compare this latter scene with one of a different nature; one in which there are only two characters—Milt Shanks and his wife. The room in which it takes place is far from impressive, the parlor of a humble home in Civil War times.

Milt has heard that his boy has been killed at Vicksburg and that the body is at the church. He goes there and is told that Joey has asked that his father should not be permitted to see him in his coffin.

The Copperhead
Milt longs to comfort his wife.

Greater anguish is in store for Milt when he returns home and is forced to face his wife. He longs to take her in his arms and give her some measure of comfort by telling her that he is not a traitor and that Joey would love and honor him if he knew the truth. He tries to show her his pity for her and his affection, but the mother of the dead boy only turns from him with the cry, "You're unclean, Milt Shanks!" and opens her Bible to find consolation for her grief. When Milt bends over her a few minutes later she is dead.

An Intimate Mental Picture.

Watching this scene with its searching pathos and beautiful revelation of nobility of soul, it is made clear that when the spectators leave a theatre after witnessing "The Copperhead," the mental picture they will carry away with them will not be of crowds and of marching men, of massive sets and marvelous reproductions of great historical periods in our national life, but remembrances of a more personal and intimate nature; the sacrifice of Milt Shanks of every thought of self, of all the things that meant most to those nearest to him that he might better serve his country.

The story entwined about the lives of this humble American and his immediate family has the bigness of an epoch and the nearness of the handclasp of a friend.

Lionel Barrymore's Fine Delineation.

Transferred to the screen, Lionel Barrymore's impersonation of Milt Shanks retains the same rugged exterior and spiritual depth of the stage portrait. His indications of early manhood, middle life and old age are sketched in firm, distinct outlines, and he endows the three phases of the character with a humanity which is felt instantly and is retained to the end. He brings again into being one of those sterling Americans of earlier days that did so much for the country by the labor of their hands and the lovalty of their hearts. Close behind the star's fine delineation comes the "Ma" Shanks of Doris Rankin. Sincere and kindly womanhood and pathetic power of real strength are to be found in the characterization. William P. Carlton as Lieutenant Tom Hardy, Frank Joyner as "Newt" Gillespie, Richard Carlyle as "Lem" Tollard, Arthur Rankin as Joey and N. Schroell as Abraham Lincoln are the other members of the cast that deserve more than honorable mention.

To Director Charles Maigne goes the credit for the scenario as well. The almost infinite detail of the picture has been looked after with keen eyes and sure artistic judgment. The scenario is true to the spirit of the original and unhampered and effective when screen requirements call for interpolated scenes.

The Timeliness of "The Copperhead."

And now we come to what "The Copperhead" will mean at this time, when the world at large is so in need of a sublime lesson in patriotism. Here in our own country it is imperative that we all be reminded what real Americanism stands for, and that the forces of social disorder and rebellion be shown one of the chief sources of our ideals and our faith.

In Milt Shank's loyalty and his veneration of Abraham Lincoln is this accomplished. Rich in its spectacular features, and more valuable in its human appeal, "The Copperhead" is greatest in what it stands for—uncompromising and militant Americanism.

Brunet Establishes Permanent Pathé Headquarters on the Coast

PAUL BRUNET, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is back from a brief visit to the Pacific Coast, enthusiastic over the gratifying success of his mission and especially pleased over the work in preparation and that planned for the immediate future of the ten producing units included in the Pathe releases.

Mr. Brunet completed the establishment of permanent Pathe headquarters on the coast, which will begin operation on February 1 and be located in the Wright-Callender Building. Mr. Gilson Willet, formerly manager of the Pathe scenario department is now the permanent Pacific coast production representative, and the publicity will be handled by Mrs. Phyllis Daniels. Production will be handled from there and all producing heads will have daily conference over the work in progress.

Praises Associated Exhibitors.

One of the principal projects that engaged the attention of Mr. Brunet was the Associated Exhibitors, Inc. "The plan of operation of the Associated Exhibitors," commented Mr. Brunet, "has features that are not included in any of the similar combinations and has been warmly indorsed from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the characteristic note being sounded by H. M. Crandall, of Washington, who, in giving his unqualified indorsement to the plan, said:

"'I must say that it is a most remarkable plan. I have been connected with both the First National and United, but I have never seen one more fair and equitable than this, and I might say in a few words, it seems too good to be true.

"'This proposition should need no sales talk as the exhibitor has all to gain and nothing to lose.

"'Don't hesitate to use my name for what little it may be worth to any of my brother exhibitors.'"

Pleased with Jack Dempsey.

Mr. Brunet was much interested in Pathe's newest West Coast star, Jack Dempsey, whose serial, "Dare-devil Jack," is to be released in February. He was surprised at the natural aptitude of the world's champion before the camera and in entering into the adventurous spirit of the story. "After critically watching his work," says Mr. Brunet, "I consider Dempsey a natural born star."

"The production units really leave nothing to be desired—ten in all including Edgar Lewis; the Blanche Sweet Specials, produced by Jesse D. Hampton; the two-reel $100,000 Lloyd comedies produced by Hal E. Roach; Ruth Roland Serials; H. B. Warner Specials, produced by Jesse D. Hampton; the Jack Dempsey serial produced by Robert Brunton; the Frank Keenan Specials; Louis J. Gasnier Serials; the specials produced by Edwin Carewe and the one reel Rolin comedies from Hal E. Roach.

"These ten companies working on the coast represent the release of about fifteen reels a week in features and comedies and our futur plans contemplate important additions to this product. Ruth Roland is well into the making of her second serial, in which she figures as both star and producer. The working title is 'Broadway Babs' and it struck me as being a strikingly original story of rapid action and surprise.

New Studio for Roach.

"Hal E. Roach declares that the warm reception accorded the Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies all over the country justifies his judgment in making the liberal expenditure in the setting and dressing of these features. And I was quite gratified to learn that 'Bumping Into Broadway,' 'His Royal Slyness' and 'From Hand to Mouth' have been acclaimed as marking a new achievement in the production of comedies.

"So it is that in the production of these Lloyd features and in the one reel Rolin comedies featuring 'Snub' Pollard, Mr. Roach has outgrown his old studio. Within two weeks he will move into a roomy modern studio, well equipped with all of the up-to-date improvements at Culver City. Its aspect from the street is one of beauty, the design is a Spanish mission style.

Rivoli Theatre Books Alice Brady Feature

"THE FEAR MARKET," Alice Brady's first production for Realart will be the feature at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, the week beginning Sunday, January 25. As the fifth release of the young producing company, this film will also be the fifth Realart production to show on the White Way, every one of the concern's pictures have received Broadway recognition, some of them more than once. Miss Brady's film comes to Broadway immediately after her personal appearance at the Shubert-Teller Theatre in Brooklyn last week in "Forever After."

Realart had its first Broadway showing with "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," which ran for three weeks in a pre-release showing at the Broadway Theatre. "Soldiers of Fortune" followed at the big Capitol, where it was said 22,000 attended on the first day and more than 100,000 during the week. "Erstwhile Susan" was next at the Rialto, and in the following week two Realarts played in opposition, "Anne of Green Gables" at the Rivoli and "Soldiers of Fortune" at the Broadway, in a return engagement to the avenue.

"The Fear Market" returns to Broadway in film form after having scored a notable success four years ago on the stage. Princess Troubetzkoy wrote the original play. The photoplay was adapted by Clara Beranger. Kenneth Webb directed. George Folsey was the cameraman and Roy Webb was assistant director.

Strong Appeal in Mayer Picture.

A great heart interest is sounded in Louis B. Mayer's new First National attraction, "The Fighting Shepherdess," which will be released shortly. It is a picturization of Caroline Lockhart's story, with Anita Stewart as the star and Edward Jose as the director. The theme centers about the fight which Kate Prentice makes against the slander and bitter opposition of a small, narrow-minded town.

Supporting Anita Stewart, the cast contains Wallace MacDonald, Noah Beery, Walter Long, Eugenie Besserer, Gibson Gowland, Ben Lewis, Calvert Carter and Maud Wayne. Millard Webb assisted Mr. Jose in the directing, and Tony Gaudio had charge of the photography.

Our reviewers write fairly and honestly of the productions they see at advance showings. The reviews are valuable not alone as a guide to the picture showman, but are highly desirable as press notices for daily papers—to go with advertising and help in getting the worth of your money.

Bennett Writing for Hank Mann.

Frederick Bennett, author of "The Radium Mystery," "The Lost Express" and several comedies, including "The Desert Hero" and "The Banker," featuring Arbuckle, and "Ten Nights in a Tea Room," featuring Lyons-Moran, has been engaged by Morris R. Schlank, producer, to write two-reel stories for the new series of comedies featuring Hank Mann.

Big New York Theatres Book "Cinema Murder"

ADVANCE reports of the high quality of Cosmopolitan Productions, "The Cinema Murder," a Paramount-Artcraft picture, and the announcements of the unprecedented exploitation in newspapers, magazines, billboards and elsewhere which is being given it, have attracted a great deal of attention among exhibitors throughout the country, as evidenced by the flood of inquiries that are pouring daily into the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges and the home office of International Film Service at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

At a private showing recently in New York, "The Cinema Murder," made such an impression that Dr. Reisenfeld, director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, New York, immediately booked it for a week at the Railto beginning January 18. B. S. Moss, head of the Moss Circuit of theatres in the East, booked it for a week at his Broadway Theatre to follow the Rialto engagement, and also booked it to show at every one of his theatres.

"The Cinema Murder" advertising and publicity campaign will be among the most pretentious. Advertising copy in big smashes will be placed in newspapers throughout the country, and special articles, written by such well-known writers as Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Mrs. Van de Water, Ada Patterson, Alan Dale, Fay King, Nell Brinkley, Nellie Bly, Harry Hershfield, etc., will be published in the news columns.

Taylor Holmes Company to Film Scenes in Miami

TAYLOR HOLMES and members of his supporting company have gone to Miami to begin work on the producer-comedian's second starring vehicle, "The Very Idea." This comedy from the pen of William Le Baron, which enjoyed a long and prosperous run on Broadway, follows "Nothing But the Truth," the William Collier stage success, which was the first picture to be made by Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc., and distributed by Metro.

Mr. Holmes has surrounded himself with a notable cast for "The Very Idea." He will be seen as Gilbert Goodhue, the mollycoddle husband who desires a son and heir, but who looks to the eugenic marriage of his chauffeur and his wife's maid to supply it. Virginia Valli has been cast as Gilbert's wife, and others in the ensemble are Edward Martindale, Jack Levering, Edward Lester, Geo. Cooper, Betty Ross Clarke, Jean Robb and Fay Marbe.

S. E. V. Taylor wrote the scenario for "The Very Idea" from the original play by William Le Baron. Lawrence Windom is the director.

Sennett's "Down on the Farm" Is "A Thrill Divided by Laughter"

MACK SENNETT announces the completion of his fourth five-part super-production, "Down on the Farm." The work now being prosecuted in the cutting room will soon be done when E. M. Asher, business manager of the Mack Sennett Comedies, will take Mr. Sennett's latest creation to New York.

Exploitation of "Down on the Farm" develops the promise of something new—really new. Promises of the "unique" are more often made by producers than fulfilled. Mr. Sennett asks faith in his assurances of novelty and bases his request on certain facts.

They are these:

"'Down on the Farm' blends melodrama, satire, legitimate drama, a bright tinge of burlesque, humor that suggests pathos and romance real and authentic. 'Down on the Farm' is a spectacle. It seems to be life itself as lived in the suburbs. The opening scene discloses the sun early at work on the eastern tips of high hills. Farmhands lazily open their day's services and then the plot emerges.

"A Thrill Divided by Laughter."

"Handled in a vein of lightest banter are the love affairs of a pretty little miss and her two persistent Romeos, one a farmhand who loves her for herself alone and the other a scoundrel of a real estate dealer who loves her for her financial prospects. The working out of this angle of the story is accomplished with such ingenuity that the beholder hardly knows whether to laugh at the travesty or thrill at the story. As a result, he does both, which is why 'Down on the Farm' has been called 'a thrill divided by laughter.'

"Naturally in a production of such a work the entire menagerie celebrated in other Sennett prsentations is here disclosed in ensemble effectiveness. Some of the most appealing of the scenes are those in which the four-footed and the feathered players of the Sennett studio are shown in action.

"Manifestly unfair to select for special mention any of the principals participating in this sensational plot, it nevertheless remains true that little John Henry, Jr., and his sworn ally and companion on and off the screen, Teddy, the Great Dane, are likely to prove the sensation of the picture. Louise Fazenda appears as 'the rustic, cornfed beauty,' and is in one of her finest characterizations, at once comic, appealing, wistful and hilarious. Marie Prevost as the harrassed but faithful wife of a villager, victim of the rent collector's villainy, has a scene conceived in tragedy and worked out in delightful comedy.

Hoxie to Be a Director.

Jack Hoxie, the National Film Corporation's serial star, will direct features for that concern as soon as his current agreement expires. Hoxie, who starred with Ann Little in the "Lightning Bryce" serial, is under contract to make another serial for the National, after which he will take over one of the National units. To fit himself, as he calls it, for the task and to learn how to act behind the camera, Hoxie is taking "lessons" daily near Sunland with William A. Seiter, who is directing "The Kentucky Colonel."

Brunet Establishes Permanent Pathé Headquarters on the Coast

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is back from a brief visit to the Pacific Coast, enthusiastic over the gratifying success of his mission and especially pleased over the work in preparation and that planned for the immediate future of the ten producing units included in the Pathe releases.

Mr. Brunet completed the establishment of permanent Pathe headquarters on the coast, which will begin operation on February 1 and be located in the Wright-Callender Building. Mr. Gilson Willet, formerly manager of the Pathe scenario department is now the permanent Pacific coast production representative, and the publicity will be handled by Mrs. Phyllis Daniels. Production will be handled from there and all producing heads will have daily conference over the work in progress.

Praises Associated Exhibitors.

One of the principal projects that engaged the attention of Mr. Brunet was the Associated Exhibitors, Inc. "The plan of operation of the Associated Exhibitors," commented Mr. Brunet, "has features that are not included in any of the similar combinations and has been warmly indorsed from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the characteristic note being sounded by H. M. Crandall, of Washington, who, in giving his unqualified indorsement to the plan, said:

"'I must say that it is a most remarkable plan. I have been connected with both the First National and United, but I have never seen one more fair and equitable than this, and I might say in a few words, it seems too good to be true.

"'This proposition should need no sales talk as the exhibitor has all to gain and nothing to lose.

"'Don't hesitate to use my name for what little it may be worth to any of my brother exhibitors.'"

Pleased with Jack Dempsey.

Mr. Brunet was much interested in Pathe's newest West Coast star, Jack Dempsey, whose serial, "Dare-devil Jack," is to be released in February. He was surprised at the natural aptitude of the world's champion before the camera and in entering into the adventurous spirit of the story. "After critically watching his work," says Mr. Brunet, "I consider Dempsey a natural born star."

"The production units really leave nothing to be desired—ten in all including Edgar Lewis; the Blanche Sweet Specials, produced by Jesse D. Hampton; the two-reel $100,000 Lloyd comedies produced by Hal E. Roach; Ruth Roland Serials; H. B. Warner Specials, produced by Jesse D. Hampton; the Jack Dempsey serial produced by Robert Brunton; the Frank Keenan Specials; Louis J. Gasnier Serials; the specials produced by Edwin Carewe and the one reel Rolin comedies from Hal E. Roach.

"These ten companies working on the coast represent the release of about fifteen reels a week in features and comedies and our futur plans contemplate important additions to this product. Ruth Roland is well into the making of her second serial, in which she figures as both star and producer. The working title is 'Broadway Babs' and it struck me as being a strikingly original story of rapid action and surprise.

New Studio for Roach.

"Hal E. Roach declares that the warm reception accorded the Harold Lloyd two-reel comedies all over the country justifies his iudgment in making the liberal expenditure in the setting and dressing of these features. And I was quite gratified to learn that 'Bumping Into Broadway,' 'His Royal Slyness' and 'From Hand to Mouth' have been acclaimed as marking a new achievement in the production of comedies.

"So it is that in the production of these Lloyd features and in the one reel Rolin comedies featuring 'Snub' Pollard, Mr. Roach has outgrown his old studio. Within two weeks he will move into a roomy modern studio, well equipped with all of the up-to-date improvements at Culver City. Its aspect from the street is one of beauty, the design is a Spanish mission style.

Rivoli Theatre Books Alice Brady Feature

THE FEAR MARKET," Alice Brady's first production for Realart will be the feature at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, the week beginning Sunday, January 25. As the fifth release of the young producing company, this film will also be the fifth Realart production to show on the White Way, every one of the concern's pictures have received Broadway recognition, some of them more than once. Miss Brady's film comes to Broadway immediately after her personal appearance at the Shubert-Teller Theatre in Brooklyn last week in "Forever After."

Realart had its first Broadway showing with "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," which ran for three weeks in a pre-release showing at the Broadway Theatre. "Soldiers of Fortune" followed at the big Capitol, where it was said 22,000 attended on the first day and more than 100,000 during the week. "Erstwhile Susan" was next at the Rialto, and in the following week two Realarts played in opposition, "Anne of Green Gables" at the Rivoli and "Soldiers of Fortune" at the Broadway, in a return engagement to the avenue.

"The Fear Market" returns to Broadway in film form after having scored a notable success four years ago on the stage. Princess Troubetzkoy wrote the original play. The photoplay was adapted by Clara Beranger. Kenneth Webb directed. George Folsey was the cameraman and Roy Webb was assistant director.

Strong Appeal in Mayer Picture.

A great heart interest is sounded in Louis B. Mayer's new First National attraction, "The Fighting Shepherdess," which will be released shortly. It is a picturization of Caroline Lockhart's story, with Anita Stewart as the star and Edward Jose as the director. The theme centers about the fight which Kate Prentice makes against the slander and bitter opposition of a small, narrow-minded town.

Supporting Anita Stewart, the cast contains Wallace MacDonald, Noah Beery, Walter Long, Eugenie Besserer, Gibson Gowland, Ben Lewis, Calvert Carter and Maud Wayne. Millard Webb assisted Mr. Jose in the directing, and Tony Gaudio had charge of the photography.

Our reviewers write fairly and honestly of the productions they see at advance showings. The reviews are valuable not alone as a guide to the picture showman, but are highly desirable as press notices for daily papers—to go with advertising and help in getting the worth of your money.

Bennett Writing for Hank Mann.

Frederick Bennett, author of "The Radium Mystery," "The Lost Express" and several comedies, including "The Desert Hero" and "The Banker," featuring Arbuckle, and "Ten Nights in a Tea Room," featuring Lyons-Moran, has been engaged by Morris R. Schlank, producer, to write two-reel stories for the new series of comedies featuring Hank Mann.

Big New York Theatres Book "Cinema Murder"

ADVANCE reports of the high quality of Cosmopolitan Productions, "The Cinema Murder," a Paramount-Artcraft picture, and the announcements of the unprecedented exploitation in newspapers, magazines, billboards and elsewhere which is being given it, have attracted a great deal of attention among exhibitors throughout the country, as evidenced by the flood of inquiries that are pouring daily into the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges and the home office of International Film Service at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

At a private showing recently in New York, "The Cinema Murder," made such an impression that Dr. Reisenfeld, director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, New York, immediately booked it for a week at the Railto beginning January 18. B. S. Moss, head of the Moss Circuit of theatres in the East, booked it for a week at his Broadway Theatre to follow the Rialto engagement, and also booked it to show at every one of his theatres.

"The Cinema Murder" advertising and publicity campaign will be among the most pretentious. Advertising copy in big smashes will be placed in newspapers throughout the country, and special articles, written by such well-known writers as Mrs. Wilson Woodrow, Mrs. Van de Water, Ada Patterson, Alan Dale, Fay King, Nell Brinkley, Nellie Bly, Harry Hershfield, etc., will be published in the news columns.

Taylor Holmes Company to Film Scenes in Miami

TAYLOR HOLMES and members of his supporting company have gone to Miami to begin work on the producer-comedian's second starring vehicle, "The Very Idea." This comedy from the pen of William Le Baron, which enjoyed a long and prosperous run on Broadway, follows "Nothing But the Truth," the William Collier stage success, which was the first picture to be made by Taylor Holmes Productions, Inc., and distributed by Metro.

Mr. Holmes has surrounded himself with a notable cast for "The Very Idea." He will be seen as Gilbert Goodhue, the mollycoddle husband who desires a son and heir, but who looks to the eugenic marriage of his chauffeur and his wife's maid to supply it. Virginia Valli has been cast as Gilbert's wife, and others in the ensemble are Edward Martindale, Jack Levering, Edward Lester, Geo. Cooper, Betty Ross Clarke, Jean Robb and Fay Marbe.

S. E. V. Taylor wrote the scenario for "The Very Idea" from the original play by William Le Baron. Lawrence Windom is the director.

Sennett's "Down on the Farm" Is "A Thrill Divided by Laughter"

MACK SENNETT announces the completion of his fourth five-part super-production, "Down on the Farm." The work now being prosecuted in the cutting room will soon be done when E. M. Asher, business manager of the Mack Sennett Comedies, will take Mr. Sennett's latest creation to New York.

Exploitation of "Down on the Farm" develops the promise of something new —really new. Promises of the "unique" are more often made by producers than fulfilled. Mr. Sennett asks faith in his assurances of novelty and bases his request on certain facts.

They are these:

"'Down on the Farm' blends melodrama, satire, legitimate drama, a bright tinge of burlesque, humor that suggests pathos and romance real and authentic. 'Down on the Farm' is a spectacle. It seems to be life itself as lived in the suburbs. The opening scene discloses the sun early at work on the eastern tips of high hills. Farmhands lazily open their day's services and then the plot emerges.

"A Thrill Divided by Laughter."

"Handled in a vein of lightest banter are the love affairs of a pretty little miss and her two persistent Romeos, one a farmhand who loves her for herself alone and the other a scoundrel of a real estate dealer who loves her for her financial prospects. The working out of this angle of the story is accomplished with such ingenuity that the beholder hardly knows whether to laugh at the travesty or thrill at the story. As a result, he does both, which is why 'Down on the Farm' has been called 'a thrill divided by laughter.'

"Naturally in a production of such a work the entire menagerie celebrated in other Sennett prsentations is here disclosed in ensemble effectiveness. Some of the most appealing of the scenes are those in which the four-footed and the feathered players of the Sennett studio are shown in action.

"Manifestly unfair to select for special mention any of the principals participating in this sensational plot, it nevertheless remains true that little John Henry, Jr., and his sworn ally and companion on and off the screen, Teddy, the Great Dane, are likely to prove the sensation of the picture. Louise Fazenda appears as 'the rustic, cornfed beauty,' and is in one of her finest characterizations, at once comic, appealing, wistful and hilarious. Marie Prevost as the harrassed but faithful wife of a villager, victim of the rent collector's villainy, has a scene conceived in tragedy and worked out in delightful comedy.

Hoxie to Be a Director.

Jack Hoxie, the National Film Corporation's serial star, will direct features for that concern as soon as his current agreement expires. Hoxie, who starred with Ann Little in the "Lightning Bryce" serial, is under contract to make another serial for the National, after which he will take over one of the National units. To fit himself, as he calls it, for the task and to learn how to act behind the camera, Hoxie is taking "lessons" daily near Sunland with William A. Seiter, who is directing "The Kentucky Colonel."

French Welcome Yankee Producers and Film Players, Says Adolph Osso

ADOLPH OSSO, vice president of the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., and also associated with Harry Cahone in the Edgar Lewis Productions, Inc., and the Edwin Carewe Productions, Inc., has recently returned from Paris.

Mr. Osso speaks enthusiastically about motion picture prospects in France. "The industry is advancing rapidly since the signing of the armistice," he asserts. "In Paris so far there are no Rialtos or Strands, no Capitols or Rivolis, the old Hippodrome still remaining the largest film theatre in the city. But it is only a question of time until large modern theatres will be erected.

"Meanwhile," Mr. Osso continues, "the American producer is welcome in France and will there find every possible opportunity afforded him. I am myself erecting a studio which will accommodate six companies at the same time. Nice and the Riviera constitute a second California so far as motion photography is concerned."

Mr. Osso has great faith in French-made pictures for the American trade, when they are Americanized and produced with stars known in this country. With a little encouragement and the adoption of American methods, he believes, French directors will do wonderful things with the mine of valuable material as yet untouched. This material can readily be adopted to American life.

"French pictures," Mr. Osso declares," have suffered for lack of beautiful women, few of whom in France take up screen acting as a career. However, Danish and Italian competition is spurring on the French actors. Many of them have of late been sent to Italy to do French films there. If more American players would go to France to act in Americanized French productions, first-class pictures for United States consumption would result."

Novelty and Variety Promised in Selznick Releases for February

INCLUDED in the Selznick schedule of releases for the month of February are four productions which are expected by the Selznick organization to find immediate favor with exhibitors and public. Novelty and variety are promised in these pictures, which are classed among the best productions to be screened in the new year.

The productions scheduled for release in February are, with their stars, "Sooner or Later," starring Owen Moore; "His Wife's Money," starring Eugene O'Brien; "The Woman Game," starring Elaine Hammerstein, and "The Land of Opportunity," featuring Ralph Ince as the star and supervising director.

Each of the four February releases is a novelty in story, and no two of the stories are the same or have similar themes. Therefore the novelty and variety is evident. Some unusually comic incidents are evident in "Sooner or Later," the production which was directed by Wesley Ruggles. Serena Owen has the feminine lead.

"His Wife's Money," a story written by May Tully and DeVernet Rabbell, contains every situation needed to make it a dramatic success. The many sides of life are shown and the varied locales add to the attractiveness of the drama. Eugene O'Brien has the role of a young engineer.

"The Land of Opportunity" is the first of any of the Americanization pictures to be made by any of the interested picture producing companies. Ralph Ince, veteran and director, has the leading role. In fact, he plays a dual role in the production.

The women will be interested in the Elaine Hammerstein production, "The Woman Game." In view of the fact that the story tells why women have rights as well as men, it is bound to draw them and exhibitors booking this feature should lay stress on this point.

Mayors' Conference Sub-Committees Will Report Campaign Plans Soon

THE second meeting of the motion picture regulation committee will be held in Albany, N. Y., on Monday, February 2, at which time the four sub-committees will make their reports to the general committee and some idea can be gained of what will be attempted along motion picture matters in the legislature of the state during the next few weeks to come. The meeting, according to W. P. Capes, secretary of the State Conference of Mayors, responsible for the committee, will be an executive one and one from which he hopes there will be no leak until such time as a report is made at the mid-winter meeting of the conference in Albany.

The sub-committees, which are now at work, include the one on state censorship, headed by Rex Beach, the author; a second one on the work of the National Board of Review, with Walter W. Nicholson, commissioner of safety of Syracuse, as chairman; a third, headed by Gabriel Hess, which has for its consideration the existing laws in New York State on motion pictures, and a fourth one, of which Dr. Everett D. Martin is chairman, which has for its consideration all local regulations.

Capes Collects Information.

Instead of directly introducing any bills this year, the State Conference of Mayors plans to transmit to the legislature a report on any one subject, such as the motion picture, pointing out problems, offering suggestions as to their solution through the passage of laws, and by reason of its own investigations, such as are now being made, furnishing the legislators information from every city in the state on the subject under discussion.

Mr Capes has written to all cities, inquiring as to what plan, if any, is being employed in each in regulating the motion picture houses, and also how successfully the plan is working out

From the present outlook, the first of the motion picture bills will be introduced in the legislature early in February. That there will be a fight is freely predicted, for even this early many members of the Senate and Assembly are open in saying that there is absolutely no need of any further censorship in this state, that the National Board of Review is handling the proposition in a most satisfactory way, and, furthermore, that the cities themselves do not wish to be further encumbered by laws in connection with their own motion picture houses.

Demand for Picture Shows Brings Theatres Reopening

THE demands on moving picture houses have been such of late at San Francisco that several theatres that have been dark for a long time are being reopened. The Regent Theatre has been purchased by E. H. Shaw and has been reopened, following extensive improvements. The Republic Theatre, which has been dark for months, has been taken over by E. C. Cunningham and will be opened with Republic pictures late in January.

The old Jewel Theatre on Market street, near Seventh, which has been closed for the past two years, is being remodeled and will be reopened shortly as the Sun Theatre, the new owners promising to make it "the brightest spot in town." The jazziest sort of a jazz orchestra has been secured and the corps of girl ushers is being trained to present novelty specialties on the stage between pictures. They will be garbed in striking costumes frequently changed.

"Cinema Murder" Breaks Rivoli-Rialto Records

RUNNING up a total of 9,741 paid admissions for the day, "The Cinema Murder," starring Marion Davies, a Cosmopolitan Production, released as a Paramount Artcraft Picture, broke the record Sunday, January 18, at the Rialto Theatre, New York.

"'The Cinema Murder' not only broke the Rialto record," said Managing Director Hugo Riesenfeld, "but it also smashed the record of our other house, the Rivoli, which seats about 400 more."

The box-office power of "The Cinema Murder" is due to a combination of facts rather than to chance. The story was written by E. Phillips Oppenheim. The star is Marion Davies, one of the beauties of the screen and stage. The supporting cast consists of well-known players, among them being Anders Randolf, Nigel Barrie, W. Scott Moore, Reginald Barlow, Eulalie Jensen and Peggy Parr. George D. Baker directed.

In addition to all this, "The Cinema Murder" is being given one of the most thorough exploitation campaigns ever given a motion picture. Prior to its opening at the Rialto, the New York newspapers were flooded with full-page advertising smashes and publicity stories. A similar campaign of exploitation has been inaugurated throughout the country.

Irving Will Direct Edith Hallor.

The Weber Productions, Inc., of which L. J. Selznick is secretary, has had the good fortune to obtain the services of George Irving as director of the new series of Weber pictures which will feature the well-known actress Edith Hallor.

Mr. Irving is one of the best known and most capable directors in the motion picture art. Before entering the picture field he spent thirteen years with Charles Frohman as actor and producing director.

Work of Famous Players Foreign Offices in Films

AN interesting insight into foreign film conditions is presented in a special film prepared by Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer and in charge of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. This film, which depicted offices and distributing agencies of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in foreign lands, served as the annual report made by Mr. Shauer to the stockholders and directors of the company. It is said to be the first time that an officer's report had been made in this form.

More than 50,000,000 feet of film were shipped abroad by the foreign department without the loss of a single foot of film, a truly remarkable record considering the operations of the German submarines throughout the war. This record for efficiency has served to increase the prestige of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation abroad, according to Mr. Shauer.

One of the first pictures shown was that of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Great Britain and Ireland. Another showed the operations of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Australasia.

Other offices shown in this film were those of Societe des Establissments Gaumont of Paris, distributors of Paramount-Artcraft productions in France, Belgium, Switzerland, Holland, Egypt and the French and Belgian colonies; South Pacific Paramount Company, distributors for Chile, Peru and Bolivia; Sociedada General Cinematografica, distributors for Spain, Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay, and Caribbean Film Company, which distributes Paramount-Artcraft productions in Cuba, Porto Rico, Venezuela and Central America.

The offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Copenhagen, from which Paramount-Artcraft productions are distributed for Denmark, Sweden and Finland, were also pictured in the film. Ingvald C. Oes is the manager of the office.

Realart Films Open Rialto Theatre.

Realart star productions will feature the gala opening of the new Rialto Theatre, the fourth big house of the Fall River, Mass., chain under the management of L. M. Boas. The Rialto Theatre, completely rebuilt and refurnished, was formerly the Savoy. The theatre has been altered to accommodate 1,500 persons.

"Anne of Green Gables" will be the first Realart film to go on at the new house. It will be followed by "Erstwhile Susan" and "The Fear Market."

Blank and Frankle of Des Moines Plan Consolidation of Interests

A. H. BLANK and Abe Frankle are planning to combine their interests in Des Moines amounting to more than $1,000,000 in property and stock, according to rumors current in the Iowa city.

Frankle would not confirm the rumor, merely saying that "nothing is settled." He did not deny that the proposition was under consideration.

A. H. Blank is in New York and his office will give out nothing on the merger until he returns to Des Moines. Men in close touch with the two offices predict that the deal will go through as planned within the month.

The interests affected include Blank's new $500,000 Des Moines Theatre, his Garden and Palace, and Frankle's Rialto, Majestic and Casino. Frankle heads a new concern that is planning an $800,000 theatre and office building to be erected this year. The fate of this house under the merger is not known.

The move seems to be a protective measure against outside encroachment of the Des Moines picture field. Marcus Loew's leasing of the $600,000 Alhambra now under construction on Grand avenue next door to Blank's Des Moines is thought to be a big factor in the deals in which all Des Moines is interested.

Fox and Goldwyn are both rumored as desiring to open houses in Des Moines. Blank's connection with First National and Loew's purchase of Metro make the building of new houses by rival concerns very probable.

With the deal completed all but three downtown houses will be the property of the one concern, excepting, of course, Loew's Alhambra which will not open until September.

Blank and Frankle are both expected to be actively associated with the new company.

George Simpson Plans New Theatre to Cost $1.000,000 for Rochester

ROCHESTER is to have another motion picture palace. The site has already been purchased for $250,000 and George E. Simpson, who is back of the project, estimates that the building will cost $1,000,000. The site is on Clinton avenue south in the heart of what in recent years has come to be the theatrical district, with a frontage of 132 feet and a depth of 204 feet. The house will seat 4,000. Building operations will commence in the spring and will be rushed.

For the past year there have been rumors of theatres to be built in Rochester and some of these rumors have advanced to the stage where real action was expected, but in no case was Mr. Simpson or his associates connected with any of the projects. Mr. Simpson is president and general manager of the Regorson Corporation which operates the Regent, Piccadilly and Gordon theatres, three of Rochester's biggest downtown picture theatres. He is also one of the heavy stockholders in the corporations which own the Regent and Piccadilly theatres.

Some months ago it was understood that one of the big film combines which has received a considerable influx of Wall Street capital, was to build a big house in Rochester, provided that local interests refused to sell one of the present houses. It was also understood that a vaudeville circuit had men there looking for a suitable site. Albert A. Fennyvessey, president and general manager of the Theatres Operating Company, which has four houses there and more in Buffalo and other cities was then known to be interested in a plan to build a mammoth Main street theatre for vaudeville and pictures.

Triangle Recreated Films Released Through United Are Proving Popular

TRIANGLE'S recreated plays, three of which have already been released, have proven to be very popular with first class exhibitors everywhere. The first release was "The Flame of the Yukon," a Thomas H. Ince production featuring Dorothy Dalton. This production, which had its first showing on November 23, lent itself easily to exploitation on the part of exhibitors and naturally was a big profit maker to theatre managers in every way.

"Betty of Greystone," a Fine Arts production supervised by D. W. Griffith and featuring Dorothy Gish with Owen Moore, was released December 15 and received the same reception as "The Flame of the Yukon." Dorothy Gish has proven herself to be an excellent drawing card with movie fans and the fact that she was supported by an all star cast including, besides Owen Moore, Norman Selby (Kid McCoy), George Fawcett and Kate Bruce, served to make the production an unusual one.

"The Clodhopper," a Thomas H. Ince production featuring Charles Ray, is an unusual production in every way. This feature, which was released January 4, shows that star in probably his greatest play.

The first Triangle recreated play, "A Gamble in Souls," which will be released January 25, is a Thomas H. Ince production featuring Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond and promises to be a great success from the exhibitor's standpoint. The play is strong and virile and the fact that it contains such popular stars as Miss Dalton and Bill Desmond is sure to make it popular.

The manner in which these Triangle recreated productions have been exploited by exhibitors has been gratifying to United. Large space has been taken in all the daily press and much billboard space has been contracted for to acquaint the public with the feature being released by United.

Hampton Del Ruth Completes Special Five Reel Sunshine Comedy for Fox

THERE are many unusual things about the special Sunshine Comedy just completed at the William Fox studios in Hollywood. One of the most unusual of these is the fact that this special took five months to make—total working time—and under conditions that are worthy of mention. Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of all Fox Sunshine Comedies, directed.

With announcement of the completion of this special Fox Sunshine comes the story of the making of the comedy. For a trifle more than five months Mr. Del Ruth has carried the megaphone continually, laid out special settings and designed many daring costumes for the players. Assisting Del Ruth was the entire Sunshine Comedy directorial staff, including Jack Blystone, Eddie Cline, Roy Del Ruth, Mal St. Clair, Vin Moore and Frank Griffin.

Is Five Reels in Length.

This comedy will be five reels in length. Plans for a special campaign on it are now being formulated in the advertising and publicity departments of Fox Film Corporation, and many novel stunts are promised for the exhibitor's aid in exploiting it.

The personnel of this special Sunshine de luxe includes every member of the Fox Sunshine Comedy forces, nearly two hundred players continually engaged in making the regular two-reel Sunshine films. Added to these in the five-reel production are several hundred extra people and many specialty acts.

The entire troupe of Singer Midgets, famous the world over as one of the most distinct novelties seen on the vaudeville circuits, was engaged by William Fox especially for this Sunshine de luxe. The Singer Midget troupe consists of nineteen tiny men and women. Several male members are phenomenal stunt and strong men.

Engage Midgets' Animals.

Besides the Midgets themselves, Mr. Fox has secured the entire animal train of this troupe, as well as the complete special equipment carried by the Singer company on its vaudeville tours.

Into the story of the film a genuine big-time circus is woven. Hampton Del Ruth has freak actors who will bring back the good old days of the side show in your old home town. Some of the principals who enact the freak roles are popular screen players and include Slim Somerville, Tom Kennedy, Mutt Murphy; Blanche Payson, Tiny Ward and Bert Gillespie. In selecting a prima donna, around whom the "jazziferous" comedy revolves, William Fox chose Alta Allen.

Employs "Jazzical" Cast.

The regular corps of Sunshine beauties was increased by Mr. Del Ruth for this production. Seventy-five Sunshine Widows appear throughout the picture in a series of costumes that are beautiful.

There are many large settings, many costly furnishings, draperies, hangings and floor coverings. Nothing has been spared to make it a complete success so for as the detail is concerned. The cast includes, besides Miss Allen, Chester Conklin, Harry Pooker, Jack Cooper, Laura La Varnie, Ethel Teare, Alice Davenport, Glen Cavenden, Bobbie Dunn, Ed Kennedy, Dave Morris, Jim Donnelly, Harry Gibbon and Dorothy Lee.

The selection of a name for the comedy is left to the exhibitors. A cash prize of $250 will be paid by the Fox company for the best title.

National Engages C. J. Rider.

Charles Joseph Rider, artist and sculptor, has been engaged to draw display advertising by the National Film Corporation of America. Mr. Rider's first efforts in motion picture advertising will make their appearance within a few weeks in the trade papers.

Our Own Prize Question: "What Has May Allison on the Stick?"

A peck of string-beans will be given to the best guesser. The clue is: It's May Allison in Metro's "The Walk-Offs."

Dintenfass to Visit Florida.

Mark M. Dintenfass, producer of the Cuckoo Comedies, expects to leave New York shortly to go to his Jacksonville, Fla., studios. He will be plentifully supplied with comic stories and new stunts for Bobby Burns and Jobyna Ralston to inject into the now famous comedies released through United Pictures Theatres of America.

Make Big Hotel Scenes For Guy Empey's "Oil"

BIG sets are the order of the day at Paragon Studio, where Guy Empey is filming the concluding scenes in his special production, "Oil," prior to leaving with his company for work on location. A great many of the scenes are laid in a large hotel in a Middle Western city, and the week passed has seen a growth in the Paragon studio of an elaborate restaurant and grill room set, and the last few days of a mammoth set representing a hotel lobby and the reception room leading from it. This set occupies the entire length of the large Paragon studio and in some places extends as well through its entire width.

The set is a fine example of the artistry of Technical Director Herbert Mesamore, who is permanently attached to the Empey organization. The studio equivalent of black marble and green and yellow onyx is lavishly used in a structure so substantial that its appearance on the screen will leave no doubt in the minds of the audience of its being other than the interior of a real hotel.

Have a Cigar?

Florence Evelyn Martin, who co-stars in the piece with Guy Empey, has many scenes in and around a cigar counter and news stand which occupy a prominent place in the set. In order to give the greatest appearance of similitude to the action of the photoplay in this sequence of scenes, Director Wilfrid North has gathered a large number of well-known screen actors who have been given individual bits of business in and around the lobby. This is a novel departure from the usual method of handling such scenes—extras used en masse. A sufficient number of minor scenes have been worked out for the players doing these bits to make the lobby scenes in "Oil" lifelike.

Mildred Harris Heads Strong Cast.

A strong cast supports Mildred Harris Chaplin in her first Louis B. Mayer-First National prodution, "Polly of the Storm Country," which will be released within the next few weeks.

The production will mark the first appearance in America of the well-known French actor, Valentin Maurice, who gained distinction during the war in the French army. Previous to the war, Maurice was a popular French picture favorite.

Other members of the cast are Emery Johnson, Fred Kohler, Ruby Lafayette, Harry Northrup, Charles West and little, though important Micky Moore, Charlotte Burton, Cora Drew, Cameron Coffey and Dick Rosson.

The production was directed by Arthur Rosson, while his brother, Hal Rosson, worked the camera. The art director was George Hopkins.

Schlank Builds New Laboratory.

Morris R. Schlank, producer of the Hank Mann fun films, has just completed the establishment of new still laboratories at his studio in Hollywood. The building is of cement and has three rooms; one for developing negatives, another for printing and the third to be used as the office of the department. He has named Ralph Reis as head of the still department.

Eastman Kodak Company Employes Incorporate

THE incorporation of the Kodak Employes' Association marks the first step in the administration of a princely gift which George Eastman has set aside for employes of the Eastman Kodak Company. The funds at the disposal of the association will ultimately amount to $2,000,000 and will be used for recreational and educational work among the employes and to aid them in other ways.

Some months ago Mr. Eastman announced a plan whereby employes of the company might not only become stockholders of the company, but would be permitted to buy their stock at par value, which is less than one-sixth of its present market value. Mr. Eastman personally set aside 10,000 shares of stock, which at $100 a share will bring $1,000,000. This sum Mr. Eastman has made payable to the employes' association and with it will be added another $1,000,000 which he gave to promote welfare work some time previously. Here it might be said that when Mr. Eastman set aside his 10,000 shares of stock, it was on the understanding that the company would do likewise, but the $1,000,000 realized from this sale of stock goes to the company.

The Kodak Employes' Association will have full charge of the handling and expending of the money at its disposal. In the association the workers and representatives of the company will have equal representation, membership for the workers being decided by popular vote. In the fourteen incorporators of the association the seven representatives of the company include Mr. Eastman himself, the managers of the several Eastman plants in Rochester and James S. Havens, legal adviser to the company.

National Remodeling Studios.

A large force of carpenters, stone masons and steel workers have been engaged to remodel the studios of the National Film Corporation of America, located in Hollywood, for the spring production season. The studios are taxed to capacity, acording to Capt. Harry M. Rubey, National's president, and more space for additional stages and buildings must be acquired to adequately care for the new units to be added to the National's production forces beginning March first. I. Bernstein, production manager, is supervising building improvements.

The Moving Picture World carries a message to exhibitors in small towns by the hundred where salesmen seldom, if ever, visit in their travels. It is to benefit this great prosperous exhibitor element that the World is compiled—as much to help the little fellow as to help the "first run" man in the larger cities.

Loew and Metro Officials Depart For Conferences in West on Plans

MARCUS LOEW, Richard A. Rowland and Joseph W. Engel have left for the Pacific Coast on a trip which is the outcome of the recent purchase of Metro stock by Loew, Inc., and the merger of the business interests of the extensive chain and the large producing company. Upon their return the Loew-Metro officials expect to announce big plans for expansion, covering every phase of their mutual activity.

The head of the Loew Circuit, the Metro president and the Metro treasurer will go direct to Los Angeles. Their primary purpose is a complete tour of inspection of the new Metro studios in Hollywood. William E. Atkinson, Metro general manager, is already at the studios, where he has been co-operating with Maxwell Karger, director general, for several weeks.

Mr. Loew, of course, has been particularly anxious to inspect the Metro studios, which are embraced in one of the largest and best equipped picture producing plants on the West Coast. He has never seen them, and so, on the present trip, will be in the hands of two experienced guides in the persons of Mr. Rowland and Mr. Engel.

Plan Series of Conferences.

The Loew enterprises and the Metro organization have both made it plain that the union of their interests is designed for the greater strength and expansion of both. One immediate outcome of the present trip by Messrs. Loew, Rowland and Engel will be a series of important conferences directly upon their arrival in Hollywood, with a view to enlarging and improving the facilities of production, distribution and exhbition of pictures involved in the recent merger.

Having been on the ground for some time. Mr. Atkinson will also participate in these conferences, as will Director General Karger. The latter will return east with Mr. Rowland to supervise Metro's screen production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, which is to be done with an all-star cast in New York.

Senor Ibanez himself will be in Hollywood when Messrs. Loew, Rowland and Engel arrive. The brilliant Spanish novelist preceded them by three or four days.

The officials of the Loew-Metro affiliation have not announced the exact duration of their visit in the West, but they expect to be away for three or four weeks.

Lewis Stone Is Engaged for "Held by the Enemy"

LEWIS STONE the noted New York actor, who has recently been starring in repertoire at the Majestic Theatre, Los Angeles, and is known as a most capable artist on either stage or screen, has been engaged to play the role of Gordon Hayne in "Held by the Enemy," a Paramount-Artcraft Special, which was recently started at the Lasky studio by Director Donald Crisp.

Jack Holt will be Col. Charles Prescott; Clyde Fillmore, recently recruited from the legitimate stage, will play Surgeon Fielding; Wanda Hawley is to appear as Emmy McCreery; Agnes Ayre as Rachael Hayne, and Walter Hiers as Tommy Beene. These, with others to be announced later, form an all-star cast, and according to report this production promises to be one of the most spectacular and compelling dramas that has been screened in a long time. It is the work of William Gilette, the actor-playwright, whose "Secret Service" was recently filmed for Paramount-Artcraft, with Robert Warwick starring.

Smith Syndicate Signs Za Su Pitts; To Start First Picture in Spring

GEORGE H. CALLAGHAN, prominent operator of the independent field, promoter and specialist in handling negative rights to independent productions throughout the world, in the capacity of special representative for the R. C. P. Smith Syndicate of Los Angeles, a big financial concern of the Pacific Coast, announces that this syndicate has launched its activities in the motion picture industry and will soon start production activities with some of the most popular stars of screendom on their list. To date, according to Mr. Callaghan's announcement, the Smith Syndicate has signed a long term contract with ZaSu Pitts.

To Announce More Stars Later.

According to Mr. Callaghan's announcement, Miss Pitts' first starring vehicle under the Smith Syndicate banner will be started in the early spring, as her present contract has a few months to run. In preparing for Miss Pitts' first production and assuring itself of obtaining the best possible material for her first starring vehicle, Smith Syndicate has requested Sarah Mason, the author of Brentwood Film Corporation's biggest success, produced under the direction of King Vidor, and some of the successes in which Miss Pitts has appeared under the Brentwood banner, to submit original stories to be built specially for Miss Pitts' characteristics.

Mr. Callaghan announces that within the next few weeks he will be at liberty to give out the names of other stars to be enrolled under the banner of Smith Syndicate.

Buffalo Realart Office Makes Hit with Insert

THE Buffalo office of Realart, through Manager Henry E. Wilkinson, made an arrangement with the Buffalo Courier and Enquirer during the week of January 5 through which Buffalo was plastered with Constance Binney one sheets. Signs of the star on automobiles, on news stands, in store windows, on the front and inside pages of the two papers mentioned, and everywhere the public looked the face of Constance Binney shone forth.

The arrangement made by Mr. Wilkinson and the two newspapers was the insertion of the latest photo in colors in every copy of the Buffalo Sunday Courier for January 10, which meant that over 125,000 Buffalo homes were greeted by the Constance Binney insert, strikingly colored and bearing the announcement at the bottom that Miss Binney's latest picture was "Erstwhile Susan." In one corner readers were furthered informed that the star was under the Realart banner.

During the week both papers used two and three full column ads, including large cuts of the star, which from a publicity standpoint were worth their weight in gold, especially so because these papers very seldom do anything of this kind. The Courier, in fact, has eliminated all special notices for the theatres.

Mr. Wilkinson could not have purchased some of the first page ads he received at any price. He made the arrangement at the psychological moment when the Sunday Courier raised its price from 5 to 10 cents and was looking for something to "give away," as it were, when the boost in price went over.

Select Title for Next Vitagraph Chapter Play

ALBERT E. SMITH, president of Vitagraph, has announced the selection of "The Vanishing Mask" as the title of the forthcoming Vitagraph serial, in which Joe Ryan and Jean Paige will be co-stars. Active work already has been begun on the serial at the West Coast studio at Hollywood, two episodes having been completed.

Like nearly all of the successful Vitagraph serials, "The Vanishing Mask" owes its inception to Mr. Smith. Cleveland Moffatt, the author and playwright, was recently engaged by Mr. Smith and he is now conferring with the author and producer, embellishing many of the scenes and writing in additional thrills and surprises.

Mr. Ryan has a double role in the new serial—one that gives him an opportunity to appear as a villain and the other as a "good man," a new role for him. This will be the first appearance for both Mr. Ryan and Miss Paige as stars.

Author of "Shore Acres" Trained David Belasco

THE actor-playwright, whose realism antedated Belasco's—under whom Belasco trained—began his career in amateur performances in Schenectady, N. Y., and obtained his first real part at the old Adelphi in Troy, of which his uncle was house treasurer.

James A. Herne, whose "Shore Acres" is now being produced for motion pictures by Screen Classics, Inc., with Alice Lake featured, was the youth of 20 who became stage-struck when he was working in a brush factory. Later he won recognition as one of America's great character actors and a playwright of note.

At the end of Herne's first five years of stage training he was playing second leads in Shakespeare and varied popular productions. Then he became a leading man for John T. Ford at the Holliday Street Theatre in Baltimore. When Ford opened his Washington Theatre, his young leading man delivered the inaugural address. It was on this stage, the following year, that a nation's tragedy—the assassination of Lincoln—occurred.

Arthur Zellner adapted "Shore Acres" to the screen. Rex Ingram is directing the screen production, under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

Edith Roberts Is Given Character Role in "Togs"

EDITH ROBERT'S, Universal's young star who, immediately after her success in "Lasca," announced that in the future she wanted to devote herself to comedy and character roles, will have ample opportunity to realize her ambition in "Togs," the feature just purchased for her from Izola Forrester and Mann Page.

"Togs" is said to be the most pretentious of any of the serio-comedies these writers have produced. Anyone who has read Miss Forrester's stories, which have not only appeared in book form, but in various leading magazines and newspapers throughout the country, and who is familiar with her manner of handling western material, will recognize her personality in the daughter of the western oil and cattle king, on whom the story centers.

Miss Forrester's personal acquaintance with Miss Roberts has made it possible for the young authoress to adapt scenes and events of the narrative in a manner peculiarly suited to the versatile, bright-eyed, fun-loving star who will create the character of the oil king's daughter, "Jerry."

Star of "The Dangerous Talent."

Margarita Fisher is the star in American's new super-feature, "The Dangerous Talent," in which she makes a strong appeal from the start in the role of a young girl facing the struggle for bread and butter alone in a big city, and matching her wits against the wiles of worldly-wise and unscrupulous tricksters. While the requirements of her part are not so much on the melodramatic order as in "The Hellion," which she put over so successfully, there is a closer, more intimate touch in circumstances which come nearer the experience of the spectator.

Rothacker Insures Employes.

Workers at the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company's Chicago studio-laboratory started out the new year each with a brand new life insurance policy. The policies were presented by the company. It is a Rothacker custom of a number of years standing to provide workers with annual life insurance, a policy increasing with each year of a worker's service.

United Buys Six-Part Film.

President J. A. Berst, of the United Pictures of America, announces that his company has bought the sole rights to "Women Men Forget," a six-part feature starring Mollie King, which was produced by the American Cinema Corporation. Supporting members of the cast include Frank Mills, Lucy Fox and Edward Langford. The production was directed by John M. Stahl.

Metro Official Leaves on Western Sales Trip

FOR the purpose of intensifying the sales drive on the second and third rounds of Metro's "fewer and better" pictures, E. M. Saunders, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, will start in a few days on a swing around the circle of the companys' Middle West exchanges. Mr. Saunders expects to be away for two or three weeks.

Making his first stop-off at Boston and then at Buffalo, the Metro sales manager will go to Chicago and thence to Cleveland, Cincinnati, Mineapolis, Denver and Salt Lake City, and return by way of Pittsburgh. He will map out vigorous sales and exploitation campaigns for the present round of Screen Classics, the forthcoming pictures, "Shore Acres," "Eliza Comes to Stay," "Alias Jimmy Valentine" and "The Cheater."

Meanwhile, B. F. Rosenberg has gone from the corporation's Salt Lake City exchange to assume the management of the Denver office as successor to C. Klein. Full management of the Salt Lake branch has been entrusted to G. L. Gloward, who has served under Mr. Rosenberg as assistant manager in the Utah city.

"The Phantom Melody" Is New Universal Release

UNIVERSAL releases for the week of January 26 include one special attraction, "The Phantom Melody," a photoplay which tells the story of a man who sends another to war in his place and suffers bitter remorse at his death. Monroe Salisbury is featured.

A Lyons-Moran one-reel comedy, "Bungled Bungalows"; a two-reel Century Comedy, "Brownie's Taking Ways," featuring Brownie, the Century "Wonder Dog," and a western, "Blind Chance," featuring Bob Burns and Peggy O'Dare, are some of the big features of the week.

The sixteenth episode of "The Great Radium Mystery," with Eileen Sedgwick, Cleo Madison and Bob Reeves, and the fifth episode of "The Lion Man," with Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin, are the serials for the week. Hearst News 57, International News 57, New Screen Magazine and Universal Current Events complete the program.

Another "Flying A" Special.

"The Dangerous Talent," the latest of American's new series of "Flying A" Specials, is a drama of city life, where poverty and riches clash in a big metropolis. The story was written to order for the American by Daniel F. Whitcomb and adapted by Lois Zellner.

Famous Players-Lasky Laboratory in Long Island Nears Completion

WITHIN a month the new laboratory of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, designed by and being equipped under the personal supervision of Frank E. Meyer, assistant secretary, will be in operation. Work has been pushed in order to relieve the congestion incident to working in four separated laboratories, two in New York and two in New Jersey. All the pictures produced in the eastern studios will be developed and printed in this building and all the latest modern equipment will be used.

In addition to the office and a complete research laboratory, this building will contain two separate and distinct film laboratories. On the first floor a machine developing system is being installed under the supervision of the Spoor-Thompson Company. Six machines will be working with a capacity of 30,000 feet of finished film an hour, or nearly 2,000,000 feet a week. These machines are interesting due to the fact that the printed film is inserted at one end of the machine and comes out at the opposite end ready for shipment.

Sixteen Storage Vaults.

Every conceivable modern convenience has been installed in this laboratory. There are sixteen full-sized vaults for the storage of film, laid out in sections of two each, with a good sized work-room in between; this making it possible not only to store vast quantities of negatives now in possession of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, but also to care for them.

On the second floor the installation will consist of the regular drum and tank arrangement where between 750,000 and 1,000,000 feet a week can be handled in addition to all the negative development and sample prints. A complete renovating department also will be installed, where all films sent in by exchanges for correction will be taken care of.

Emanuel H. Jacobs, who has been connected with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation laboratories for many years, as assistant to Mr. Meyer, will have actual charge of the Long Island City laboratory.

McCann Becomes Head of New Research Department

A RESEARCH department is the newest addition to the technical division of the production forces at the Metro studios in Hollywood. David S. McCann has been put in charge of the work by Clifford P. Butler, general superintendent of the studio. Mr. McCann has been attorney for Metro in Los Angeles for two years and will continue in that post. He is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania and a close student of history as well as of law. A library of 1,100 reference volumes of travel, history and science will be at his disposal.

"This department will answer all questions of fact or fiction relating to the setting of Metro productions," stated Mr. Butler, when asked to outline the scope of the research work. "That will include detailed information on customs or peoples, religious and social ceremonies, field of art covered by clothing and architecture, reason and use of special decorations, literary efforts, types of commerce and usual and unusual methods of business and methods of transportation and conveyance; in fact, all historical and commercial matters that may be of interest."

S. O. S. Call Brings Film By Aerial Mail Express

S. O. S.," pleaded the management of the State Lake Theatre in Chicago, and the call echoed in the office of the Universal, 1600 Broadway, New York. "Relief on the way by Aerial Express," wired Harry M. Berman, general manager of Universal exchanges.

The trouble occurred when, on Monday, it was found that the print of "The Great Air Robbery," to be shown at the State Lake Theatre was defective. The only other print within 1,000 miles of Chicago was in the New York exchange, and as soon as the telegram was received from Chicago the print was hurried to the post office marked via "Aerial Express." Thus the populace of Chicago was not disappointed.

Following the print, Lieutenant Joseph Weil, who conducts the aviation column for the New York Telegram and writes trade journal publicity for Universal, was rushed to Chicago to assist in exploiting the picture.

A Speedy Vehicle.

Edgar Franklin wrote "Everything But the Truth," but Lyons and Moran are expected to immortalize the story as one of the cleverest screen comedies the Universal Film Company has produced. The possibilities which Mr. Franklin's unusual plot offers these two popular comedians are almost unlmiited. That it should have been selected as their first five-reel picture is an augury of what may be expected from them later.

Bonn Would Fit in U. S. A.

It might be a difficult matter to decide upon the best special stunt publicity man in the film business in this country, but when it comes to Germany there hardly seems to entirely belong to Ferdinand Bonn, who reports credit as offering to represent the Kaiser during the trial proceedings by the Allies. Bonn it will be recalled has incurred the wrath of the monarchist party throughout the fallen empire for having impersonated the Kaiser in the production, entitled the "Fall and Rise of the German Empire," which film has been prevented from being shown through injunctions secured by the monarchist element in Germany. For this activity Mr. Bonn has been hissed on several of the German stages, but apparently his quick grasp of the meaning of stunt publicity could not restrain him from his latest offer.

Incidentally the trade will be anxious to know which of the several buyers now angling for the American rights of the banned productions will finally be able to offer the rights of "The Fall and Rise of the German Empire" to the waiting markets throughout the Allied nations.

Clarke Returns to Orient.

Horace T. Clarke, special traveling representative of David P. Howells, Inc., will, in February leave New York again for the Far East and Orient. This time, however, before returning to headquarters, he will visit the Balkans as well as many of the important centers in Europe. In all he will be gone not less than nine months.

On Eve of Return to England Godal Is Host at Dinner and Dance Party

EDWARD GODAL on the evening of Saturday, January 17, in the rose room at the Hotel Astor gave a dinner party to a number of friends. The occasion took on the form of a godspeed to the host, who announced his sailing for home the following Tuesday. Mr. Godal, who is the managing director of British and Colonial Films, Ltd., has been in the United States three months in the interests of his company. It is stated his mission has been successful beyond original expectations.

During his visit Mr. Godal has established many friendships. Confirmatory evidence of this was to be noted in the many expressions that the host soon would return to the "States." At the conclusion of the dinner, which was served at one rose and narcissus adorned oval table, Ricord Gradwell, president of the Producers Security Corporation, who has been closely affiliated with Mr. Godal during his stay here, called on the host for a few remarks, introducing him as an "American-Englishman."

Mr. Godal spoke briefly and feelingly as well as frankly. He did not conceal the fact that he had not had "plain sailing" in his dealings in the United States, but he declared matters steadily had improved as he got better acquainted with the men of the industry here.

Among those in attendance at the dinner were Mr. and Mrs. Tom Terriss, John Emerson, Anita Loos, David Kirkland, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Garrett, Arthur Butler Graham, George Newgass, Miss Sanderson, Joe Loew, Fred Newman, Joseph Dannenberg, Miss Saxe, Louella Parsons, J. E. McCafferty, Mr. and Mrs. George Blaisdell, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Apfel, Majorie Rambeau, Evelyn Greeley, Hugh Dillman and Mr. and Mrs. Bereaque.

Following the dinner there was dancing until a late hour. One thing more should be said: Mr. Godal is a hundred per cent host.

Buxbaum Rejoins F. I. L. M. Club.

At the last meeting of the F. I. L. M. Club of Greater New York, H H. Buxbaum became a member.

The club members gave Mr. Buxbaum a hearty welcome upon his re-entry into the club, he being a charter member when the club was first organized in 1916, while he was manager of General Film Company. The entrance of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation makes the membership in New York City, nearly 100 per cent. Tyrad Pictures Corporation was admitted same evening.

Waldorf Photoplays in Court.

Boston, January 20.

Waldorf Photoplays, Ltd., Boston, was petitioned into bankruptcy today at the instance of three New York creditors whose claims amount to $60,-103. The claims are for salaries said to be due the petitioners and for damages for alleged breach of contract.

The petitioners and claims follow: David G. Fischer, $49,697; Dixie Lee, $7,020; George M. Carlton, $3,186.

In the petition it is alleged that the company assigned its cameras, lights and studio equipment to Harry Kelsey and also assigned the contract for the play, "Kismet," to the new corporation, the Waldorf Photoplays, Inc., without consideration.

First National's Session

for a term of years, thereby preserving an independent market for independent stars and producers.

"This absolute right to legislate the broad interests of the franchise members is so construed that it remains in force for the full limit accorded by the members themselves in convention at Atlantic City last week so long as its conduct shall be in harmony with every precept of exhibitor independence and freedom from monopolistic dictation as to what an exhibitor may or may not members themselves in convention at Atlantic City last week so long as its force for the full limit accorded by the bers is so construed that it remains in book for the theatres he owns or controls. An attack by trust-seeking capital in any one territory, or in any number of territories, will avail nothing toward the goal of monopoly and domination.

Comment on Conditions.

"The condition which was named in a recent statement that the 'American theatre is going to hell' will find its greatest and most effectual stumbling block in the method of organization conceived, sanctioned and adopted by the exhibitors themselves, and put into effect in Associated First National Pictures. Any man is absolutely right when he says that the interests blanketed under the general term, 'Wall Street,' have been striving, strenuously, for months and months, to devise some means to the end that they could control production, distribution and exhibition.

"Their agents in the field brought the fact home to members of First National. The danger, and the real menace, with every certainty of realizing all of the dire possibilities frequently predicted, became patent to our members and their exhibitor affiliations, with the result that it grew to be a unanimous sentiment that they, as independent theatre owners, should take prompt and radical steps to protect their independence.

"They Shall Not Pass."

"It is freely prophesied that unless something is done Wall Street will be in complete control of theatres within three years. It may seem a vanity, or a brag, but it is genuinely true that the majority of the most important motion picture theatre owners and operators in the country have, within the week, so allied themselves and their properties that there is no longer a probability that this can come to pass."

Ratification by the exhibitor members of several important recommendations by the directors will, Mr. Williams says, make possible within the next three weeks a detailed announcement of the actual organization work of the new company and its method of functioning in relation to its present and future members, and, with regard to stars, directors and producers, on a basis which is an even greater degree of departure from present systems than occurs in its plan of rentals based on established percentages for theatres in relation to the negative valuation of each production released through the distributing company.

The Villain.

Look for "Tillie," Alice —It's Gona Be a Whizzer

By William J. Reilly

Little Tillie.

DEAR Alice:—Well, Alice, I suppose you want to know all about my new job, eh? I'm a press agent now—sometimes called a "P. A.," which is not to be confused with your Uncle Eph's Potentate Accountant degree in the Loyal Order of Reindeer.

There's a lotta talk about press agents, Alice,—how they herd upon society and don't do much to get their names in the program during Old Home Week,—but, of course, out in Bounding Rock, Mo., you don't hear much about them—although they do sometimes happen around. Like that circus fellow.

Six Big Things, Alice.

But confidentially, Alice, there's a lot of things wouldn't happen if it wasn't for us boys behind the little old w. k. ink-spillers. Take, for instance, in this film game. There are six indespensible things a press agent does about fifty weeks a year, and they are:

1. Get an exclusive interview with his boss as he takes the 5:15 for Rye.
2. Mention "Key Cities."
3. Take his general manager on a cross-continent tour.
4. Outline the production, foreign, and electric sign policies of his organization for the coming year.
5. Get over "marked emotional talent" and "intrigue and love."
6. Get fired.

But right now, dearie, I'm not doing any of these six things. I'm doing something which (if I was writing a story for the trade papers) I would describe as "the most unique innovation in the annals of filmdom." I'm writing jazz copy for a moving picture. And I'll tell you about it if you don't mind my slippin' into the vernacular now and then.

You remember that picture "Tillie's Punctured Romance" I took you to see the time I was busy weighing in my thumb with the prunes and ham clerking at the grocery store in Bounding Rock? Of course you remember, cause you always said it was a shame for them to kick that poor girl around like that. And your dad said is was worse'n the time Bud Wattle got butted by the ram north of his woodshed.

Well, anyhow, Alice, that picture, "Tillie's Punctured Romance," is being revived and put out by the Tower Film Corporation through W. H. Productions. And that's the picture I'm working on. And, of course, while I would exaggerate if this were a trade paper yarn, and use my adjective index, and quote Mr. Shepard for a six or eight reel interview, while I'm writing to you I can just use modest, everyday language. So I'll just say:

You Know These City Slickers, Alice.
This is Charlie Chaplin coming to take Tillie from her hoes and roses.

Built Like Bounding Rock's Skyscraper.
You see here how she sizes up against Charlie Chaplin and Mabel Normand.

Very Modest-Like.

Without a doubt, "Tillie's Punctured Romance" will be the super-extra, extra-plus, knockout money maker of the decade. It was the biggest dollar getter of its time and Tower Film Corporation has no hesitation in saying (How do you like that, Alice? Course, it's me who "has no hesitation in saying"), that "Tillie's Punctured Romance" will make more money on its second tour through Laughland (I like that myself, Alice—"Laughland") than it did on its initial storming of the box offices.

If I was writing a press story, Alice, I'd say how this big production has all the elements that go to make up the super-comedy of the age. But since I'm just writing to you, I'll say it has all the ear marks of a big leaguer.

What I mean by that, Alice, is that it has Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dressler, Mabel Normand and Chester Conklin in it and all as busy making laughs as Old Man Wunkins trying to keep his whiskers outa the cider pail at the huskin' bee.

Watch Out for These Slickers.

Isn't it awful, dearie, the way these city slickers come out into the country and take our fair daughters (that's Congresman Swank's line at the County Fair opening address—"the fair daughters of Huckster County") back to the wicked city? You remember that's what Chaplin, the slick city feller, does with Marie Dressler—Tillie—takes her away from her hoes and her rosebuds and her dog that fetches bricks and leads her to the big metropolis where he takes her away from her bank roll. One of these "cash and carry" persons, Alice—not much cash, but a lot of carry.

Tillie's cash was about the only thing of hers he could carry. You remember, Alice, she was built like that five-story skyscraper in Bounding Rock.

Then, of course, Tillie's uncle died (comes to life later, I'll tell you now, though) and left her a wagon load of money. Right away the city chap finds it out and leaves his own girl, Mabel Normand, and marries Tillie before she knows of her fortune herself. Then, as the best press stories say, comes the climax. It happens at the ball given when Tillie takes possession of her late uncle's mansion. Oh, Boy! The dance that Charlie and Marie do!

Give my regards to Harry Deepwater, the manager at the Happyhour in Bounding Rock and tell him I'm going to write him a letter soon, telling him how to boost "Tillie's Punctured Romance." I know he'll book it again, cause he used to talk about it every speech he made at the Harness Racing Association. Well, so long, Alice. Love to your mother. And how's your father's new scrapple steamer? BILL.

Inclined to Have an Itching Palm, Too.
And a leaning toward the Old Fellow's fat bankroll in "Tillie's Punctured Romance," distributed by Tower Film Corporation.

St. Pierre Hughes, Inspector of Penitentiaries in Canada. The moving pictures and the portable projection machines were provided by the Exhibits and Publicity Branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa. The latest change of this kind is the promotion of Ralph B. Quive, local manager for the Realart Pictures Corporation since this concern entered the field, to the management of the Detroit office. While loath to leave San Francisco, owing to his long and pleasant connections with the moving picture trade here, the change is nevertheless pleasing to Mr. Quive, as the new post is a very important one, and, in addition, he will be located near his mother and two sisters, from whom he has been separated for years.

Pittsburgh Paragraphs

Out of the Way—but Going.

ENTIRELY out of the way, in a location that showmen would frown on, situated on the top of a hill that makes it hard climbing when the ground is frosty, is the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium at Wilmerding, Pa. The theatre is modern in every respect, has a seating capacity of 600, perfect projection and everything that goes to make a first-class theatre. Secretary Yundt is the active manager and modestly admits that, while he knows nothing about "show business," he enjoys the confidence of the theatre-going public in the entire valley, and the merits of the cozy theatre are attested to by the capacity audiences that enjoy the programs.

Meyer and Dave Peeved.

Meyer Fine and Dave Schuman, owners of the Center Theatre, Cleveland, are so peeved at the city that they have filed suit for $1,500.

All because a fire truck, on the way to a blaze nearby, jumped the curb and smashed the front of the theatre, putting Meyer and Dave out of business at that location.

Fait Arrives From Brazil.

William Fait, Jr., one of David P. Howells, Inc., traveling representatives, has returned after a lengthy visit to Brazil. He does not expect, however, to remain long in New York, as there are matters in Mexico necessitating the presence of the Howells representative in that territory. Mr. Fait made a very creditable record in the South American republic and will unquestionably experience similar success in the republic to our immediate south.

Danziger on Second German Voyage.

A. J. Danziger, one of the early pioneers of the film business and an importer of foreign-made productions as far back as 1911, sails on February 7 for his second trip to Germany since the armistice. Mr. Danziger insists that this trip is not connected with films.

Kunzler Renews Famous Players Contract.

Juan Kunzler, general manager of the local offices of Sociedad General Cinematografica, has closed again with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for its exclusive representation in Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, as well as Spain and Portugal, for 1920. The deal means entire consumption of the Zukor organization's productions, including both the program and specials. Mr. Kunzler informs us that this transaction with Export Manager E. E. Scahuer represents approximately a million dollars. A complete and detailed announcement regarding this deal is expected from headquarters.

Fox Representative Returning.

Joseph Ryan, general manager of the Fox distributing activities throughout South America, is due for a visit to the home office the coming month. He is en route at this writing and already north of the equator.

Cambiasa Enroute to New York.

Cinematographica Sud-Americana, the well-known film buying house for Argentina, Uruguay, and Paraguay, and through a subsidiary for Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador, is sending a new buyer to the States, in the person of Sr. S. Cambiasa, now en route from Buenos Aires. It will be recalled that the last representative that this company had in New York was Sr. Jose Donati, who since his return to Argentina has left the emply of Sud-Americana and joined Roberto Natalini.

Brink Soon to Go to Europe.

Peter Brink who, in addition to serving W. W. Hodkinson as private representative, also handles the export activities of the productions for which the Hodkinson corporation controls the foreign rights, will leave for Europe soon on a trip, which will concern itself with Hodkinson export matters.

Luporini Offering Specials.

The Trans-Atlantic Film Corporation of America, one of the new Cibrario enterprises of which Ferdinando Luporini is export manager, is now not only offering a series of Trans-Atlantic "girl" comedies but is also just about ready to begin a campaign on a seven reel feature produced by the same firm. This production has been entitled "The Empty Triumph," a story of international application, featuring Edmund Breese and Claire Whitney. The Trans-Atlantic Film Corporation has just closed with a comedian of international reputation for an additional series of comedies.

Lay Off Dog Sled-Ice Bound Stuff on Michigan Peninsula Says Native

(Editor's Note: Robert W. Service might be able to get away with it, but we doubt it. Kipling has written feeling "snow" stuff—on homeless snows, the whine of the wind along the snow, the creak of snowshoes on the crust, a lot about the grounding berg and grinding floe but we doubt if even he could pull a single line on dog sled trails in the "ice-bound Upper Peninsula of Michigan."

And if Service or Kipling couldn't get away with it, what chance has a film salesman? The factor blocking any idle "ice-bound" reference to Upper Michigan is Dr. F. B. Van Nuys, director of the social service department of the Victoria Copper Mining Company, and manager of the Liberty Theatre.

Dr. Van Nuys here takes keen delight in refuting some statements made by A. G. Decker in a story published in our issue of January 3. Mr. Decker was selling film in Upper Michigan and took a whirl at the Kipling "snow stuff." It looks as if the makers of snow scenics had better lay off Dr. Van Nuys's territory.)

Victoria, "Ice-Bound Upper Peninsula of Michigan."
Jan. 8, 1920.

Via "Dog-Sled" to Moving Picture World:

AN adventurous explorer, one A. G. Decker, gives a history of his having found an undeveloped territory for moving pictures in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan. His exploits are recorded on page 68 of your issue of January 3, 1920.

In some ways he is very unfair to our country and in others he gives us more than our just dues. That we may be set right in the eyes of the world, one of the natives submits all the facts.

Here's the Decker Log.

Decker says he came up here and found our people "crazy" for amusement. That he needed no advertising, as word was passed "from mouth to mouth" that he was in town and that the natives flocked in their "dog sleds" to almost break their necks in paying him $1 for seats till the chairs were taken. Seventy-five cents for standing room and 50 cents for a chance to squeeze in.

He says snow falls here in October and from that time until the last of April we are "ice-bound," with no train service and the only means of transportation is by sleds drawn by dogs. He says it took three weeks for a letter to get out of here. He says we have never had anything but "tattered and torn" prints which the distributors hoped would get lost.

In justice to a people who make this God-forsaken country their home, let's get down to brass tacks. We will take Victoria as a fair specimen of the hamlets in which our people live and die. We have some three hundred men and their families here. We have a copper mine here with a pay roll of some $10,000 monthly. We have a Community Hall with honest-to-goodness "opery" seats in it for 250 people, and we have a genuine moving picture machine run by electricity—yes, honest, we have electricity here winter and summer.

We have a children's playground with modern equipment which cost us over $500. We have a fine ice rink and we get the ice by flooding it from our own water works. We have dances every two weeks and it costs us about $60 for the music. You see we have to have one dog sled to haul the fiddles, one to haul the musicians, one to haul meat for the dogs, for the darned cusses won't pull unless they are fed, and one sled to haul firewood to keep the meat thawed out.

You suggest that we might kill wild animals along the roadside to feed those dogs? Yes, we could do that, but the trouble is from the time the animal is shot till his hide is off he is frozen so stiff that it will be April before the carcass is thawed out.

Fur Bags for Lecturers.

We have a regular lecture course with noted lecturers once every two weeks. (We meet them, poke them in a fur sleeping bag, dump 'em on a dog sled and haul 'em in and most of them get here alive.) We have a regular athletic meeting once a week, with wrestling, boxing, bag punchin'—and, gee whiz, you ought to have seen our boys wade into that bag when they read the Decker exploits.

In 1919 we paid one distributor $508 for pictures, and every one of the prints was a good one. Last week we contracted for six at a cost of $20 a picture and at the same showing we will have a two-reel comedy, a one-reel news and an industrial, and we will charge our people 25 cents, with kids 10 cents, and we will make a little money at that.

Polished Floors, Too.

We have real houses with bathrooms, furnaces, and we all have polished hardwood floors, for, you see, we get so darned used to sliding around with the dog sleds that during the months we are holed in by being "ice bound" we have to keep in practice on the polished floors. Our men make good money, so what the devil is a dollar when Mr. Decker shows up? Well, that's how we are fixed in Victoria for amusement and I haven't mentioned the children's entertainments, the card clubs, the night school, etc., and a dozen more things. And, of course, we have the fun of dog sleddin'.

Calumet, a village of 40,000 frozen poor cusses, Houghton and Hancock, with 20,000 more, Marquette with as many more and hundreds of other hamlets, each have as much doing as we do, for you see we make lots of money up here and we are "crazy" for amusement. By all the gods, I have it, this man Decker must have had his show at Newberry, for over there nearly everyone is crazy as a bat. We have a modern insane institution over there, you know.

We have up here the Michigan College of Mines, one of the greatest of all scientific institutions, whose president, was one of, if the not the greatest, scientists who gave his services to the Government during the war.

Mr. Decker did not do us exact justice in saying it took three weeks to get a letter out of here. We all take the following morning exercise up here: "Assume sitting position, sway back and forward and concentrate on the mail service until we froth at the mouth." The facts are we have three solid vestibule trains in and out of here for Chicago every day and haven't missed a day for thirty years, winter and summer, but that doesn't mean our letters get out, so this man Decker probably told one truth in his article.

Finally, and seriously, we have several hundred thousand of as contented a people, as prosperous a people, as intelligent a people, as may be found anywhere. We have modern homes and we see the very best pictures money can buy. If Mr. Decker comes back here next summer—he was over here and tried to sell us his picture—if he ever comes back, I hope he will come and see us at our athletics and watch us—punch the bag.

Marquette Paper Adds to "Kid."

Since the above was put in type we have received from E. J. Butler, manager of the Ishpeming and Butler theatres, Ishpeming, Mich., a clipping from the Marquette Daily Mining Journal of January 17 on the subject of Mr. Decker's "Eskimo" story. Both the Daily Journal and Mr. Butler disagreed with Mr. Decker and we are sorry that space does not permit us to print the story, which was headed, "This Man Is Entitled to the 'Medal' for Informing the World About Cloverland."

Review Board Gives High Praise to "Pollyanna"

THE National Board of Review of Motion Pictures gave an enthusiastic vote that Mary Pickford's newest production, "Pollyanna," that they would a special report on the picture in which they will urge give it the highest possible rating for a children's picture. It is to be the first picture that Miss Pickford has ever made. "Pollyanna" was released on January 16 and is the first production Miss Pickford has made for the "Big Five."

"Miss Pickford never did anything better," is the general comment of the Board of Review. She is voted the title "gold star" indicating happiness and good cheer. Her gentleness characterizes even that of hardest criminals to fight, and her sweet philosophy answers their screaming to be glad about something that might have been worse, or worse than for most of us misfortunes may be.

Mendelson Joins Circuit Exchange

James L. Mendelson was recently appointed to specialize in the sale of short subjects for Film Booking Exchange, Inc., New York. Mr. Mendelson is one of the best known young men among the exchangemen in the industry. He recently completed an eight months tour of the most important exchange centers throughout the country, and Clinton Evans, for the Film Booking Exchange, was where he has been assigned since his discharge from the United States Naval Aviation Service.

Mr. Mendelson's activities will be chiefly confined to the sale of short subjects.

Our resources every week and honestly of the productions that are of advance showings. The reviews are not meant as a guide to the picture showman, but are merely intended to prove helpful to the public—to get more interesting and help in getting the worth of your money.

Ruth Dwyer Is Signed.

George H. Callaghan has signed Ruth Dwyer with Frank G. Hall and Ascher's Enterprises, Inc., to appear as leading woman for Benny Leonard in the serial, "The Evil Eye," now under production under the direction of J. Gordon Cooper, with Glenn Kunkel assisting.

Miss Dwyer was last seen in the leading ingenue role in the serial, "The Lurking Peril," co-starring Anne Luther and George Larkin.

Goldwyn Buys Unpublished Ben Ames Williams' Story

BEN AMES WILLIAMS, whose engrossing stories are a prominent feature of the Saturday Evening Post, is becoming a regular contributor to the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation program. His "Jubilo," starring the inimitable Will Rogers, is one of the outstanding screen successes of the season; motion picture rights to "The Great Accident" serial publication of which was recently completed, have been secured by Goldwyn, and now comes the announcement of the purchase by the same company of another Williams' story, as yet unpublished. It carries the attractive title of "The Man Who Had Everything."

The picture possibilities offered in the plot appeared so exceptional that no time was lost in closing arrangements with the author for the screen production. This is one of the few times that the work of a well-known writer has bee secured by a picture producer in advance of its publication.

"The Man Who Had Everything" has a modern New York setting with the conflict arising between a millionaire financier and his son, who is famous along Broadway for his wild extravagances. A beggar's curse, "May you always have everything you want," appeals to the financier as a possible means of bringing the wild youth to his senses. Henceforth, the son is surfeited with everything he wants, even to the companionship of the designing chorus girl who previously had been just beyond his reach. The inevitable reaction sends the boy to work for the first time in his life.

Theatre Doubles Booking.

Commencing with the eighth episode, the Ben Ali Theatre of Lexington, Ky., increased the booking on "Bound and Gagged," the Pathe serial of which George Brackett Seitz is author and star, from one to two day stands each week.

On the day the eighth episode of "Bound and Gagged" was shown, the management wired the Pathe exchange requesting permission to hold the picture over for the following day and a new contract calling for two-day showings for the remainder of the serial, stating that the theatre had doubled its patronage with the attraction.

Enthuses Over "Woman God Sent."

Larry Trimble, who is directing "The Woman God Sent," a Selznick production, has become enthusiastic over the picture and has declared he expects it to be among the best he has turned out. Zena Keefe is a member of the cast, and the picture is being made in the Selznick Eastern studios.

Gillen Originates Unique Scheme To Determine His Booking Policy

AS unusual a plan as has ever been used in deciding upon a booking policy has been disclosed by W. A. Gillen, recently appointed manager of the New Strand Theatre, at Binghamton, N. Y. The theatre, which will not be completed until the latter part of February and which will probably be opened the first week in March, will be undoubtedly the largest in Binghamton, and for the past several weeks Mr. Gillen and the house staff have been engaged in reaching a decision as to the booking policy.

The latter part of November Mr. Gillen procured the advertising and exploitation material of all December releases of the largest producers and distributors. These he turned over to the publicity and advertising men of the New Strand with instructions to prepare publicity and advertising on the same careful basis they would if the production was to actually be run at the New Strand. From the various exchanges he procured dates when these pictures would be shown in various parts of upper New York State.

Formed Judging Party.

During the month Mr. Gillen traveled all over the state in order to see every one of the productions in a first-run house. With him, he took his stage director, his orchestra leader and four other people, whom he called impressionists. He studied the pictures from the viewpoint of a house manager, and the other two house employes from their particular ends. Of the impressionists, two were there merely to judge the production from their own standpoints and the other two to report the impressions which a picture made on the audience, one observing the interest shown by the male patrons and the other the effect it had upon the women.

Judgment was then pronounced upon the productions according to army test researches. As an arbitrary standard for the grading of the productions, Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum" had been selected as portraying as many emotions as posible and was graded 100 per cent. in all departments. Mr. Gillen's observation staff was required to grade each production which was included in the test according to this standard, by marking it acording to the percentage they thought it was entitled to, on the basis that "The Hoodlum" represented 100 per cent.

System of Grading.

Thus, if the musical director had the opinion that the production allowed the same grade of musical exploitation he graded it 100 per cent.; if more possibilities existed he graded it above 100, or less he graded it below. The impressionists and the stage director, as well as Mr. Gillen himself, also graded the productions from their particular standpoint. These gradings constituted four-fifths of the final ratings, the other fifth being taken from the advertising and publicity exploitation prepared by the house staff.

While Mr. Gillen made known that this method had been employed in arriving at a decision of a booking policy, he did not give the standings received by the various productions tested, in announcing that the bookings at the New Strand had been awarded to the First National Exhibitors Circuit.

Cast Is Named for "Blind Youth."

According to a National Pictures announcement "Blind Youth" is to be one of the largest productions of the year. The more important members of the cast as announced are Walter McGrail, Beatrice Joy, Leo White, Ora Carew, Joe Swickard, Clara Horton, Colin Kenny and Claire McDowell.

Ted Sloman will direct this new production which has just been started at the Selznick West Coast studios.

Merger With Triangle Completed, United Promises Early Releases

THE delay in the release of a number of important productions handled by the United Picture Productions Corporation, which was due to the variety of details attending the taking over of all Triangle exchanges and the releasing right to all Triangle pictures, is now at an end and these features will be released immediately, President J. A. Berst of United promises the trade.

"Pending the settlement of negotiations," said Mr. Berst, "we deemed it advisable to delay the release of a number of productions. These include the elaborate six-part production of 'The Corsican Brothers,' the filmization of Alexandre Dumas' story, in which Dustin Farnum stars; 'The Eternal Mother,' a modern society drama starring Florence Reed; 'Women Men Forget,' a six-part production directed by John M. Stahl and starring Mollie King; the Cuckoo Comedies now being produced in Florida with Bobby Burns and Jobyna Ralston in the leading roles, and the two-reel comedies being made by Cisset Fitzgerald, the 'girl who made the wink famous.' All of these will now be released without delay."

Better Service, Bigger Saving.

Announcement of the deal, involving, it is said, in excess of $2,000,000, was made by President Berst and confirmed by P. L. Waters, president of Triangle.

"I am very much gratified with the arrangement we have just made," stated Mr. Berst. "Assuming control of the Triangle exchanges will enable us to deal directly with the 3,200 theatres that we serve. Not only will it enable us to give better service than was possible under the present method of operation, but we will be able to effect considerable saving which will go into more and better productions.

"Under the terms of our arrangement, we will control the distributing rights to all of the famous Triangle pictures, including the Griffith and Ince productions starring William S. Hart, Douglas Fairbanks, Frank Keenan, Norma and Constance Talmadge, the Gish sisters, Dorothy Dalton, Louise Glaum, Charles Ray and Olive Thomas and the famous Mack Sennett Keystone Comedies.

Good Distribution Facilities.

"This arrangement will be a direct benefit to every exhibitor member of the United Picture Theatres. The present revenue from Triangle pictures, with the additional revenue that will be made possible through greatly increased bookings that will result, will enable us to operate economically and efficiently. Up to the present time, United has been handicapped by the lack of proper distribution facilities. The control of the Triangle exchanges gives us our own distributing organization.

In all, there are eighteen Triangle exchanges, of which United will assume control. They are in Boston, Buffalo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Denver, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, San Francisco, Seattle, Detroit, Salt Lake City, Washington, New Haven and Milwaukee. New United exchanges will be organized immediately in Atlanta, St. Louis, Kansas City and Dallas, the company already operating an exchange in Omaha, and thus completing the organization.

The United selling force will be combined with that of Triangle, thereby reaching the maximum of efficiency. C. A. Smith, general manager of exchanges for Triangle, will continue in the same position for United. Wherever possible, the Triangle force will be kept and consolidated with that of United.

From United, through President J. A. Berst, comes two announcements of more than usual importance. These concern the deals which were mentioned as pending when the news of United's assuming control of the Triangle exchanges was given out.

Mr. Berst and Frank Hall, president of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation, have just signed contracts whereby United will handle the distribution of the Hallmark pictures through the new United exchanges (formerly Triangle), beginning on January 18.

In addition to this Mr. Berst announces that a deal has just been closed with the S. A. Lynch Enterprises by which United takes over the exchanges of that organization in Atlanta, New Orleans, Dallas, Kansas City, Omaha and St. Louis, thus making United a powerful distributing company, with exchanges covering all the important territories of the country.

The deal with the Hallmark company was closed late last week, and the arrangement covers the distribution of the Hallmark pictures, which means that United will handle a very excellent line of productions and in the future serve all the exhibitors who book the Hallmark pictures.

Review Board Gives High Praise to "Pollyanna"

THE National Board of Review of Motion Pictures were so enthusiastic over Mary Pickford's newest production, "Pollyanna," that they issued a special report on the picture in which they not only give it the highest possible rating, but in addition declare it to be the best picture that Miss Pickford has ever made. "Pollyanna" was released on January 18 and is the first production Miss Pickford has made for the "Big Four."

"Miss Pickford never did anything better," is the special comment of the Poard of Review. She is indeed the ideal "glad girl," radiating happiness and good cheer; her gladsome characterization puts real or fancied troubles to flight, and her sunny philosophy always finds something to be glad about, something that might have been worse, no matter what her trials or tribulations may be.

Mendelson Joins Circuit Exchange.

James L. Mendelson was recently appointed to specialize in the sales of short subjects for First National Exchange, Inc., New York. Mr. Mendelson is one of the best known young men among the exchanges of the country. He recently completed an eight months' tour of the most important exchanges throughout the United States for the Bulls Eye Film Corporation with which he has been associated since his discharge from the United States Naval Aviation Service.

Mr. Mendelson's activities will be chiefly confined to the sales of short subjects.

Our reviewers write fairly and honestly of the productions they see at advance showings. The reviews are valuable not alone as a guide to the picture showman, but are highly desirable as press notices for daily papers—to go with advertising and help in getting the worth of your money.

Ruth Dwyer Is Signed.

George H. Callaghan has signed Ruth Dwyer with Frank G. Hall and Ascher's Enterprises, Inc., to appear as leading woman for Benny Leonard in the serial, "The Evil Eye," now under production under the direction of J. Gordon Cooper, with Glenn Kunkel assisting.

Myron Selznick Back from Trip.

Myron Selznick, of Selznick Pictures, returned last week from a visit to the road show production of "Bucking the Tiger," a Selznick Enterprises legitimate venture which is being put in shape for Broadway presentation.

Mr. Selznick expressed himself as deeply impressed with the play, and is convinced it will make an excellent production. It is probable that Owen Moore will star.

Hodkinson Pictures Get Big Run in Indianapolis

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON'S first Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold" is the all-week headliner at S. Barrett McCormick's Mister Smith Theatre, Indianapolis, this week, and a short distance away J. Warren Kerrigan in "Live Sparks" is the all-week attraction at the Barton & Olson Colonial, thereby giving the Hodkinson distributed product fifty per cent. of the full week stand playing time in Indiana's biggest city.

Both of these big Indianapolis exhibitors are devoting more and more attention to the quality and the power of their newspaper advertising and both Mr. Hampton and Robert Brunton, producers, have benefited by the energy and force marshalled behind their attractions by rival exhibitors who watch each other's every move.

In addition, Mr. McCormick has booked "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" for the following week at Mister Smith's Theatre, his new showplace. The booking and playing of these three attractions by the Hodkinson Indianapolis office is a splendid indication of the receptive stage of big exhibitor minds toward fine product independently distributed.

Showmen Inquire of Future Blanche Sweet Productions

IT has been decided to create for Blanche Sweet a series of master productions, which will give full play to the dramatic power of the actress. Under the direction of Jesse D. Hampton the order has gone out that no expense will be spared and that no time limit shall be placed on the making of her pictures.

Early reports from Pathe branch managers and from exhibitors are coupled with queries as to the future Blanche Sweet specials, and this is taken to mean that exhibitors see the star value of Miss Sweet and are anxious to take advantage of the record her pictures have been creating.

The third picture of the series is "The Deadlier Sex," written by Bayard Veiller. This production gets away from the heavy dramatic effects of the previous work of Mr. Veiller.

Raises Prices for Republic Film.

The Goodwin Theatre in Newark, N. J., announces that it will establish a precedent the week beginning January 25. It will raise its admission price to 50 cents due to the productions it will offer that week.

"Twelve-Ten," a Republic release will be the featured production, and a Prizma feature "Memories" will be presented. The Prizma picture is also a Republic release.

Sol Lesser Well Under Way With George Beban's Production

SOL LESSER is taking time from his many other film activities to give personal attention to the details of production and planning promotion for George Beban's appearance in "One Man in a Million." This feature should, in all human reasoning, give Beban the best opportunity of his screen career—for Beban wrote it himself, for himself.

There will be a series of six pictures, exploiting Beban in the character he has been identified with on stage and screen—the human and sentimental Italian peasant. "One in a Million," the first of the lot, is now in process of completion at Los Angeles.

Mr. Lesser's first venture in the producing field is likely to be carried forward with the same force and enterprise Lesser has shown in promoting other firm's attractions on state rights lines. The Californian has widened his field until it includes all of North America, and his "headquarters" are points of migration for Lesser between the Coast and New York city.

Beban Supervises Direction.

Offices here and in Los Angeles and San Francisco, with a studio now building in Los Angeles; branches in Chicago, Kansas City and other justly celebrated "key cities" gives Lesser a distributing advantage that he will put behind Beban's appearances in "One in a Million"—as a Lesser-owned attraction. The Beban film will probably be state-righted along with Lesser's other interests.

John McDermott, under Mr. Beban's guidance, is directing the new presentation. One of the prominent figures in the supporting cast will be George Beban, Jr., a lad who is credited with being a "chip of the old block" both above and under grease paint. Every opportunity has been given the lad to attain prominence and endear himself to audiences that "One in a Million" attracts.

In casting the piece Beban has chosen the players with an eye to their fitness for the roles assigned to them. Helen Jerome Eddy—so greatly popular for her performance in "The Turn in the Road"—will be Beban's leading lady; others in the support being, besides Master Beban, Irene Rich, Lloyd Whitlock and Jennie Lee.

While "One Man in a Million" will not serve to more than recall 'The Sign of the Rose"—made popular by Beban on both stage and screen—those who delighted in Beban's work in "The Rose" will hail him in "One Man in a Million." The same style of sympathetic Italian will be carried through the new plot by Beban and his "bambino" will be the same cause of his mingled anguish and joy. The lad appeared with his daddy in "The Rose."

Beban, Jr., to Be Featured.

When it comes to exhibiting "One Man in a Million," Beban will take the successful Sol Lesser tip—which brought bathing girls to the rescue of bad business during hot weather on Broadway—and will travel along, making personal appearances under previously arranged schedules. Beban is a mighty good "curtain speaker"—his stage experience accounts for that—and his "personal appearances" will help "sell" "One Man in a Million" to both the picture showman and his public.

From all that comes to light in advance, George Beban and Sol Lesser promise a dual drive that is likely to be an effective asset to the independent field. The release date is not announced, but it is probably not very far away.

Marshall Neilan Asks Directors To Oppose "Snipe" Advertising

MARSHALL NEILAN last week issued a "call" to all motion picture producers and directors to attack the practice of injecting advertising in films and collecting at both ends namely, from the exhibitor and the national advertiser. Mr. Neilan, in emphatic terms, denounced this method of "cutting down the overhead" on a picture and pointed out that it represented a serious handicap not only to the motion picture entertainment industry but to the individual producers and directors as well.

"The time has come," said Mr. Neilan, "when producers must realize that the practice of injecting advertising in entertainment film is a dangerous proceeding, not only for the industry in general, but for them individually. I know of specific cases where pictures have been practically paid for in advance by national advertisers after which high rentals were demanded and obtained from exhibitors for the privilege of making good the producer's arrangement with the advertiser. It behooves the individual director to stand firm on this matter, for its continuance means the prostitution of his own best efforts.

Exhibitors Become "Wise."

"Exhibitors have become 'wise' and the producers who do not realize this are only inviting trouble of 'cutting down the overhead' on a production on the part of various prominent producers. It was quite evident that it could not continue. These producers became bolder with each succeeding picture, and in one particular case it is generally understood that the cost of production on a well-known film was covered by advertisers before the print reached the exhibitor.

"In a number of instances advertising has unavoidably crept into a picture. Producers must watch this with greater care than ever, for if they let such advertising pass unnoticed it will place them in the same class with the grasping ones who cannot make money fast enough through legitimate means.

"It is gratifying to note that exhibitors everywhere are denouncing this practice. They must do this in order to protect themselves. Advertising on the screen, to a limited extent, is very often good business for the exhibitor. However, it should work out this way and not merely represent good business for the producer at the expense of the exhibitor. The exhibitor should be the sole judge as to how much and how little advertising is to appear on his screen.

"Fooling the Public."

"People read advertisements in a magazine. In fact, many persons look at the advertisements first before reading anything else in the book. But when they are through reading the advertisements and sit down to enjoy a story, they don't want to read arguments why the hero uses a Jones hat or London garters. Nor do they want to be told in the middle of a tense chapter that the suit the villain wears was made by a well-known clothier. And so with motion-picture advertising in the theatre. If the exhibitor sees fit to run an advertisement on the screen, he wants it to be an out-and-out advertisement, but he does not want to 'fool the public' by showing a film that is supposed to tell a story but which flashes close-ups of a much advertised tire throughout the course of the presentation.

"Nothing is so unpopular with the American public as the realization that it is being fooled.' It is done every day in a hundred different ways, without a doubt, but as soon as the public is acquainted with the fact resentment follows. The reaction upon the industry as a whole would not be insignificant. The direct result upon the producer responsible and even the director whose name appears on the film would be serious."

Shore Goes to Monsoon.

The Monsoon Cooling System, Inc., has obtained the services of Norman J. Shore, formerly of the Typhoon Fan Company. Mr. Shore is a ventilating engineer of long practical experience in the cooling of theatres and is well-known among exhibitors and architects throughout the South and West, as well as in the East. Mr. Shore's skill and experience have been of great value to exhibitors all over the country in designing cooling systems to increase their hot weather business.

First Run Theatre Takes Second Run on Dwan Film

WHEN a first-run house takes a feature for the second run, there's a bag of money in the woodpile," declares Jay Emanuel, Realart manager in Philadelphia, who has come to New York with glowing reports of the thriving picture business in his city. According to Mr. Emanuel, the outlook for the industry in this territory has never been better.

"Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production, is the feature picture which caused the Victoria Theatre of Philadelphia to vary its strictly first-run policy by contracting for the film after it had been signed for the Colonial Theatre in Germantown, the residence district of the city.

Mr. Emanuel declares that this is one of the strongest sales arguments he has ever heard for a motion picture, principally because both contracts were signed before the picture was shown at either house, and because both parties were confident that the Mayflower photoplay would repeat its remarkable performances of the past.

Mr. Emanuel reports the construction of a special branch office building for the handling of Realart business at 251 North Thirteenth street. It will be ready for occupancy within a month. This report follows the announcement last week of the $100,000 exchange building for the company in Los Angeles.

Selznick Writer Writes for Stage.

One of Louise Winter's novelettes called "Princess Virtue" has been made into a picture and is soon to be produced on the legitimate stage it is announced. Louise Winter is the popular writer of short stories and novelettes who is now engaged in special work in the Selznick scenario department. She is at present busy on a scenario for one of the forthcoming Selznick special attractions.

Universal Appoints Chase.

M. A. Chase has been appointed district manager for the Universal exchanges in the northwestern territory. He has left New York and will make a trip of inspection to the various exchanges in his territory. Mr. Chase has been identified with the Universal for several years and recently returned to the United States after an extended trip in th Orient and Siberia where he introduced the Universal product.

Myron Selznick Back from Trip.

Myron Selznick, of Selznick Pictures, returned last week from a visit to the road show production of "Bucking the Tiger," a Selznick Enterprises legitimate venture which is being put in shape for Broadway presentation.

Mr. Selznick expressed himself as deeply impressed with the play, and is convinced it will make an excellent production. It is probable that Owen Moore will star.

Hodkinson Pictures Get Big Run in Indianapolis

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON'S first Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold" is the all-week headliner at S. Barrett McCormick's Mister Smith Theatre, Indianapolis, this week, and a short distance away J. Warren Kerrigan in "Live Sparks" is the all-week attraction at the Barton & Olson Colonial, thereby giving the Hodkinson distributed product fifty per cent. of the full week stand playing time in Indiana's biggest city.

Both of these big Indianapolis exhibitors are devoting more and more attention to the quality and the power of their newspaper advertising and both Mr. Hampton and Robert Brunton, producers, have benefited by the energy and force marshalled behind their attractions by rival exhibitors who watch each other's every move.

In addition, Mr. McCormick has booked "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" for the following week at Mister Smith's Theatre, his new showplace. The booking and playing of these three attractions by the Hodkinson Indianapolis office is a splendid indication of the receptive stage of big exhibitor minds toward fine product independently distributed.

Showmen Inquire of Future Blanche Sweet Productions

IT has been decided to create for Blanche Sweet a series of master productions, which will give full play to the dramatic power of the actress. Under the direction of Jesse D. Hampton the order has gone out that no expense will be spared and that no time limit shall be placed on the making of her pictures.

Early reports from Pathe branch managers and from exhibitors are coupled with queries as to the future Blanche Sweet specials, and this is taken to mean that exhibitors see the star value of Miss Sweet and are anxious to take advantage of the record her pictures have been creating.

The third picture of the series is "The Deadlier Sex," written by Bayard Veiller. This production gets away from the heavy dramatic effects of the previous work of Mr. Veiller.

Raises Prices for Republic Film.

The Goodwin Theatre in Newark, N. J., announces that it will establish a precedent the week beginning January 25. It will raise its admission price to 50 cents due to the productions it will offer that week.

"Twelve-Ten," a Republic release will be the featured production, and a Prizma feature "Memories" will be presented. The Prizma picture is also a Republic release.

Sol Lesser Well Under Way With George Beban's Production

SOL LESSER is taking time from his many other film activities to give personal attention to the details of production and planning promotion for George Beban's appearance in "One Man in a Million." This feature should, in all human reasoning, give Beban the best opportunity of his screen career—for Beban wrote it himself, for himself.

There will be a series of six pictures, exploiting Beban in the character he has been identified with on stage and screen—the human and sentimental Italian peasant. "One in a Million," the first of the lot, is now in process of completion at Los Angeles.

Mr. Lesser's first venture in the producing field is likely to be carried forward with the same force and enterprise Lesser has shown in promoting other firm's attractions on state rights lines. The Californian has widened his field until it includes all of North America, and his "headquarters" are points of migration for Lesser between the Coast and New York city.

Beban Supervises Direction.

Offices here and in Los Angeles and San Francisco, with a studio now building in Los Angeles; branches in Chicago, Kansas City and other justly celebrated "key cities" gives Lesser a distributing advantage that he will put behind Beban's appearances in "One in a Million"—as a Lesser-owned attraction. The Beban film will probably be state-righted along with Lesser's other interests.

John McDermott, under Mr. Beban's guidance, is directing the new presentation. One of the prominent figures in the supporting cast will be George Beban, Jr., a lad who is credited with being a "chip of the old block" both above and under grease paint. Every opportunity has been given the lad to attain prominence and endear himself to audiences that "One in a Million" attracts.

"In Old Kentucky" Breaks Records in Detroit; Theatre Dressed for Picture

DESPITE the below zero weather on the opening day and a raging blizzard on the second, "In Old Kentucky" broke all records at the Madison Theatre, Detroit, where it is being held over for a second week's run in defiance of the usual "one week only" policy of the house. Edwin Bower Hesser, of the Louis B. Mayer publicity forces, who has just returned to New York after visiting in Detroit, declared that he had never seen a picture "put over" in better style.

"They certainly did things up brown," declared Mr. Hesser. "The entire engagement was based on the fact that 'In Old Kentucky' is a racing story. The theatre was made to resemble a race track, inside and out. The entire theatre front was made to look like the entrance to a race-track—'main entrance' was over the door in three foot letters with 'In Old Kentucky Handicap' and Anita Stewart's name featured below it. The lobby itself was fitted up like a betting club—blackboards bore the entries and odds, with 'chalkers' changing figures from time to time.

Many Wait in Line.

"The ticket booth was also converted into a regular race-track type—orchestra seats were called 'grandstand' and balcony chairs were 'bleachers.' A seven foot white picket fence divided the lobby—pennants fluttered, and the house attendants were all in 'race' uniform. On the opening afternoon hundreds waited for over an hour to get in.

"Tom Moule, the theatre manager, must be given credit for a wonderful setting to the picture. His prologue consisted of a southern scene, with a troupe of colored singers, who rendered plantation songs, gave buck-and-wing dances and played craps in a manner that set the house wild with laughter.

Real Horses on Stage.

"The big surprise came during the race-track scene, when Anita Stewart is riding Queen Bess to victory. The picture dissolves out on the screen, another curtain is raised, and galloping horses are disclosed in a neck and neck race, with a background of race-track, made to move at the proper rate of speed by electrical effects. When these real horses were shown, galloping at a furious rate on their cleverly concealed treadmills, the house broke into cheers.

"The newspaper advertising put over by Howard O. Pierce, the Kunsky publicity director, was specially effective. It emphasized the number of spectacular features in the pictures—the great race scenes, Anita's death leap across a chasm, the Kentucky mountain battles and a number of other thrills from the film."

Many First Run Theatres Book "Lone Wolf's Daughter"

TALBOT'S America Theatre, Denver, and Tally's Theatre, Los Angeles, are the leaders among the larger first run houses of the country that booked and gave immediate play dates during the past week to J. Parker Read, Jr.'s second W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," starring Louise Glaum. Sustaining this judgment of careful exhibitor buyers is the judgment of S. Barrett McCormick in Indianapolis and a dozen other exhibitors controlling local theatres whose policies and bookings are watched closely by many other exhibitors within their zones of influence.

Beginning the week "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" began its metropolitan engagement at the Capitol Theatre, New York, receiving superb showmanship and a colorful musical setting all of which undoubtedly contributed to its welcome from the critics of Manhattan.

Among the latest bookings of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" are the Liberty, Fresno, Cal.; the Majestic, Wichita Falls, Texas; the Strand, Council Bluffs, Ia.; the Imperial, Zanesville, O.; the Orpheum, Youngstown, O.; the American, Pottsville, Pa.; the Wigwam, Reno, Nev.; the Capitol, Mason, Ga.; the Victor, McKeesport, Pa.; the Opera House, Oil City, Pa.; the Rialto, Glens Falls, N. Y.; the Kenyon, Pittsburgh, Pa.; the Columbia, Erie, Pa.; the Rialto, Newport, Va.

Special Campaign Book on "The Valley of Tomorrow"

A TWENTY-FOUR page campaign book for "The Valley of Tomorrow," in a two-color art cover, is just out for the use of exhibitors. The American Film Company has been issuing an extra size campaign book on each of the new "Flying A" super-productions, included with which is a special press sheet prepared to meet every advertising need of the town and city exhibitor, whether his theatre be large or small.

The contents of the campaign book include reproductions of all posters and other material issued on the feature; the complete story of "The Valley of Tomorrow," as well as a thumb nail synopsis; special suggestions to the exhibitor for exploiting the film; catch lines for ad and program use. There is a generous collection of snappy newspaper stories, both long and short, in many of which the superb settings of Lake Tahoe, the Truckee River and the Sierra Nevadas are strikingly described. There is a series of reviews under the heading of "After the Show Criticisms"; a page of "Current News Items," based on the idiosyncrasies of the players, and a well planned set of music cues.

Spanish Novelist Visits Metro West Coast Studios

VICENTE BLASCO IBANEZ, author of the novel, "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," is en route to California from New York to pay a visit to the Metro studios in Hollywood. Since his arrival in this country the brilliant Spanish writer has expressed a keen desire to see how American motion pictures are made, and his present trip is doubly significant to him, inasmuch as Metro will produce "The Four Horsemen" on the screen.

Metro purchased the screen rights to "The Four Horsemen" in the face of strong competition, and plans to translate the story to the silver with an all-star cast. The production will be made at the company's New York studios under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, director general.

Senor Ibanez is expected to arrive at Los Angeles before Director General Karger departs for New York. Senor Ibanez will return to New York and see "The Four Horsemen" taking shape for the screen. June Mathis, head of the Metro scenario department, is entrusted with the adaptation of the novel.

EQUITY'S POLICY

Equity's Policy embraces the production and marketing of BIG pictures only. Pictures that are known to the trade as BIG SPECIALS or Super Pictures that run anywhere from three days to three weeks. "Eyes of Youth" is that character of Special, and so will be Clara Kimball Young's newest production—"THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN" to be released soon.

In addition to the making of our own big productions, Equity is prepared to handle BIG SPECIALS from other producers. The only qualification demanded is that such pictures be really BIG; what the trade recognizes as extraordinary. To producers with pictures of that type Equity offers a distribution and selling service surpassed by no similar organization in the world.

We are prepared to take on such BIG pictures immediately and invite communication from producers who have productions of that calibre to offer. Elaborate advertising and exploitation backing for all BIG productions Equity takes on. Watch "Eyes of Youth" for your cue as to what Equity can do with BIG pictures.

Madge Kennedy Starts Work on Irwin's Story

"TRIMMED WITH RED," starring Madge Kennedy, was placed in charge of Director Hugo Ballin by Samuel Goldwyn and goes into production this week at the Goldwyn Eastern studio as the second picture made in the East this season.

Since Leroy Scott's Eminent Authors picture was shot by Paul Scardon, larger quarters have been secured at the Oliver studios and the first of seven elaborate sets for "Trimmed with Red" is completed. Miss Kennedy has arrived from Culver City, where she has finished Octavus Roy Cohen's first story for Goldwyn called "Two Cents' Worth of Humaneness."

The first picture for Goldwyn in which Madge Kennedy appeared was directed by Hugo Ballin in the days when productions were made at the Fort Lee studios. That was "Baby Mine." Mr. Ballin has also been closely associated with Miss Kennedy in California, where he won distinction as art director for Goldwyn at the Culver City studios. "Trimmed With Red" is a thrilling society drama based on Wallace Irwin's serial which recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

Alley of Metro Is Made Art Directors' President

THE newly elected officers of the Motion Picture Art Directors' Association were installed at the regular meeting of the association held recently at the Beaux Art studio in Los Angeles. It was decided at the meeting that the entertainment committee should arrange for an art directors' ball to be held in the near future.

Alfred W. Alley of the Metro technical department is the new president of the association. R. E. Sibley of the Lois Weber studio is vice-president; Erdras C. Hartley is secretary, and Sidney Ullman of Metro, treasurer. The election was held on December 18, and the installation of officers on January 2. Although the Art Director' Association is less than six months old it is a thriving organization with close to fifty members.

Changes Announced In O'Brien Cast.

Two changes have been announced in the cast of "A Fool and His Money," the fifth Eugene O'Brien production for Selznick Pictures. Little Dorothy Rescher will have the role of Rosemary, Countess Alines' daughter, instead of Mary Carroll, as formerly announced. Elizabeth Garrison is to appear as Mrs. Titus, in place of Betty Hutchinson, who fell on the ice while skating and broke her wrist.

Mystery Ends as Arthur S. Kane Forms Corporation Under Own Name

IT is Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, 452 Fifth avenue. This dispels the mystery which has surrounded the plans of Mr. Kane for the past six or seven weeks. He returned last week from a five weeks' trip to the Pacific Coast, and already executive offices are in full blast in the Knox Building, at the southwest corner of Fifth avenue at Fortieth street.

Kane Heavily Interested.

The name chosen, which pretty well tells the story of the business and aims of the enterprise, was selected by Mr. Kane's associates. It seems not to have taken long after Mr. Kane's return to New York to organize the concern, for in less than a week it was incorporated, installed in fully equipped offices and carrying on business. Arthur S. Kane is president of the new concern and is heavily interested in the compay.

It is not generally known that for the past three and one-quarter years Mr. Kane has been with the same firm. Because of the rapidity with which he put over different new enterprises he was constantly called upon to organize new promotions owned largely or wholly by his firm. Mr. Kane has been a member of Famous Players-Lasky organization even since September, 1916.

Future Is Big.

"I believe the best years of this industry are still ahead," said Mr. Kane at the headquarters of his new company. "And some of the best of these are in the immediate future. That is why I have organized Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation.

"My recent tour of the country has convinced me conditions never were so good in our business and the outlook is for constant progression. Builders, constructive thinkers are assured permanent places in this huge industry.

"In this institution, in which my associates have so largely honored me by attaching my own name, we shall endeavor in everything we do to merit the interest, confidence and attention of the entire body of exhibitors and the trade."

Mary Roberts Rinehart Leaves for Culver City

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART has jumped from Pittsburgh to Los Angeles to be present at the editing and cutting of her first picture for Eminent Authors made from her latest book, "Dangerous Days." The Goldwyn studio people are very much elated over the production which Reginald Barker has made for "Dangerous Days" and say that he has surpassed himself.

With Mrs. Rinehart's arrival in California, the number of Eminent Authors on the coast is raised to three. Gertrude Atherton went west to spend the winter and co-operate on her productions, the first of which is "Tower of Ivory" directed by William Parke.

The third Eminent Author is Gouverneur Morris, who has just arrived on the ground for the first time to see the visualization of his stories for the screen. It is expected that he will make three productions before spring. Mr. Morris is now on his way to San Francisco with Director Wallace Worsley to select scenes for his story, "The Penalty," soon to be put in production.

"The Penalty" is the third Goldwyn production made by Wallace Worseley and the second picture for Eminent Authors. His first picture will soon be released under the title of "The Street Called Straight." Director Worseley has also to his credit the first Jack Pickford picture for Goldwyn, "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come."

Garson Uses Seven Special Sets in Making "The Forbidden Woman"

WHEN Harry Garson began the production of "Eyes of Youth," and instructed his technical director to secure several tons of stucco concrete, mason's material and field stones, said technical director began deliberating as to what sort of an institution he had gotten into.

But when "Eyes of Youth" was completed and showed to more than the average advantage in point of scenic investiture, Garson's plans became simple.

His was a new idea: Build your sets of stone, brick and concrete and they will be stone and brick and concrete in the showing. "Eyes of Youth" contained no less than eight of this style of sets.

In "The Forbidden Woman," which Mr. Garson is now completing for Equity Pictures Corporation, are seven sets all built in similar practical style. They show an embassy at Paris, the famous Cafe de Madelaine, the Opera House at Milan, a home on the Hudson and two famous hotel lobbies in New York and Chicago.

Garson is sparing no pains to make "The Forbidden Woman" even more elaborate than its predecessor, and from reports from Los Angeles it is all that the newly inspired director of production anticipates.

Clara Kimball Young is in complete charge of dressing the sets, and has been accorded the use of the Bernstein collection of period furniture and bric-a-brac.

Canadian Distributors Association Makes Clair Hague First President

THE big men of the moving picture industry in Canada have organized the Canadian Motion Picture Distributors Association and the new body has become affiliated with the Toronto Board of Trade.

The new association was born at a meeting in Toronto on January 9 and, incidentally, the conference was attended by many of the leading officials of exchange corporations in the Dominion. The new organization will deal with legislative matters and will also be used to facilitate internal business arrangements.

Hague Becomes President.

It was the opinion of the meeting that the film business in Canada has grown so rapidly that general guidance of developments is essential. The new association will not absorb any of the various exchange managers' associations which are active in the large centres, but will use its influence to assist any of the local associations when necessary.

The first president of the association is Clair Hague, president and general manager of the Universal Film Company, Ltd., Toronto. The vice-president is W. F. Barrett, Canadian division manager of the Vitagraph company, Toronto. The secretary-treasurer is J. P. O'Loughlin, Toronto, representing Regal Films, Ltd.

Those Attending.

Among those who attended the organization meeting were L. Rosenfeld, Monarch Film Company; Vincent McCabe, Canadian manager of Fox Film Corporation; Harry Kauffman, Exhibitors Distributing Corporation; A. Berman, United Artists; C. L. Stevenson, Crown Features; I. Soskin, Sterling Films, Ltd.; William Allen, Canadian Exhibitors Exchange; George Weeks, Famous Lasky Film Service, Ltd., and L. E. Ouimet, of Montreal, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd.

Hulsey Books Allan Dwan Picture for Three Months in Twelve Houses

SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE," the Allan Dwan production, will have an aggregate run of three months in twelve southwestern picture houses of the E. H. Hulsey chain, following the contract just announced by J. C. Ragland, general sales manager for Realart Pictures Corporation.

A seven-day showing of the Mayflower photoplay in cities ranging in size from 10,000 to 100,000 is said to set a new Realart record in the movement for longer runs for feature pictures in moderate sized towns. The deal, which is declared by General Sales Manager Ragland to be one of the most significent and remarkable on the company books, was closed last week with Mr. Hulsey of the Southern Enterprises by Diaz Callahan, Realart manager at Dallas.

"The unquestionable box-office values of Allan Dwan's masterpiece," said Mr. Ragland, "is the basis upon which Southern Enterprises are venturing an entire week's showing of this picture in many cities which have heretofore not been considered fertile fields for the extended runs. The contract signed with the Hulsey chain is not only notable because it assures the tie-up of twelve big Texas houses for an aggregate period of three months, but because this deal is significant of the trend among the exhibitors for the longer run.

Week Runs in Small Towns.

"The contract which Southern Enterprises has made with Realart will give 'Soldiers of Fortune' a run totaling eighty-four days in twelve towns having a total population of 655,474 inhabitants. In San Angelo, Texas, with a population of only 10,321, the film is scheduled to run seven days at the Lyric Theatre.

"In addition, the film will run for seven days in Texas at the Queen Theatre, Galveston, which has a population of 41,863; at the Star Theatre, Denison, with a population of 14,779; at the Queen Theatre, Abilene, with a population of 14,238; at the Majestic Theatre, Austin, with a population of 34,814; at the Crescent Theatre, Temple, with a population of 13,000; and at the Victory Theatre, Waco, with a population of 33,385. Some of the largest cities which are keeping 'Soldiers of Fortune' for seven days are Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Fort Worth and Little Rock, Ark."

New Rolin Comedy "All Lit Up."

The new Rolin comedy, "All Lit up," which Pathe will release February 1, presents several hints by which enterprising cafe proprietors might profit, with the arrival of prohibition. "Snub" Pollard is the featured member of the cast with Eddie Boland and Sunshine Sammy assisting him.

New Vehicle Is Selected by Metro for Viola Dana

THE picture rights to "The Girl Patsy" have been purchased by Metro Pictures Corporation. It is likely that the play will be used as a starring vehicle for Viola Dana. "The Girl Patsy" is a comedy in three acts and was produced in New York City several seasons ago and also played with considerable success throughout the country.

The play was acquired on the recommendation of June Mathis, head of Metro's scenario department. Miss Mathis played in the original stage production in New York City before she became a scenario writer and considered it strong material for the screen and a particularly well suited vehicle for Viola Dana.

Viola Dana is now making "Eliza Comes to Stay," by the English actor-playwright, H. V. Esmond. It was adapted by A. P. Younger and is being directed by W. A. Howell, a newcomer on Metro's staff of directors. It is scheduled for release late in February. Viola Dana will then appear in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath." "The Girl Patsy" will undoubtedly follow this farce.

"Huckleberry Finn" Scores at Pre-Release Showings

THAT there is something akin to magic in the hold which "Huckleberry Finn" has upon the American people was amply demonstrated when William D. Taylor's Paramount-Artcraft production of the Mark Twain classic was shown simultaneously at the Sherman Theatre, Chillicothe, O., and the Loring Theatre, Riverside, Cal. for the first time in the country.

The engagement at the Chillicothe house was for three days starting the 13th. At its close, H. P. Wolfberg, Famous Players-Lasky's branch manager at Cincinnati, wired the home office as follows: That the picture had completed a three-day engagement at Chillicothe with complete success. All records smashed.

In Riverside, Cal., the success of "Huckleberry Finn" was no less emphatic, judging from the following telegram from Al Price, Famous Players-Lasky exploitation representation in Los Angeles:

"'Huckleberry Finn' absolutely breaks all box-office records at Loring Theatre, Riverside, on first day of showing. Criticism says: 'A better picture we have not seen. Just the proper note seems to have been struck and Director Taylor has done notable work.' Looks like the engagement will be a record run, and you know what this means in a community like Riverside."

"Just a Wife" to Get Coast Preview.

"Just A Wife," the first West Coast Selznick production for National Theatres which was completed recently, will be given a preview by dramatic critics of Los Angeles and the members of the cast and of the Selznick organization at one of the downtown theatres before the film is sent to New York. Invitations for the professional showing were sent out by Production Manager Rapf.

Browning Took Five Months to Make "Beautiful Beggar"

IT was in the month of August, 1919, that Tod Browning shouted "Camera!" for the first time on "The Beautiful Beggar," starring Priscilla Dean, and the new year of 1920 had already been ushered in before the same director gave his final order, "Cut!" on the last scene of this photodrama.

Nearly five months spent in the making, a large amount of money expended, nearly 4,000 actors and extras posed are marked up against this picture on the debit side of the Universal ledger. On its credit side are a story of great interest, based on H. H. Van Loan's creation, "The Virgin of Stamboul"; the inimitable acting of Priscilla Dean, supported by Wallace Beery, Wheeler Oakman, F. A. Warren, Edward Burns, Eugenie Ford, Clyde Benson, Ethel Ritchie and Yvette Mitchell; a subtle presentation of the atmosphere of the Orient and the fine direction of Tod Browning.

Forty-six sets were erected at Universal City for the filming of "The Beautiful Beggar"; whole sections of Constantinople and Stamboul were reproduced; palaces, harems, bazaars, coffee houses and dozens of other structures were erected.

Universal Says Klein Mismanaged Department

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company not only asserts that it was amply justified in discharging Harry D. Kline, who was manager of the production department of its studio at Universal City, but makes a counterclaim for alleged damages amounting to $150,000.

Kline entered into a contract with the film company to be manager of the production department for a period of two years commencing on May 14, 1919, at a salary of $300 a week for the first year and $500 weekly the second year. He was discharged last December and subsequently started an action in the United States District Court to recover $33,200, representing his salary for the unexpired term of the contract.

In its answer to the suit the film company alleges through its counsel, Stanchfield & Levy, that the plaintiff failed and neglected to manage the department in a diligent, efficient, proper, skilful, competent, or economical manner, that he wasted large sums of money in producing motion pictures and that he disorganized and destroyed the morale of the personnel of the studio.

Consequently the film company contends that it has sustained damages amounting to $150,000 as a result of the alleged negligence of the plaintiff and demands judgment against him for this amount and asks that his complaint be dismissed.

Hodkinson Announces Distribution of "His Temporary Wife" in February

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation of its distribution of a finely made production, "His Temporary Wife," produced and presented by Joseph Levering with an all-star cast inclusive of Ruby de Remer, Edmund Breese, Mary Boland, Eugene Strong, W. T. Carleton, Armand Cortes and half a dozen other well-known players. The story is by Robert Ames Bennet.

This picture comes into the market unheralded and containing many elements that will make it popular with exhibitors. It has besides its fine production qualities and standards the exploitation values that go along with half a dozen widely known star names.

"His Temporary Wife" is a society drama with elements of melodramatic action. Novel in its theme and strong in its enactment, this production is assured of exhibitor as well as public approbation.

More beautiful than she was in "The Auction Block," Miss De Remer reveals dramatic ability that will surprise her following. As for Edmund Breese, nothing he has done for the screen since his portrayal in "The Master Mind" compares with his performance in this production, and Eugene Strong, who distinguished himself in support of Blanche Bates in "The Border Legion," also appears to a splendid advantage in "His Temporary Wife."

George A. Bleich Plans His Fourth New Theatre in Owensboro, Kentucky

GEORGE A. BLEICH has taken a long lease on a site on Frederica street, Owensboro, Ky., and will at once remodel it into a picture and vaudeville theatre which is planned to be the finest in town. It will be opened early in the spring. The lot has a frontage of 43 feet and is 100 feet in depth. Work will be begun immediately, as no new foundations will be required.

Seven years ago Mr. Bleich built and opened the Empress Theatre, until now the finest of the three houses in town. His vigorous advertising campaign and his policy of always being truthful with his patrons brought the house into immediate favor and made Mr. Bleich known to exhibitors all over the country. More than once he has advertised that a coming attraction was not up to the standard and once he even offered an apology for a picture which had not come up to his ideas of what a picture should be. The "Bleich style" has become a synonym for frank advertising.

It was not long before he added the Queen and Grand, the opposition houses, to his string and for several years he has had control of the town's amusements, but so fairly has he dealt with his patrons that no opposition has dared to enter the attractive territory. His methods have so popularized amusements in Owensboro that now there seems to be a demand for a newer house and the as yet unnamed theatre is being erected to supply this apparent want.

The new house will have a capacity of 900, with one balcony, and will be provided with all of the modern refinements. It is a stop gap for a larger house, the site for which Mr. Bleich already owns, but which will require complete erection. In the present state of the building materials market he does not feel that it would be wise to undertake so elaborate a structure at this time, so the smaller theatre, made over from a double store building, will be built to tide over the present situation.

Robertson-Cole Points to Success Attained by "The Beloved Cheater"

FOLLOWING closely upon the announcement that "The Beloved Cheater," the Robertson-Cole special starring Lew Cody, has been booked to play the Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia, come the announcements that the picture was the hit of Detroit and turned thousands away in Atlantic City. What is true in Detroit, Philadelphia and Atlantic City, is also said to be true in almost every first-run house in the United States, for extra prints had to be made to supply the demand for extended runs and extra bookings on "The Beloved Cheater."

"Figures do not lie, and the numerous requests for extra bookings and the prices paid for the feature places 'The Beloved Cheater' in a class by itself," said A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. "When playing against the best first-run production, the Lew Cody feature broke all records and so great was the demand that extra runs were made necessary.

"I have received more unsolicited praise for this picture than for any other production ever affiliated with any organization to which I was attached. It is certainly marvelous the manner in which it has taken the country by storm. First-run houses in many cities bid for the picture where others were content to play day and date."

The following telegram received by Robertson-Cole from E. J. O'Keefe, of the City Square Theatre, tells what "The Beloved Cheater" did in Atlantic City: "'The Beloved Cheater' turned them away yesterday and today. Even bigger business than in the first three days. Am holding it over another day. The whole city is talking about it. 'The Beloved Cheater' is certainly a world beater."

"The Beloved Cheater" also went big in Detroit for three days.

Sid Grauman Is Profuse in Praise of Realart's "Luck of the Irish"

UNHERALDED by publicity and with hardly a line of advance notice, "The Luck of the Irish," slipped quietly into Grauman's million-dollar Broadway Theatre in Los Angeles, and solely on its own merits literally smashed across a screen victory in a pre-release showing, according to information received by Realart.

Sid Grauman, in hailing the Realart feature as a "triumph for the cinema art," was echoed by reviewers of the western city and by audiences who packed the big house and caused the well-known exhibitor to say in a telegraphic message to John S. Woody: "I don't think any theatre in this country is big enough to hold them."

Allan Dwan has adapted the film from the novel, "The Luck of the Irish," possibly the best known story of love and adventure by Harold MacGrath. With a new mass of human material at his command that spans its narrative from the colorful ghettos of Manhattan to scented, far-off corners of the mystic East, Mr. Dwan has created what Los Angeles reviewers have called "an ace among cinematic achievements."

Combines Two Vital Qualities.

From the reports coming from Grauman's Theatre, "The Luck of the Irish" stands out not merely as a notable product of modern direction, but as a compelling story that has annexed the box-office record for week's receipts at its premiere showing. The combination of the two vital picture qualities, artistic merit and box-office attraction, are definitely singled out of this photoplay by Mr. Grauman, who declares in his congratulatory message to Realart that "the exhibitor who books 'The Luck of the Irish' can congratulate himself as soon as the ink is dry on the contract."

Realart has made no previous announcement regarding "The Luck of the Irish," according to a statement from President Morris Kohn, because it is not the policy of the company to commit itself regarding pictures until after they have been put to practical test.

Test Proves Worth.

"This is the plan we have followed in the past," says Mr. Kohn, "and even now we would say nothing regarding the Grauman showing of 'The Luck of the Irish' except for the fact that the news has traveled so widely and the consequent requests for information have been so persistent that we have had no alternative. Our idea was to turn the picture over to an exhibitor and let him put it on without exploitation assistance, in exactly the way he puts on other productions. The result of the test was to demonstrate to us just what sort of picture Mr. Dwan had made."

National to Make 1920 an "All-American" Year

A YEAR of smashing success is predicted for the National Film Corporation of America, by Capt. Harry M. Rubey, president of that concern. It will be an "All-American" year, as productions will be confined to the screening of American stories by American authors. The first of this series is already in production, while active work on the second will commence within three weeks. A new serial will also be included in the 1920 program, with Jack Hoxie, who scored a hit with Ann Little in National's "Lightning Bryce" serial, in the stellar role.

The first of the National's 1920, which will be marketed about March first, is Opie P. Read's "The Kentucky Colonel," with an all-star cast headed by Joseph J. Dowling, Francis McDonald, Elinor Field, Lloyd Bacon, Fred Kohler, Thelma Salters, Gordon Griffiths and many others.

"Mary Minds Her Business," a Mildred Considine adaptation of the George Weston story now running serially in the Ladies' Home Journal, will be the second of National's "All-American" series.

As soon as Flanagan and Edwards return from a trip to the Pacific Northwest, where they are making personal appearances, work on their comedies will be resumed, Harry Edwards will direct.

Neal Burns has also returned to the National studios, with Mark Godlaine, his director. Mr. Burns was granted a two-weeks vacation over the holidays. The Burns Capitol comedies are released by Goldwyn.

"The Valley of Tomorrow" Has Unusually Able Cast

THE American's new photonovel by Stephen Fox, "The Valley of Tomorrow," screened at Lake Tahoe in the Sierra Nevadas, called for a cast of unusual ability. The story is conspicuous for vigorous action, one tense and absorbing event leading into another still more exciting. William Russell, in the leading role, is well endowed with the mental and physical equipment to admirably fill the bill. He has made an enviable record as a master of dynamic action, notably in the recent "Six Feet Four"; but in "The Valley of Tomorrow" he displays an ability of high order as an interpreter of strong emotional parts.

Mary Thurman is Russell's leading woman, in the role of a young Italian girl, devoted to her unworthy brother and in love with his enemy. Histrionic ability of the melodramatic order was required, and Mary Thurman handles the part with a reserve force and spirit.

The versatile Harvey Clark plays the venerable "Long John." Fred M. Malatesta, an Italian by birth, plays the difficult role of the guilty Italian singer and moral outlaw.

Others in the cast are Pauline Curley, Frank Brownlee, Frank Clark, Lewis King, a younger brother of the director, Henry King, and Jeffrey Sloan.

Aviatrix Joins Fox News Staff.

Marguerita La Barnette, a pretty flyer of San Antonio, Texas, is the latest addition to the staff of "camera correspondents" maintained by Fox News in its determination to give its patrons at all times, and as speedily as aeroplane, steamship and express train travel, the news of the world on the screen. Miss La Barnette's first assignment in this service was to take an aeroplane trip, thereby probably achieving the record of being the first camerawoman to obtain pictures aloft.

Cast for "Dad's Girl" Announced.

Republic Distributing Corporation announces the complete cast of "Dad's Girl," which was named recently as the first of a series to be distributed through Republic by Waldorf Photoplays, Ltd.

This David G. Fischer production is to feature Jackie Saunders, and in her support will be Jack Drumier, Kempton Greene, Charles Martin, Jack Raymond, Arthur Behrens and George M. Carleton.

"Taming the West" Brings on the Taming of the Stew.

"Taming the West" is the title of this Hallroom Boys' comedy recently released by Jack and Harry Cohn.

Completely Cast for "Woman God Sent."

It was announced that the large cast for "The Woman God Sent," being made at the Selznick Eastern studios in Fort Lee and the Bronx, is rapidly being completed. Casting Director Dick L'Estrange announces that Joe King has signed a contract with Myron Selznick, head of production, to appear in the leading role as Jack West, opposite Zena Keefe as Margaret Manning, a factory girl. Other additions to the cast are Warren Cook and Louise Powell.

Wittman Again Reelected Head of Bronx Exhibitors

THE Cinema Association of Bronx County, New York, held its eighth annual installation of officers and banquet on Wednesday evening, January 21, at Ebling's Casino, Bronx. The newly elected officers are John J. Wittman, president; John Bolte, vice president; Henry Coles, executive secretary; Henry Suchman, treasurer; Morris Sussman, three-year trustee and William Wilson, sergeant-at-arms.

President Wittman, who had been reelected for his eighth term, was presented with a silver service set of fifty pieces and Secretary Cole received a two carrot diamond ring as an evidence of the association's appreciation of their long and faithful services. No other local exhibitors' association has held together with so much harmony and has been the means of accomplishing so much good for its members than the Cinema Association, due almost entirely to its leadership and its initiative.

Besides the members present at the banquet many municipal representatives of New York added their testimony to the influence of the association in the Bronx.

"Everybody's Business" Indorsed by the Legion

PERHAPS the most valuable exploitation feature of "Everybody's Business" is the practical support which the posts of the American Legion are giving this film. In some sections of the country the Legion has gotten behind the film to the extent of purchasing prints for showing, and everywhere the members are giving all possible aid to the exhibitors of the film. This, taken in conjunction with the indorsement of many other patriotic societies, makes it a simple matter to put over this propaganda.

Bernstein Receives Flattening Offer.

I. Bernstein, known to the motion picture trade as "Bernie," has received an offer from one of the largest of the British producers to take charge of a large producing plant now under construction in Wales. Mr. Bernstein is at present production manager for the National Film Corporation of America. Prior to becoming associated with the late "Smiling Bill" Parsons, Mr. Bernstein was head of Universal City.

Felix Feist Is Cordially Greeted by Many Exhibitors in St. Louis

THE proverbial glad-hand was in evidence at the reception accorded Felix Feist, vice president and manager of sales for the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, by the leading exhibitors of St. Louis when the Goldwyn executive arrived on his coast-to-coast tour last week. In keeping with the purpose of his trip, which is to meet as many exhibitors as possible and get first-hand information on conditions as they exist in every territory, Mr. Feist spent much of his time at the various theatres of the city.

"My strongest impression of St. Louis," said Mr. Feist, "is the decided effort on the part of the local exhibitors to improve the presentation of their pictures. The change since my last visit is so great that it cannot help but be noted. Based on expressions of opinion from many exhibitors, I judge that while it is not their aim to build theatres larger than the Capitol in New York City, they aim to keep abreast of the times in every effort to place their theatres on the highest artistic plane.

Met Many Old Friends.

"I have talked to St. Louis exhibitors both large and small, and have carefully noted their opinions as to the type of productions which they desire. The Goldwyn policy has always been to weigh carefully the opinion of the exhibitor, and this will be even more in evidence, if possible, during the coming season."

Mr. Feist renewed acquaintance with many exhibitors, including Spiros Skoras, of the Skoras Amusement Enterprises; Louis K. Sidney, of King's Theatre; Hector Pazmezoglu, of the New Delmar and Congress theatres; Joe Erber, controlling theatres in East St. Louis, Collinville and Belleville; Louis Landeau, of the Washington Theatre, Granite City; George Pliakos, of the Criterion and Marquette theatres; Harry Greenman, of the Pershing Theatre; Elmer Briant, of the West End Lyric Theatre, and many others. Mr. Feist was disappointed at not seeing Frank Cella of the Cella and Tate Enterprises, and Harry Koplar, of the big Koplar circuit.

From St. Louis, Mr. Feist went to Kansas City, his itinerary calling for a stop in Omaha on January 18, 19 and 20; Denver on January 21, 22 and 23; Salt Lake on January 24, 25 and 26; Seattle on January 29, 30, 31 and February 1; San Francisco on February 2, 3, 4 and 5; Los Angeles on February 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10; Dallas on February 13, 14 and 15; New Orleans on February 16, 17 and 18; Atlanta on February 19, 20 and 21, and Cincinnati on February 22, 23 and 24.

Kremer Reports Sales on Chaplin Reissues

ANNOUNCEMENT of the sale of Essanay-Chaplin reissues, "The Champion," "Work," "Jitney Elopement" and "By the Sea" to First National Exhibitors of Louisville, has just been made by Victor Kremer, who is touring the Middle West in the interest of these productions.

Bert Lubin, special traveling representative of the Kremer organization also reports the sale of the above subjects and the four reel reissue of Chaplin's "A Burlesque on Carmen," to A. C. Bromberg, of Atlanta, for Louisiana and Mississippi. Mr. Bromberg has previously bought these subjects for Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, and North and South Carolina.

Mr. Kremer also disposed of Ohio rights to the four short Chaplin reissues to the Essential Productions Company of Cleveland.

Walsh to Occupy Municipal Studios in Long Island City Now Being Planned

R. A. WALSH will occupy the new Municipal Studios to be erected immediately at Long Island City. Mr. Walsh, who has been elected vice president of the new concern, returned to New York City last week after a short trip up-state.

Under his recent contract with Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, in which he is to make super-features for Realart distribution, Mr. Walsh is called upon to expand the scope of his work and will thus require larger facilities than are at present available in the East.

"Facilities for the large scale production of feature photoplays are very much limited in the East," says Mr. Walsh in a statement. "The Municipal Studios will fill a long felt want. I intend to stage super-features and will spare neither time nor money in the effort to produce big pictures.

Will Cost About $750,000.

"Long Island City is fast becoming the studio center of the East. Production is now moving to that territory in preference to New Jersey, which has long been the Mecca of eastern motion picture folk. The Municipal Studios will not only be the home of the R. A. Walsh Productions, but will also help supply the crying need of the hour—better studio facilities.

The Municipal Studios in Long Island City will cost approximately $750,000, according to present estimates. The extent of the plant is suggested by the size of the stage, which will measure 200 by 240 feet. Scheduled for completion by July 1, the Municipal Studios will not only serve as the producing center for the R. A. Walsh Productions, but will also be leased in part as the temporary home for companies without adequate accommodations for picture-making.

The president of the Municipal Studios is Albert Loew, Morris Kohn, of Realart, is a stockholder.

R. A. Walsh
Affiliated with Mayflower to direct for Realart productions.

Director Walsh is still engaged in outlining his course of production, and has begun assembling a group of capable assistants. Joseph J. Holton, who was with R. A. Walsh in many of the director's previous connections, has joined the playreading forces. Harold Horne has been engaged as an assistant director.

The photoplays which Mr. Walsh makes for Mayflower will be released by Realart Pictures Corporation as super-features.

Rupert Hughes' Picture Held for Second Week

AFTER the great reception of Rupert Hughes' picture, "The Cup of Fury" at the California Theatre in Los Angeles, Samuel Goldwyn was not surprised to receive a telegram announcing that by popular request the first Eminent Authors' production was continued for another week. Transferred to the Miller Theatre, it again proved its great box-office power.

Mr. Goldwyn also reports that Helen Chadwick's remarkable acting in "The Cup of Fury" has resulted in a five-year contract for her. Before going into motion pictures in 1916 Miss Chadwick was one of the most photographed girls in America, posing for many artists and especially for Harrison Fisher. She is a blonde. Her part as Mamise in "The Cup of Fury" affords an exceptional series of romantic and thrilling scenes, and her personality registers delightfully and convincingly.

The adventures of the girl in "The Cup of Fury" and the dramatic presentation of labor conditions in America give the picture lively and timely talking points. The direction of T. Hayes Hunter has kept the integrity and spirit of Rupert Hughes' story.

Besides Helen Chadwick, the cast includes Rockliffe Fellowes, Sydney Ainsworth, Herbert Standing, Frank Leigh, Clarissa Selwynne, Kate Lester and Florence Deshon. Abe Scholtz was the cameraman. It is safe to say no picture this year has been more widely expected and advertised in advance of its release by Goldwyn than "The Cup of Fury." It is the first of Eminent Authors' Pictures.

Praise for Anita Stewart.

Reports from the West Coast indicate that "The Fighting Shepherdess," Anita Stewart's next starring vehicle following "In Old Kentucky," is one of the best in which that dainty star has yet appeared. A preview of the picture has already been given in Los Angeles and exhibitors who attended were enthusiastic in their praise. Many pronounced Miss Stewart's work as even betten than that in "In Old Kentucky."

The regular release date of "The Fighting Shepherdess" through the First National Exhibitors Circuit will be about the middle of February, but some time previous it is hoped to have a print of the production in New York, to give a preview for the benefit of local exhibitors.

Nehls Aids Commerce Committee.

R. R. Nehls, general manager of the American Film Company, Inc., has just been lined up for usefulness on the subcommittee of the Chicago Association of Commerce, which covers amusements, theatres, both legitimate and moving picture, exhibits—exerything in fact, that might come under the head of entertainment. Mr. Nehls is well chosen as an authority in such activities, as he is one of the few men in the industry who know the motion picture industry from every angle since its pioneer days.

Announce Entire Cast of Dempsey's "Daredevil Jack"

THE complete cast and studio staff for the Jack Dempsey serial for Pathe, "Daredevil Jack," as announced by Robert Brunton, who is supervising the production, is as follows: Josephine Sedgwick, Hershal Mayall, Albert Cody, Ruth Langston, Frederic Starr, Frank Laning, Spike Robinson, Clyde Benson, Aggie Herring, Al Kaufman, Edward Hearn and S. E. Jennings.

Mr. Brunton has reported to the New York offices of Pathe Exchange, Inc., that all the studio and laboratory work on the first episode of "Daredevil Jack" has been completed and that stages assigned to the Dempsey company are now holding sets for scenes in the second chapter of the Frederick Chapin serial play. Jack Cunningham, who was engaged to scenarioize Mr. Chapin's story, turned in the final episode in continuity form a short time ago, and the entire script is now in the hands of Mr. Brunton for arrangements of the details of production.

H. S. Van Dyke, who is directing the scenes for the Dempsey serial, has, as members of his staff, Gus Peterson, chief cinematographer; Jack Okey, art director; Hal C. Kern, film editor, and Thomas K. Little, chief property man.

Film Men to Have Legion Post.

War veterans who are connected with the film business are to have their own American Legion post in Chicago. It will be known as Cinema Post. A charter has been applied for, and the granted charter is expected to arrive in Chicago in the near future.

An American Legion post for film folk was suggested at the annual dinner of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company workers several weeks ago. Watterson R. Rothacker appointed a committee to get busy. Later Mr. Rothacker suggested the name for the post.

George S. Stevens Joins Jans.

As Jenkins, an old family butler, is an important role in the first of the 1920 series of Jans Pictures, Inc., "Love Without Question," an adaptation of the popularly read novel, "The Abandoned Room" by C. Wadsworth Camp, B. A. Rolfe has selected George S. Stevens to portray the part.

Mr. Stevens has just completed a similar role in the Famous Players-Lasky Company's "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," and it is felt by the producers that Mr. Stevens' activities in "Love Without Question" will mean great things for the future success of this production.

Kolker Film Wins.

"The Third Generation," which was written and produced by Henry Kolker in the Brentwood studios as a Robertson-Cole Superior picture, is being well received by leading exhibitors throughout the country.

An all-star cast, including Betty Blythe, Mahlon Hamilton, Jack Pratt, Joseph Swickard and Edward Cecil, is featured in this novel production. Scenes are laid in old New York, in the metropolis of the present day and about a Western mine.

Ade's "Slim Princess" To Be Filmed by Goldwyn

THE SLIM PRINCESS," a popular comedy with music, has been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and will receive a screen interpretation. Negotiations for the picture rights were closed last week and soon plans will be formulated for a production that in subject and treatment promises to be unique in photoplay annals.

George Ade, an American master of satire, wrote the play in collaboration with Henry Blossom and it became a successful starring vehicle for Elsie Janis for several seasons, starting in the fall of 1910 under the management of Charles Dillingham. The play remained on Broadway for a full year before being taken to other large cities by the young star. After extended engagements in Chicago and Boston, "The Slim Princess" enjoyed a long career on the road during which practically every city and town of consequence was visited.

"The Slim Princess" received a great amount of steady publicity through a period of years, a fact that will simplify the task of the exhibitor when he comes to exploiting the picture. The theatre-going public is well acquainted with the title, which stands for entertainment of the highest caliber.

Releases Novel and Film at Same Time.

The publicity and exploitation connected with "Polly of the Storm Country," the first Mildred Harris Chaplin production under the banner of Louis B. Mayer, has been aided considerably by the fact that the novel of the same name will be published simultaneously with the release of the picture.

It is believed that exhibitors will profit greatly from this arrangement, as preference in window displays by booksellers is always given to the latest book, so that any exhibitor playing the production can be almost sure of a window display by his local bookseller without even asking for it.

Big Hotel Setting for Metro Film.

The lobby and mezzanine floor of a metropolitan hotel were built in six days on one of the commodious indoor stages at the Metro studios in Hollywood, by a force of forty carpenters and painters for "Alias Jimmy Valentine," in which Bert Lytell is playing for Screen Classics, Inc. The setting, eighty-five feet long and fifty-five feet wide, is finished in marble and bronze. With the exception of the electric fixtures it was constructed in the studio workshops, under the direction and supervision of Sidney Ullman and M. P. Staulcup.

Film Theft Committee Has Sapper Held on Charge of Stealing Paper

ANOTHER chapter in the war which the film theft committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is waging on suspected film thieves was recorded last week when Louis Sapper, charged with attempted grand larceny of $225 worth of paper from the New York exchange of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, was held in $1,000 bail for the grand jury by Magistrate Schwab in Essex Market Court.

Shortly before Christmas, Sapper is said to have approached Gilbert Ethier, a youth employed in the New York exchange of Famous Players-Lasky, with an offer to pay Ethier $100 to steal $225 worth of advertising paper from the exchange. Young Ethier went to J. Charles Davis, in charge of the advertising in the exchange, and told him. Davis turned the matter over to Harold Minot Pitman and W. C. Hawkins, chairman and special representative, respectively, of the film theft committee.

Trap Is Sprung.

Mr. Pitman and Mr. Hawkins communicated with detectives and a trap was laid. Young Ethier was instructed to turn the paper over to the man and receive the $100. He did as he was instructed and as the transaction was concluded the detectives arrested Sapper, according to the committee members.

Sapper was taken before Magistrate Schwab on Christmas morning and was released in $1,000 bail for a hearing the following week. At the hearing a continuance was granted until January 15, when Frederick E. Goldsmith, of the law firm of Henry J. Goldsmith and Frederick E. Goldsmith, which had been retained by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, convinced the magistrate that Sapper should be held for the grand jury.

In discussing the arrest of Sapper, Mr. Pitman declared that the film theft committee of the National Association was determined to eradicate the band of petty thieves which has been stealing film and accessories from exchanges, to be sold to exhibitors. The monetary consideration, in many instances, he said, is not great, but the thieves' practice of attempting to corrupt honest employes is dangerous and merits the keenest prosecution. Mr. Pitnam said that it is the aim of the committee to make an example of every person convicted.

National to Add Two More Producing Units to Roster

PRELIMINARY details for adding two more producing units to the National Film Corporation's roster have been completed. Active production on the first of the National's "All-American" series of features will commence about January 15, when the initial scenes of "Mary Minds Her Business," by George Weston, will be photographed. The film version is by Mildred Considine. It will run serially in the Ladies' Home Journal until March, when it will be published in book form.

The great success that Mack Hoxie scored in the National's 1919 serial, "Lightning Bryce," was the determining factor in choosing him to star in another serial, to be produced by the National during the opening months of the new year. The serial will be screen versions of a popular series of stories by an American author, states Mr. Bernstein, who adds that no expense will be spared

Fox Leaves Paramount to Join Fox in London

RICHARD C. FOX, who has been identified with motion pictures in various capacities since 1914, and has been one of the best-known exchange managers in the country, has resigned his post in charge of the Paramount Lasky office in Buffalo, and joined Fox Film Corporation.

Especially well-known in the middle west, Mr. Fox managed exchanges in Chicago, Milwaukee and Minneapolis before becoming Buffalo manager for Paramount. During the course of his exchange career he has made a host of friends among exhibitors everywhere, and has established an enviable reputation as a man whose judgment can be relied upon by the trade.

Mr. Fox is an Englishman by birth, and a master of several languages. His qualifications in this respect fit him well for the post to which he has been assigned by William Fox, for he will make his headquarters in London with Fox Film Corporation, Ltd.

His exhibitor friends in Buffalo tendered Mr. Fox a farewell dinner at the Iroquois Hotel in that city on the evening of January 15. The arrangements were in charge of Harold B. Franklin, manager and director of Shea's Amusement Enterprises, and Ira B. Mosher, vice-president of the Palace Theatre Company.

The employes of the Buffalo Exchange, of which Mr. Fox was in charge, have presented him with a gold fountain pen suitably inscribed as a token of their esteem.

Newspaper Critics Lavish Praise on Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna"

"POLLYANNA," th delightful character of book and stage which has been brought to the screen by Mary Pickford, in her first independently produced masterpiece for United Artists, has proven to be an absolute triumph in every sense and meaning of the word. Without dissension, every critic has proclaimed it her greatest.

Following are extracts from some of the press comments on "Pollyanna":

The New York Times said: "People have been asking recently, 'Why doesn't Mary Pickford grow up?' The question is answered at the Rivoli this week. It is evident that Miss Pickford doesn't grow up because she can make more people laugh and cry, can win her way into some hearts, and even protesting heads, as a rampant, resilient little girl than as anything else. These things seem demonstrated by Mary Pickford's latest picture."

The New York Sun said: "The audience that witnessed our Mary's latest picture at the Rivoli yesterday said to her as plain as hands can speak, 'We are glad that you're glad.' Despite a sentimentality as potent as onions, it is the best picture Mary Pickford has done in a long time."

The New York Tribune said: "We are glad that it was Mary Pickford that played 'Pollyanna,' for we should have hated anyone else in the part, or rather we should have hated the part with anyone else in it, but Mary never lets you forget that she is Mary and her humor is infectious."

The New York Evening Globe said: "Mary Pickford was the original 'Glad Girl' long before Eleanor Porter decorated the six-best-seller market with 'Pollyanna.' She has been uniting husband and wife, comforting disconsolate children, and brightening the corner where she is, ever since she first went on the screen."

The Boston American said: "Miss Pickford is ideally suited to the role of this little New England girl—everyone agrees that she is the one actress who would not have to act the part, being in reality the 'Glad Girl.'"

The Boston Traveler said: "Mary Pickford never appeared to better advantage than she does in 'Pollyanna.' She achieves her ambition and brings gladness to many people."

The Boston Herald said: "It has remained for Mary Pickford to make the character ('Pollyanna') speak louder than words through her acting on the screen. Mary Pickford's conception of the 'Glad Girl' is irresistible."

Excellent Press Book Issued on "Hawk's Trail"

BURSTON FILMS announces an "Exhibitors' Book" for "The Hawk's Trail" is ready, which includes sixteen pages of advertising and press matter with a separate press sheet inserted which carries newspaper stories and cut for exhibitor's use. The cover features the star, the same revealing the familiar King Baggot, together with the legend, "A Face as Well Known as the Man in the Moon." Portraits of the featured Grace Desmond and Rhea Mitchell also grace the cover while the title has for a background a hawk's feather.

Ready prepared advertisements for local use, name cuts, player portrait cuts, descriptive and illustrated list of advertising supplies, a two-page spread of reproductions of both stock and episode paper, extracts from the reviews, a page of stunts and a number of advertising slogans culled from the trade and dramatic press reviews, make up a list of contents that should prove of assistance to exhibitors.

One of the features is a page devoted to King Baggot, who during the fifteen episodes assumes ten different characters.

These are ten photographic poses of King in these characters. Another feature is a detailed synopsis of the first four episodes, which is followed by a generalization of the other eleven.

Pearl White's First Fox Film Nearing Completion

FOR all the hundreds of exhibitors who have run Pearl White films in the past and for all the millions of admirers of the star herself who have followed her work during her screen career, William Fox promises the most distinct surprise yet experienced.

This surprise, due to arrive on the first run screens in February, will be introduced in Miss White's first starring production for William Fox. "The White Moll" is its title, and it is an adaptation of Frank L. Packard's story of the same name.

Since the beginning of work on the production Pearl White has daily shown her director, Harry Millarde, as well as Mr. Fox, and Mr. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, various new angles her versatility as an actress. Messrs. Fox and Sheehan are more than elated over the prospects, and are confident that their selection of her first legitimate screen vehicle, Mr. Packard's story, will prove a happy one.

Work on the filming of one story is about completed. There remain but a few special scenes which require large settings. These finished, the picture will be ready for titling.

Mr. Millarde has secured some novel interior scenes, and with his photographer, Eddie Wynard, has developed some new camera angles. E. Lloyd Sheldon constructed the scenario.

In the supporting cast are Richard C. Travers as leading man, William Harvey, Walter Lewis, Blanche Davenport and Jack Baston, and the director uses a few hundred extra people for "atmosphere" in several of the large scenes, both interior and exterior.

Fox Yankeeizing Paris.

Visitors from France regularly take occasion to speak of the forceful publicity methods Abraham Carlos has adopted in behalf of Fox Productions throughout the French Republic. Indeed one traveler insists that Fox has so monopolized the billboards through out Paris and other metropolitan centers that Fox films are the main diet of the various film circles, conversation.

Between clever publicity, standard productions and the superior ability of the Fox representative, the aforesaid Mr. Carlos, this American producer's offerings occupy a predominent position in the minds of French exhibitors and public.

Buffalo Exhibitors Support Paper Declining Misleading Advertising

THE Buffalo Evening News has set an admirable example for other newspapers to follow by refusing to accept advertising on film productions telling objectionable stories or setting forth questionable material.

On Sunday, January 11, the Family Theatre, Buffalo, began a week's run on a production, "Are You Fit to Marry?" based on the Bollinger baby case. The advertising placed by the management on this picture was unusually sensational in character, so much so that certain prominent film men called on the chief of police and the mayor to have the film stopped.

Complaints were made to the newspaper against publishing the advertising on the picture, with the result that at a meeting of the heads of departments of the Evening News on Monday, January 12, Edward H. Butler, editor and proprietor of the News, ordered the advertising thrown out of the News columns and ordered an investigation to ascertain how the ads got into the paper originally.

To Segregate Audiences.

Mr. Butler not only rejected the Family advertising on this subject, but also gave orders that in the future all similar publicity should be turned down. In spite of complaints, the News was the only paper to reject the advertising, the remainder of the local papers carrying the ads throughout the week.

On Tuesday of the week there was a meeting of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers Association, at which the matter was discussed and a committee appointed to await on the mayor and police chief to object to the showing of any films whatever to segregated audiences. The Family during the week showed "Are You Fit to Marry?" only at certain performances to women and to men only at others.

The committee was composed of Ira M. Mosher, president of the association, and J. H. Michael, of the Victoria and Regent. The committee arrived at the city hall, and finding the mayor out of town, took the matter up with Commissioners John F. Malone and Ross Graves. These officials were told that the managers believed that if a picture was not good enough to show to mixed audiences, it was not good enough to be shown at all.

Misleading Advertising.

The committee was informed that the matter was one that would have to be taken up with the mayor and the chief of police, so a letter was written to both of these officials. The result was that a policewoman was sent to look over the picture. She reported that the film itself was really not objectionable, but that the advertising was misleading. One of the ads in the Monday, January 12, issue of the Buffalo Evening News contained a footnote setting forth that the picture was "positively offensive."

In spite of the exhibitors' efforts, the film was shown all week and the advertising continued in all the other Buffalo newspapers. Exhibitors are up in arms over the proposition and declare that if this sort of advertising continues they will have a hard fight on their hands when the big censorship battle comes up in the legislature this year. One leading exhibitor is authority for the statement that if the Family continues to place sensational advertising in the papers, the resignation of the manager from the local association will be demanded.

Capitol Books Metro Productions For First Three Weeks of January

THE new year started with an auspicious flourish at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, with three Metro productions booked for the first three weeks of the month of January and the likelihood that the fourth week would be taken by another. Officials at the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation were jubilant over this striking tribute to the quality and pulling power of the second round of "fewer and better" pictures.

Alice Lake Won Audience.

"Should a Woman Tell?," an original melodrama by Finis Fox, was billed for the week of January 4-10. This production presented to Broadway motion picture patrons a new dramatic personality in Alice Lake, the featured player. Others in the all-star cast included Jack Mulhall and Frank Currier. A big exploitation campaign consisting of the leasing in Manhattan of 150 billboards, including twenty-four illuminated stands, accompanied the presentation of the special.

Figures obtained by the Metro company from the management of the Capitol Theatre show that "Should a Woman Tell?" proved to be a phenomenal box-office attraction. Observation of the audience showed that the story possessed the power to hold the vast number in the big theatre in tense and hushed attention. The unqualified approval given this production by the management was the first actual test from the box-office viewpoint of the judgment of Metro officials in making this departure from the policy of using only tested novels and popular stage successes.

Second Nazimova Picture.

Nazimova in "Stronger Than Death" is billed at the Capitol for the week of January 11-17. This production was adapted by Charles Bryant from one of I. A. R. Wylie's novels of life in India, and was directed by Herbert Blache and Charles Bryant.

This is the second Nazimova production which has played at the Capitol since that theatre opened last November. "The Brat" was the attraction at the Capitol in its second week and scored a memorable success with the patrons.

For the third week of January the attraction will be the Metro-Classic picturization of "The Willow Tree," starring Viola Dana. It was adapted by June Mathis from the stage fantasy of old Japan written by J. H. Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes, and which scored a success.

It is likely that a fourth Metro feature, "The Right of Way," starring Bert Lytell, will be billed at the Capitol Theatre for the fourth week of January, rounding it out as a complete Metro month and establishing what is likely to be a record of long standing on Broadway.

Artistic Screen Novelty Permits Audience To Enjoy Announcements

AFTER several months of preparatory work, during which time it has been generally known that the film market is due for an innovation, the National Screen Service, Inc., at its present quarters, 1476 Broadway, New York, now explains its activities to the trade. An analysis of its proposition shows that theatre owners may now avail themselves of what seemed for a long time to have been the eventual thing, that was waiting for somebody to perfect it.

National Screen Service offers to theatres, both large and small, at a small price, a service in motion pictures by which the exhibitors can announce from the screen the attractions coming to their theatres. While the very mention of motion picture announcements may remind some of the so-called "trailers" which have been issued by various film producers only occasionally, the difference is really a big one. The National Screen Service makes an issue of the permanency of its service and the absolute removal of any limitations on it.

Artistic and Novelty Effects.

In the National's plan it makes no difference whether a theatre changes its program once or seven times a week. The exhibitor gets his own house opening in animation design, with artistic and various novelty effects, introducing the words "Theatre Presents." This is followed by day titles, such as "Coming Monday" or "Coming Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday," as the case may be, and this is always done in novelty art. A title now announces the production, the star and the producer, after which comes a scene from the photoplay announced or a close-up of the star.

On a service basis the exhibitor is thus enabled to always announce several shows ahead in motion pictures instead of through the methods now in use. National Screen Service has aimed its work at the present weakness in screen announcements, it being a common practice for the audience to walk out on the house announcements. By injecting novelties, art, variety and motion, it is pointed out that the entertainment value of the show is maintained, so that the house gets 100 per cent. of attention and correspondingly 100 per cent. of efficiency for its method.

Big Producers Unanimous.

National Screen Service is one of the few propositions in the motion picture business on which leading producers have gotten together. It is pointed out that the company holds exclusive contracts with the film producers, including the largest of them, such as Paramount, First National, Goldwyn, Selznick, United Pictures, Universal, etc. The company's personnel includes men whose names have been connected with big enterprises in the industry.

The company has leased spacious quarters on the fourth floor of the Leavitt Building and its extensive laboratory and assembling work will be done at the Stellar plant at Cliffside, N. J.

Leonard Supporting Cast Chosen.

Frank G. Hall, president, Hallmark Picture Corporation, Wally Van, supervising director, and J. Gordon Cooper, director for the Benny Leonard serial, work on which has been started at Hallmark's Thirty-eighth street studio, announce the following have been engaged for the principal supporting roles opposite the lightweight champion in his Hallmark serial, "The Evil Eye," the screen version of an original story by Roy L. McCardell: Ruth Dwyer, leading woman; Stuart Holmes, heavy; Marie Shotwell, Grand de Dame; Bernard Randall, the "Dopey Benny" part, and Mme. Marstino, female heavy.

Truex Announces Cast.

Associated with Ernest Truex in the cast of "Too Good to Be True," a Paramount-Truex farce-film presented by Amedee J. Van Buren, are Miss Cyprian Giles as the screen vampire, Vera Vernon; Reed Hamilton as "Ernie's" handsome rival in love, and fat Frank Lyons Page's scenario of an original story by Kenneth Webb.

Miss Giles was selected as the ideal player for the role of Vera Vernon, from a group of twenty-five aspirants. She recently returned to America from France, where she played in "Judex," a Gaumont serial film.

Métro Engages Milton Sills.

Milton Sills will be Viola Dana's leading man in "Eliza Comes to Stay," her new Screen Classics, Inc., production. Maxwell Karger, director general at the Metro studios in Hollywood, has engaged Mr. Sills for the part of "Sandy" Varrell, the naturalist and explorer, who adopts the orphan girl Eliza in the picturization of H. V. Esmond's well-known stage play. Mr. Sills was Miss Dana's leading man in "Satan, Jr.," one of her Metro program releases.

Names Two New Vitagraph Comedies.

Jimmy Aubrey has completed a clever comedy, which will be called "Maids and Muslin." This is his first comedy since "Dames and Dentists," recently released, and which proved to be one of his best features. Montgomery and Rock also completed a new comedy to follow "Throbs and Thrills." It will be called "Knights and Knighties,' 'and will have an early release.

Universal Doubles Number of Prints on Productions

EXHIBITORS will be interested in the announcement of Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges for Universal, that hereafter all Universal exchanges will be furnished with double the number of prints on all productions which have been sent heretofore. In commenting upon this change of policy, Mr. Berman said that while it will cost his company thousands of dollars, it will be a big advantage to the exhibitor, as it will permit the various exchanges to give earlier bookings.

"Under the old arrangement," said Mr. Berman, "it meant that many exhibitors in the smaller cities were obliged to wait weeks, and sometimes months for a booking, because there were no prints available. The idea of concentrating on the big city exhibitor, and letting the exhibitors in the smaller towns wait, is all wrong.

"After a picture has been shown in a big town, and has proven to be a money maker, the small town exhibitor immediately writes or wires for a date, if he has made a contract for the picture, or if he has booked it he wants to know how soon a play date can be given. Naturally he wants to play it as soon as possible in order to get the maximum benefit from the advertising given the picture in the big town, while that advertising is still fresh in the minds of his patrons."

Folder Shows Selznick Ads Used in Theatre Campaign

FROM the Selznick offices in New York this week is being sent to exhibitors all over the country a colored folder showing what Selznick Pictures is doing to back up the exhibitor in a great national advertising campaign. The folder contains a list of the publications reached through these mediums and copies of the "ads" in colors.

Every Selznick advertisement is written with the object of sending patrons to the exhibitors' theatres. For that reason all exhibitors are requested to read Selznick advertising carefully and send in their opinion.

Publishers estimate that each publication is read by, at least, four or five individuals so that the total circulation of Selznick advertising each month is between 30,000,000 and 40,000,000.

This is a tremendous amount of advertising and is only one of the many plans used by Selznick to get behind the exhibitor and give him service that will put his picture across. Interest in Selznick exhibitors does not end with the signing of the contract. Every day a force of men are at work planning and operating to make Selznick pictures a box office attraction.

Trenton Theatrical Interests Plan Large Investment in New Theatres

FRANK V. STORRS and Walter Reade, comprising the Trenton, N. J., Theatre Building Company and owners of the Trent Theatre and Taylor Opera House, have bought the Grand Theatre in South Broad street and have adopted plans for the erection of a new theatre to cost $500,000 on the site of the Taylor Opera House, and the construction of a Hippodrome Theatre in the centre of the city at a cost of more than $1,000,000.

The work of razing the Taylor Opera House will be started about May 1. The property will be used wholly for amusement purposes, and the new theatre will seat about 2,500 people. The Hippodrome Theatre will seat 4,500 people. The site has not yet been announced.

The company recently purchased the Trent and Taylor's, as well as the Trenton Poster Advertising Company, at a cost of about $500,000, it is said. Mr. Reade owns the Savoy Theatre, in Thirty-fourth street, New York City, and the St. James and Savoy at Asbury Park.

Loew Theatre for Newark.

Acting for the Frank G. Shattuck Company, of New York and Boston, Louis Kamm, Inc., has sub-leased to Marcus Loew, for sixty-three years, the property at 635-641 Broad street and 2 to 20 New street, and leased for the same length of time the property at 22 and 24 New street, Newark, N. J.

Mr. Loew will erect a theatre and mercantile building which, it is estimated, will cost not less than $1,000,000. The theatre will seat 2,500 persons. Thomas W. Lamb, a New York architect, has already begun drawing the plans. Tenants have been notified to vacate by May 1, when the present lease expires, so that work can be commenced and the edifice finished in time for the opening of the autumn theatrical season.

Plainfield, N. J. is also to have a new theatre. It will offer vaudeville and motion pictures. As soon as contracts are made Samuel Schwartz will begin the construction of a $275,000 house on the Terry property in East Front street, which he purchased on January 2. The theatre will seat 2,500 persons and will be operated by the Strand Amusement Company of New York.

Reading Interests Consolidate.

Carr & Schad, Inc., Wilmer & Vincent, the Stanley Company of America and Sablosky and McGuirk have affiliated their theatrical interests in Reading, Pa. It has been thought that the activity in Penn street real estate recently has been due to the competitive desires of these interests to acquire a suitable site for a new theatre. One of the immediate results of the amalgamation will be the cessation of activity in Penn street real estate, as they will no longer be interested in the acquisition of any properties for new theatres, it is said.

Carr & Schad own and operate the Colonia, Arcadia and Princess theatres on Penn street and are constructing a new theatre at Ninth and Spring streets, all for motion picture purposes. Wilmer & Vincent own and operate the Hippodrome Theatre for vaudeville purposes. Associated with them are Sablosky and McGuirk, of Philadelphia. These two last named firms are closely affiliated with the Stanley Company of America.

Ralph Ince to Appear in Americanization Film

LEWIS J. SELZNICK fired his first shot in the national Americanization campaign with the announcement that he has arranged for Ralph Ince to direct and appear in the first of a series of two-reel special Americanization features. The first one is to be known as "The Land of Opportunity.

In Washington, a few weeks ago, Secretary of the Interior Lane conceived the idea that no greater medium than the screen could be utilized in obtaining 100 per cent. Americanization of the United States. He had only to recall the great work of the screens of this country during the war.

Lewis J. Selznick, in a conference held with the heads of the departments of his various organizations and their subordinates, besought speed, action and concentration in carrying out the plans that were outlined at the Washington meeting. A number of stories were immediately submitted, and within forty-eight hours from the time the conference was held in Washington work had begun on the first of the series of pictures to be released through the Select exchange.

The story and scenario of "Land of Opportunity" were written by Lewis Allen Browne, and Ralph Ince plays a dual role. One part is that of Abraham Lincoln and the other part is that of an American radical. The story tells in two reels how the radical is converted back to American principles by the story of Lincoln's struggles and triumphs, as recalled by an old man who knew Lincoln personally.

The production will be finished in time for first-run exhibitors to obtain it for Lincoln's Birthday week in February.

Hyman Praises Mayer Film.

As an example of the comments from prominent theatre managers which are flooding the Anita Stewart offices in relation to the showing of "In Old Kentucky," the following excerpt from a letter from Edward L. Hyman, manager of the Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, should be of interest to exhibitors:

"Let me give my unsolicited praise to your masterful picture development of 'In Old Kentucky.' My praise is not based entirely upon my own opinion, but is in accord, I am sure, with that of the overwhelming patronage that witnessed its presentation at the Brooklyn Strand.

"'In Old Kentucky' is a film monument to the genius and art of Louis B. Mayer, the producer, Marshall Neilan, the director and Anita Stewart, the outstanding star. The attitude of Brooklyn Strand patrons so testified."

Goldberg Remains with the Frohman.

Since the announcement of the resignation of Jesse J. Goldberg, as secretary and general manager of Frohman Amusement Corporation, new developments have taken place. Negotiations between William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman corporation and Mr. Goldberg have resulted in the withdrawal of Mr. Goldberg's resignation and he will remain with that company in his former capacity.

"Old Kentucky" Road Show Closed by Screen Version

THAT the screen is more powerful than the stage is definitely demonstrated by the telegram received on January 21 by the Anita Stewart offices in New York City, to the effect that the road show of "In Old Kentucky" has been compelled to close its tour because of the triumph of its picture version.

The telegram was as follows: "Los Angeles Examiner this morning carries following news story on front page with scarehead: 'For the first time in history of theatricals a legitimate road show has canceled its bookings in this city on account of the tremendous vogue of a screen production of that same play. This is the case with C. T. Dazey's 'In Old Kentucky' the Anita Stewart film classic now running in its second week at Talley's Kinema Theatre. Last Friday word was received from Santa Barbara that a legitimate road show of this masterpiece had closed its tour at that city after receiving information that the Kinema Theatre presentation was playing to almost seven thousand people daily."

After twenty seven years of continuous touring the country by road shows of "In Old Kentucky," the present moment is the first time when there has not been a company playing.

Selecting Cast for "The Memento."

With two features completed and awaiting release Corinne Griffith is making haste slowly on her next Vitagraph picture, a five-reeel screen version of "The Memento," one of the O. Henry stories. The story is an unusual one, calling for unusual type of characters, and great care is consequently being taken in selecting the cast. The play deals with the life of a young and attractive vaudeville performer who is shown both on the stage and in rural surroundings. It is typical of O. Henry and has a typical O. Henry ending. Edward Griffith will direct Miss Griffith.

Miss Joyce Taking a Brief Rest.

Alice Joyce and her supporting company have returned from New Orleans, where they went three weeks ago to take the final scenes for "The Sporting Duchess," the Drury Lane melodrama which will be Miss Joyce's next Vitagraph special production. The trip to the Crescent City was necessary to get the race track scenes, so vital to the play, the northern tracks being closed for the winter. Miss Joyce will rest for a week or two before commencing her next feature. Just what it will be has not yet been definitely decided.

Lee Dougherty

Lee Dougherty Looks with Envy on a Coast Contract

THE snows of Fort Lee have mired Lee Dougherty's "goat." Twenty-three years in practically every branch of picture production have been spent by Dougherty in and around New York and he now pines for a contract that will take him to California.

Just lately, because World Films ceased to be a factor in picture production, Lee was forced to terminate an engagement that had lasted two years, during which time he was supervising film production and editing at World's Fort Lee studio. That's why he is at liberty to go to the coast, equipped by long experience to tackle almost anything that's to be done about a studio.

Nineteen years with Biograph was Dougherty's record before he cut loose from the firm with which he started in the business. Practically everything, from publicity to directing, has been "water on his wheel" during his years of industry in the film business.

Schwab Leaves Blackwell to Form Producing Company

DORE N. SCWAB, formerly production manager of the Carlyle Blackwell Productions, Inc., has just completed the organization of his own company, to be known as the D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc. The executive offices of the new company are at 511 Fifth avenue, New York.

Mr. Schwab has just left for the coast, where upon his arrival he will start preparations for the taking of a series of pictures. Negotiations have just been closed for the taking over of the most recently completed studio unit of the Hollywood Studios, Inc., Los Angeles.

A long-time contract has been closed whereby the D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc., obtained the exclusive services of a well-known star whose name cannot be divulged at this time. Active filming will be commenced February 15, but it is expected that Mr. Schwab upon his arrival in Los Angeles will give out full details of this new enterprise.

Worthington Leaves Haworth.

William Worthington has resigned the presidency of Haworth Pictures to join the newly formed Tracy Pictures, Inc., of which Arthur F. Beck is president and Charles C. Burr, secretary and treasurer, as director in chief.

Mr. Worthington will begin work early in February at the Leah Baird studios, Cliffside, N. J., on "The Bartlett Mystery," first of the fifteen Tracy stories to be filmed.

Soskin, treasurer and general manager, and Ben Soskin, assistant general manager. There are three exchanges in the Provinces of Ontario, New Brunswick and Quebec.

They are located in Toronto, Montreal and St. John. N. Volansky, who is the vice president, is in charge of the Montreal exchange; Jas. Davidson is manager of the Toronto office, while H. MacArthur is the head of the St. John branch.

E. P. Bernstein is head of the accounting and financial departments. The home office at Toronto is being enlarged. The entire first floor of No. 166 Bay street has been taken over and is now being converted into a well equipped exchange.

Burston Busy on Fourth Serial.

Louis Burston, who has not been seen on Broadway since May, is now busy on his fourth serial—all four having been produced within some sixteen months. The fourth, said to be nearing completion, is another Burston-Ford special, Francis Ford acting as star-director under the supervision of Producer Burston, president of Burston Films, Inc. Ella Hall is playing opposite Mr. Ford, this being the first serial in which she has appeared since her appearance some season ago with Robert Leonard in "The Master Key." It is understood that the "thriller" is Oriental in character and includes some lavish sets of that type.

Producing Company Secures Site.

The Diana Motion Picture Company of Los Angeles has secured one thousand acres of land in Contra Costa County, across the bay from San Francisco, and announces plans of commencing work on the erection of a studio at once. The officers of the company are Orrin Johnson, president; Crane Wilbur, first vice-president; Edward Coxen, second vice-president; and Judge L. R. Works, of Los Angeles, secretary-treasurer. The location enjoys exceptional scenic advantages and is located within the confines of the Greater San Francico.

You May Not Believe It, But—

Randolph Lewis is a grandfather. The director of publicity for Pathe may not—and does not—look it, but returns from Lakewood, Ohio, January 21, demonstrated that the youthful publicist had become a grandfather.

His daughter, Mrs. Roy Montgomery, rendered her father thus famous. This, incidentally, is a "first offense" for Mr. Lewis in the grandfather class. Congrats!

Fox New York Exchange Takes Bigger Quarters

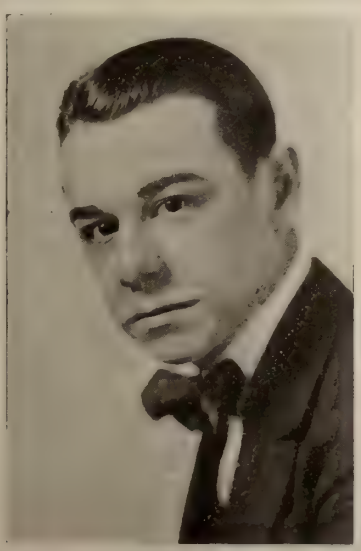
REMODELING of the entire tenth floor in the building at 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York, has been started by a crew of workmen in preparation for occupancy by the New York Exchange of Fox Film Corporation, now occupying part of the seventh floor in the same building.

Cut lumber, sections of metal partitions, glass door and special decorative railings have already been received on the tenth floor. The new home of the exchange will have a floor space of more than 8,500 square feet.

Most of this work, however, is being done after office hours and in the absence of the employes of the auditing and accounting departments of Fox Film Corporation; but according to present plans the exchange is to be established in its new home on Monday, January 26, at which time all the other departments of the corporation now in the building will have removed to the big Fifty-fifth stret building, now ready for occupancy.

To Celebrate With "Jazz."

To open his new offices in a fitting manner the executive of the exchange, Louis Rosenbluh, has engaged a jazz band of eight pieces which will greet the visitors on the opening day with selections from music of the day. Other features of the house-warming will be a Prohibition punch served by the women of the exchange and a general reception of exhibitors and friends by the sales staff.



Johnny Hines
Takes title role in "Torchy" stories produced by Master Films.

Burr Forms New Producing Company; Will Star Hines in Torchy Stories

THE formation of a new producing company entitled Master Films, Inc., is announced by Charles C. Burr, its president and general manager. The new unit has secured picture rights to many short stories of popular magazine fiction which have appeared in various well known weekly and monthly publications.

"We have purchased the rights to all of the well known Torchy stories," said Mr. Burr. "Torchy, as you know, is the fiery headed general grouch dispeller, the official little ray of sunshine created by Sewell Ford.

"These stories have been running for a number of years in the Sunday magazines and Sunday editions of leading American newspapers.

"As fast as each series has been completed, they have been put into book form. The first of these was 'Torchy,' followed in rapid succession by 'Trying out Torchy,' 'On With Torchy,' 'Torchy, Private Secretary,' 'Wilt Thou Torchy'?, 'The House of Torchy,' and the newest one is entitled 'Torchy and Vee.'

Hines to Portray Torchy.

"We have been more than fortunate in securing Johnny Hines, who fits into the character of Torchy as if it were built for him. Mr. Hines has just been starring at the Cort Theatre in the musical comedy, 'Just a Minute,' through the courtesy of Master Films, Inc.

"These pictures are going to have settings, direction and cast worthy of the highest class features on the market today. Neither effort nor money will be spared to reproduce on the screen, the visualization of Sewell Ford's most lovable character."

The office of Master Films, Inc., is 1214 Aeolian Building, New York City. E. J. Clode is vice president. For five years Charles C. Burr, the president and general manager, has been associated with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and its consolidated companies. In 1913 he joined the Paramount organization as exploitation manager of the South American Travel Series. He came from the New York Times, where he had been doing general promotion work for the business management of the newspaper.

Has Had Wide Experience.

Previous to his association with the Times, Mr. Burr was connected with the McCall Company, publishers of McCall Magazine. He later became associated with the Allen Advertising Agency. Mr. Burr has also been a member of the reportorial staff of several Philadelphia newspapers.

At the conclusion of his work in the interest of the Paramount South American Travel Series, Mr. Burr was placed in charge of the Paramount trade paper advertising. He was later made editor of the Paramount Pictographs, manufactured and distributed by Paramount, and after reorganizing that department, returned to the advertising department.

Following his activity in the advertising department, Mr. Burr was promoted to the position of assistant general manager of the department of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which position he held for two years, having resigned to head his own organization, Master Films, Inc., and to become general manager of Arthur F. Beck Film Productions.

"Copperhead" Available for Lincoln's Birthday

QUICK to act upon the suggestion of Franklin K. Lane, secretary of the interior, that the motion picture industry take immediate steps to spread from coast to coast, on Lincoln's Birthday, the story of America as best exemplified in the character and work of Abraham Lincoln, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is making a special drive for the showing of the Paramount-Artcraft Super-Special, "The Copperhead," in as many theatres as possible on or near February 12.

It was planned originally to release this picturization of Augustus Thomas' great American play, in which Lionel Barrymore plays the leading role, somewhat later, but in view of the prominence of the character of Lincoln and its part in creating the strong patriotic appeal which the picture carries, the release was moved forward to January 25, so that by Lincoln's Birthday its message of Americanism would be permeating, either through actual showing of the picture or through anticipatory exploitation, every section of the country.

The national advertising campaign for "The Copperhead" is already under way, and by the time the anniversary of the birth of the Great Emancipator arrives the full page advertisement of the production will have appeared in practically all of the thirty-one national publications which have been selected as the mediums for reaching 40,000,000. Incorporated in this advertisement and displayed in a border alongside the illustration is a copy of the resolution adopted last month by the joint committee on education of the United States Senate and House of Representatives.

Charles C. Burr
Heads Master Films, Inc., which will produce series of "Torchy" stories.

New Gibraltar Pictures Unit.

Announcement is made of the formation as a Gibraltar Pictures unit of the Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., to produce a serious of fifteen feature picture dramas based on the works of Louis Tracy, novelist and publicist, the first of which, "The Bartlett Mystery," will be put in work shortly at the Leah Baird studios, Cliffside, N. J.

Selznick Secures Many Stories for His Stars

STARS of the Selznick pictures are to have a choice selection of stories during the present year, according to an announcement made by Myron Selznick, who has garnered a long list of prominent authors to write for his stellar constellation. While all of the stories have not yet been selected, Mr. Selznick is able to announce sixteen in which the Selznick favorites will be seen before the first of the year.

They are: "Keeping Him Guessing," by Mrs. Idyll Shepard Way; "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrne," by Grace Sartwell Mason; "The Palace of Darkened Shadows," by Mary Hastings Bradley; "Proof of the Pudding," by Meredith Nicholson; "The Law Bringers," by G. B. Lancaster; "False Pride," adapted from "The Pride of Patricia," by Elizabeth Redfield; "The Magdalen of Mudville," by John Lynch, editor of the scenario department, and Edmund Goulding; "Mysterious Moments," by Izola Forrester and Mann Page, with the scenario by Ella Stuart Garson; "Pretty Thing," by Louise Winter, whose stories have appeared in several magazines.

Also "Jenny," by Roy Herninaman, noted English author, which was bought in England by an agent of Mr. Selznick; "Red Pepper," by Merle Johnson, the youngest writer on the Selznick scenario staff; "Prophet's Paradise," by O. S. Montayne; "Straight Down the Crooked Road," from "The High Stepping Young Iretons," by Bertha Runkel; "The Man Tamer," by John Barton Oxford; "The Point of View," from "Old Things for New," by Edith Ellis, and "The Honor of His House," by Alfred Latour.

In addition to the list announced, Alfred Payson Terhune, novelist, will write a serial for Selznick, and Charles Belmont Davis, whose stories of stage life are well known, has been engaged to write several stories. Jack Lait, the man who made the chorus girl famous, has also been engaged to write especially for Selznick.

"Human Collateral" Released.

"Human Collateral," Corinne Griffith's new Vitagraph feature, is now being released. Although it is based on "The Last Woman," a magazine story by Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey, who created Nick Carter and made his doings known to every youngster in America, it has nothing to do with the police or detectives. Rather it is a modern society play in which Miss Griffith has ample opportunities to display her histrionic abilities.

The supporting cast includes Webster Campbell, Maurice Costello, W. T. Carleton, Charles Kent and Alice Calboun, Lawrence C. Windom directed the picture.

Poli's New England Circuit Signs Realart Films, Ragland Announces

REALART star productions will be shown through the entire Poli Circuit in Connecticut and Massachusetts as a result of a contract signed last week. This announcement by General Sales Manager J. C. Ragland comes only one week after the news of Realart's booking twenty-two big theatres in the Keith and Proctor and B. S. Moss chains, and assures a splendid introduction of Realart products to many New England audiences.

The deal was closed with R. C. Miller, representative for Poli, by Lester W. Adler, Realart's New York manager. With the signing of the Poli contract, Realart's theatre connections are extended to every big amusement chain in the country, according to Mr. Ragland.

"Following only one week after the tie-up with Keith and Proctor and B. S. Moss," declared Mr. Ragland, "the contract with Poli indicates what our pictures have done to establish the reputation of quality among the men most influential in the industry. Telegrams have been coming in, telling in plain language what our products yield in financial returns. We have made it a point to publish many of these messages in the trade papers to give the industry an idea of the response which has met Realarts' first film offerings.

Many Vouch for Realart.

"Realart stands now on its record of definite achievement in the picture houses of the country. Its promises were made and its productions have made those promises good. Proof of this is ample, coming from many exhibitors, including A. G. Talbot, Denver; Fred J. Dolle, Louisville; Harold B. Franklin, Buffalo; Sid Gramman and Fred Miller, Los Angeles; Alden & Robertson, Globe, Ariz.; H. E. Skinner, Ogden, Utah; William Sievers, St. Louis; Jay A. Dundas, Sioux Falls, S. D.; N. E. Bernower, Canton, Ohio; George Mayne, Salt Lake City; Glenn Condon and Dave Harding, Kansas City; Fred Dahnken, Boston; Harry Goldberg, Omaha; L. M. Boas, Fall River; Harry J. Wendland, Fresno, and Tom Moore, Washington, D. C."

Mr. Ragland reports that contracts for productions featuring Realart stars have come in abundantly from all parts of the country. Among the prominent bookings are Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, New York; Strand, Cincinnati, I. Lisbon, proprietor; New Miller Theatre, Los Angeles, Fred Miller, proprietor; Rialto Theatre, New York; Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, Turner and Dahnken, proprietors; Majestic Theatre, Tulsa, Okla., Glenn Condon, proprietor.

Pioneer Will Specialize In Useful Publicity Helps

THE Pioneer, which is now putting the finishing touches to new press books, is convinced that, in spite of its past record for turning out useful press books, there is still a large field for improvement.

One departure which has been successfully carried out in a book just off the press is the printing of the notes for musical settings. All newspaper cuts are sharp line cuts instead of coarse half tones.

Careful work has been done in the preparation of the stories for newspaper use. The press matter in the new books has been condensed. Instead of being merely a string of words extolling the merits of the production, it has been written so that, if the name of the picture were eliminated, the subject matter would still interest the reader.

In one particular case the entire press section was rewritten four times before it was sent to the press. The press book has been a powerful factor in putting the exhibitor in the successful position he now occupies.

Famous Mounted Police Supply Fox with Details

SCREEN entertainments have been woven before now around a central character who was a member of the Canadian Royal Northwest Mounted Police. Fox Film Corporation has contributed a very successful share of these interesting and dramatic stories. But never, it is believed, in staging a production dealing with this world-famous force of men, has the research department of the Fox studios acquitted itself with the distinction just evidenced by the showing of "The Cyclone," starring Tom Mix, "the man who never fakes."

Vincent M. McCabe, Canadian district manager for William Fox, stationed at Toronto, got in touch with Comptroller Lane, chief of the Canadian Royal Northwest Mounted Police. Mr. McCabe secured one complete set of all uniforms worn by the "mountie," as he is familiarly known on his own side of the boundary line. From Newton W. Rowell the Fox studios received copies of all the rules and regulations governing the operations of the mounted force.

W. S. Jones, manager of the Fox branch at Winnipeg, contributed several histories of the mounted police, Major Fitz-Horrigan, chief of the mounted police in British Columbia, was interviewed on the subject by Sam Dembow, Jr., of the Fox staff, and added to the already great quantity of information on file at Hollywood.

B. R. Keller Represents National.

B. R. Keller, well-known film salesman in the northwestern territory and former assistant manager of the Select Seattle branch, has been appointed representative for the National Picture Theatres, Inc., in the Seattle territory. Mr. Keller has had several years of experience in the film business and he is now engaged in mapping out his district. He expects to begin a tour of his territory this week.

Salesman Knox of the Select Seattle branch has returned from a successful tour of his territory and is contemplating another in the near future. He reports excellent business.

Salesman Christoffer returned last week from a tour of the territory in southern California.

Selznick Outlines Extensive Plans To Surpass Previous Achievements

LEWIS J. SELZNICK, president of Selznick Pictures Corporation, announces extensive plans for the present year in which his organization expects to surpass anything it has before attempted. Not only has Mr. Selznick engaged a number of noted authors to write stories for his stars, but the organization will enter the serial field, get out a news reel, present a series of Americanization pictures and produce several big specials, beside making Herbert Kaufman editorials into screen form.

The major portion of Selznick pictures will be produced at the Fort Lee and Bronx studios until the big studio in Long Island City is completed.

Beginning shortly and continuing throughout the year, Ralph Ince will make special Ralph Ince Pictures, which he will direct and take part in. The first of these will be "The Law Bringers," by G. V. Lancaster, which will be made in Saskatchawan, Canada. Ince will also make a series of Americanization pictures, at the suggestion of Secretary of the Interior Lane, the first of which is a story of Lincoln called "Opportunity," written by Lewis Allen Browne. There will be a number of these stories.

Many Features Planned.

The Selznick stars will be presented in stories especially selected for them and adapted to their individual style. Olive Thomas, who is now working on "Glorious Youth," by John Lynch, Selznick's scenario editor, will next appear in "Jenny" by Roy Horniman. "Pretty Thing" and "Red Pepper" are also two pictures announced for Miss Thomas during the first half of the year. Other pictures being considered for her are "The Girl With the Faun's Ear" by Phyllis Dugan, "False Pride" and "The Magdalen of Mudville."

Eugene O'Brien seems to be gradually stepping away from the "handsome hero" roles and clever pictures are promised for this actor during the year. With his director, Robert Ellis, and leading lady, Ruby De Remer, and members of his company, Mr. O'Brien is now in the Thousand Islands making exteriors for his newest picture, "A Fooi and His Money," by George Burr McCutcheon. "Mysterious Moments" and "The Honor of his House" are at present the stories selected to follow his present picture.

Moore Now in the West.

Elaine Hammerstein will soon complete her latest Selznick picture, "The Woman Game," by Leighton Osmun and Frank Dazey under the direction of William P. S. Earle, and begin "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes" under the direction of George Archainbaud. Following this, Miss Hammerstein appears in "The Palace of Darkened Windows," "The Proof of the Pudding," by Meredith Nicholson, and "Keep Him Guessing."

Owen Moore, who is now at Selznick West Coast studio with Director Wesley Ruggles, working on his new picture, "Love Among the Chickens," by Pelham Grenville Wodehouse, has a promising list to offer for the year. "His Word of Honor," by Edgar Franklin and "Chivalrous Charlie," by May Tully, are announced to follow the Wodehouse picture, and James Montgomery, the clever playwright, is writing several stories especially for Mr. Moore.

Announce Big Specials.

Among the big specials to be made by Selznick this year are "The Woman God Sent," by Sophie Irene Loeb, already well under way with Zena Keefe in the leading role directed by Larry Trimble, who adapted the script for the screen. Another feature will be "The Prince of Pines," a powerful story by Willard Mack, which will go into production in a short time under the direction of Burton George.

The West Coast studios, under the direction of Harry Rapf, are producing, according to schedule, "Blind Youth," "Just a Wife," and "Who Am I?" for National Pictures, Inc. The West Coast studios will produce features by all-star casts exclusively this year.

Feature specials, which will be produced in the East, include the screen version of "Bucking the Tiger," "The Prophets Paradise," "Straight Down the Crooked Lane," "Jeanne of the Marshes" and "The Man Tamer."

Print of "Strongest" Speeds to Clemenceau

TITLED in French, ready to be shown to the man who conceived it a special print of "The Strongest" is speeding across the Atlantic to be shown to Georges Clemenceau and a party of his closet friends at the spacious projection room of Fox Film Corporation, 24 Boulevard des Italiens, Paris.

After the "Tiger of France" has approved it, the one and only photodrama by the late premier will be shown to the French senators and deputies at a special showing, and it is likely that the newly elected president of the French republic, Paul Deschanel, also will view it at this showing.

Does the soul of woman rule the world? That is the question that the great Frenchman answers convincingly. Is not love the strongest, the most mighty force in the world? Renee Adoree carries to the world the message of love in the Clemenceau story, and as she has won the hearts of her own countrymen, so should she win the hearts of all who see her as Claudia in "The Strongest."

Kremer Chaplins Active In Sales and Showings

THAT the popularity of Charlie Chaplin continues unabated among exhibitors and state rights purchasers is evidenced by the interest shown in the Chaplin re-issues, which Victor Kremer is at present distributing on a territorial basis.

These pictures, which include "A Burlesque on Carmen," "The Champion," "The Jitney Elopement," and "By the Sea," are being disposed of among buyers in the United States and Canada.

The latest sale reported is for "A Burlesque on Carmen," which has been acquired for Eastern Canada by Maurice Davis, of the Davis Amusement Enterprises, of Montreal. Mr. Davis maintains offices in Montreal, Toronto and St. Johns, and it is his intention to place additional salesmen in these three exchanges to handle the Chaplin comedy.

Bert Ennis states that the date of the premiere of "Carmen" at the Rialto Theatre, New York, has been changed from January 18 to February 1. "A Burlesque on Carmen" has been running for two weeks at the Rialto Theatre Chicago, presented in conjunction with the girl show prepared by Bert Ennis.

The premiere of "Carmen" in Pennsylvania will take place next week, under the direction of Marcus and Lechuese, of the Twentieth Century Film Company. Following the Quaker City engagement, the attraction will be "road showed" throughout Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern Jersey.

Sam Morris
Vice-president and general manager of Selznick Pictures.

Williams to Return to West Coast.

Earle Williams will return to Vitagraph's West Coast studio on February 1 to make the prologue scenes for "Capt. Swift," the drama by C. Haddon Chambers. These are laid in the bush country of Australia and it had been planned by Tom Terriss, who is directing Mr. Williams to make the scenes on the waste and sandy shores of Long Island between Amagansett and Montauk Point. The action, however, takes place during the torrid weather on the deserts and it was felt that justice could not be done to the scenes during the cold weather here and they will consequently be made in California. Mr. Terriss will not go West with Mr. Williams and the latter will direct the scenes himself, assisted by Chester Bennett.

Mr. Williams will not return to New York after completing "Capt. Swift" at the Western studio. His home is in Hollywood and he will continue his activities at the Vitagraph studio at that place.

Criminal Identification System Suggested by Ince Is Considered

CRIMINAL identification by motion picture is attracting the nation-wide attention of police officials and men prominent in scientific research as the result of a series of experiments which have been under way at police headquarters in San Francisco. The evolution of criminal identification and the part motion pictures will play in its perfection is credited to Thomas H. Ince, who, following months of experiment at the Ince studios in Culver City, proposed the modern methods to police headquarters in San Francisco.

Identification by motion pictures will without doubt result in the capture of many notorious criminals who have thus far succeeded in escaping apprehension. Officials point out that almost invariably a man is apprehended on account of some physical characteristic that is peculiar to him. Numerous individual habits and traits are relied upon mainly for capture.

Would Use Theatre Screens.

While the Bertillon system of cranial and torsal measurement is of definite aid in proving a man's identity after he has been captured, it is admitted that the system is of questionable value in seeking a suspect.

Under the Ince system, modern methods will be employed in transmitting facts relating to any fugutive. Within three hours after the police have learned the identity of the man wanted, his animated pictures may be projected on the screen of every theatre in the community, and several days later prints of the pictures will be in the possession of police headquarters in all cities for screening before the police and detectives throughout the country, and, as needed, in foreign lands.

It is also planned to enlist the co-operation of leading theatres, which will be asked to project pictures of any man or woman wanted before the audiences regularly in attendance.

Herbert Kaufman Weekly Is Picturized Editorial

SINCE the start of the nation-wide advertising of the Herbert Kaufman Weekly, considerable interest has been manifest in just how the actual producing of these pictured editorials is being carried on.

At present two of the one-reel subjects have been completed and the start of the third is expected soon. The first one is "Little Red Riding Hood." This is a pictured version of the Kaufman editorial on the tragedy of a young girl, brought up under strict parents, who comes to ruin through ignorance.

The scenes are entirely separate tableaux, each distinct from the other—part literal, part symbolic—each illustrating a title taken verbatim from the Kaufman editorial. The first shows the young girl in her home with pious, religious parents who have reared her on a code of "thou shalt nots." No explanations or heart-to-heart talks of the actual fundamentals of life have been given her. Eventually she runs away.

Almost without sequence and with parts unrelated, this method of handling the pictured editorial results in a pictured story that is powerful in its appeal. The essence of the gripping editorial is not lost and the pointed editorial of the typed page is made even plainer through the eye.

The second Kaufman Weekly is titled "The Faded Butterfly" and has in its leading role Mme. Haline Bruzovna, famous Polish actress. Warren Chandler has the leading male role and little Helen Reinecke has the role of the daughter.

Gets Exclusive Release on Dozen More Chaplin Films

THE success attained by the Republic Distributing Corporation in its sales of the Charlie Chaplin pictures it has been releasing for Kleine, has led that company to obtain the exclusive distribution of twelve more Chaplin comedies.

These are the productions made by the comedian for the old Mutual Company, which have been controlled by Clark-Cornelius and which embrace some of the best two-reel subjects in which Chaplin appeared.

They include "The Floorwalker," "The Vagabond," "The Pawn Shop," "The Rink," "The Adventurer," "Easy Street," "The Firemen," "The Count," "Behind the Screen," "The Immigrant," "The Cure" and "One A. M."

The initial selling of these pictures has been in the hands of Hallmark, and up to date the first three mentioned have been released. The next to be released will be "The Rink," which is scheduled for issue on February 12. The rest will be released at intervals of six weeks.

Motion Picture Advertising Exhibited.

L. V. Schneider, who for some time past has been director of publicity and exploitation in Indiana and Kentucky for the Universal Film Company, has left the company temporarily to become director of publicity for the convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World to be held in Indianapolis from June 6 to 10. Mr. Schneider is widely known among exhibitors in the Indiana and Kentucky territory.

The convention of the associated advertising clubs will bring to Indianapolis manufacturers, business men, merchants and advertising men from all parts of the world. Advertising and its close relation to any business, large or small, as the power behind sales will be discussed.

An exhibit of motion picture advertising probably will be arranged to be held at the same time the convention is in session. Some of the best motion picture advertising ever used in trade or newspapers will be shown in a separate exhibit.

"The Superman" Has Thrills.

Reports from the Hygrade Feature Film Co., of Charlotte, N. C., on the five reel feature, "The Superman," now being distributed on the state rights market by Tower Film Corporation, indicate that the picture is proving popular. "The Superman" is a "thriller," and pleases audiences that like excitement.

Conick, of New York, represented Zukor in arranging the deal at Montreal.

GLADISH.

Hayakawa Has Dual Role in "The Beggar Prince"

AFTER winning additional screen laurels by his artistic impersonation of the "hatchet man" in Robertson-Cole's release, "The Tong Man," Sessue Hayakawa steps from that dramatic role to a dual role in his forthcoming production, "The Beggar Prince." Those who have seen it declare that his work by far surpasses his achievements attained in "The Tong Man," and declare that it will be a big box-office attraction.

Hayakawa's Best Year.

The year just brought to a close has stamped Hayakawa as one of the most finished artists of the silent drama, and so overwhelmingly has been his success that Hayakawa's name is used in lights at almost every first-run house in the United States. On account of this enviable record, many of the best known exhibitors have contracted for every picture turned out by Hayakawa for Robertson-Cole.

The Japanese star was born in Tokio in 1889. He was educated at the University of Tokio and at the University of Chicago. His stage career was with the Imperial Japanese Stock Company, Tokio.

Starts Exploitation Drive on Holmes and Thomas Films

UNITED PICTURE EXCHANGES have begun an exploitation campaign on the Taylor Holmes and Olive Thomas specials which were produced under the Triangle banner. These include Taylor Holmes in "Three Black Eyes," "Taxi," "A Regular Fellow" and "Upside Down." Olive Thomas in "Totan," "The Follies Girl," "Love's Prisoner" and "Prudence on Broadway."

The acquisition of the Triangle Exchanges by United Picture Exchanges has opened a clear field of new exploitation for these features. United announces that there are still many first runs to be had and is making a special offer to exhibitors on the Olive Thomas and Taylor Holmes series.

Any United Picture Exchange will gladly explain this special offer on the Taylor Holmes and Olive Thomas productions.

Tyrad Pictures Buys "Man and Woman."

Announces Next Morey Release.

Harry T. Morey's new Vitagraph feature will be called "The Flaming Clue" instead of "Detective Jim." This is the picture adapted from the story written especially for Mr. Morey by Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey. Of course it is a detective story in which the hero out-Sherlocks Sherlock Holmes. Another of the Morey features, "The Birth of a Soul," is now nearing release date, through Vitagraph.

Good Progress Is Made On "Heart of a Child"

WORK is well under way on the production of the latest Nazimova starring vehicle, "The Heart of a Child," adapted by Charles Bryant from Frank Danby's novel of the same name, according to advices received this week at the offices of Metro Pictures Corporation, which presents Nazimova on the screen. California's ideal weather has been an aid to Director Ray C. Smallwood, so that not only has he been enabled to shoot many of the interior scenes, but to go on location for outdoor work.

Though distinctly different from any previous offering of the star, the locale of the first part being the Limehouse district of London, corresponding to New York's lower East Side. "The Heart of a Child" presents a wealth of opportunities for artistic settings. The career of the heroine carries her from the tenements to the theatre and thence into the world of British aristocracy. The art work is in the able hands of Allen Ruoff.

The photography is being done by Rudolph Bergquist; and the strong cast engaged in support of Nazimova includes Charles Bryant, as Lord Kidderminster; Ray Thompson, Nell Newman, Victor Potel, Eugene Klum, Claire Du Brey, Jane Sterling, John Steppling, William J. Irving and Myrtle Risbell.

Hallmark Head Committee on Deal Making United His Distributor

FRANK G. HALL, president, Hallmark Pictures Corporation, in commenting upon the deal closed last week with J. A. Berst, president, United Picture Productions, Inc., whereby all Hallmark productions will be distributed through the United exchanges, recently taken over by United from Triangle, stated that the selection of this organization for the distribution of the pictures which Hallmark now have on the market, and others under production, was made after careful investigation of its exchange system and the personnel and executives operating these exchanges

Hall Makes Statement.

Mr. Hall's statement follows in part:

"I feel sure that the service which will be rendered through the efforts of the United organization will be as near 100 per cent. as possible. In forming this opinion, I am taking into consideration the wide experience which United's president, Mr. Berst, has had in the handling of a national organization.

"In relieving the Hallmark organization from the many details incident to the distribution of picture product, I am allowed more time to devote exclusively to the production end of the business. This will allow our sales managers and salesmen, whom we will keep in the eighteen branch offices which United have, a free hand in handling the selling end of Hallmark's pictures.

Held Back Pictures.

"For immediate and near-future release, representing productions which I have held back for the past sixty days, pending the consummation of a deal whereby Hallmark's productions would be given the best possible distributing facilities, I have ready two fifteen-episode serial productions, "The Screaming Shadow," co-starring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber, ten episodes of which are now completed and ready for release, and "The Evil Eye," the Benny Leonard serial, now in its second week of production under the direction of J. Gordon Cooper.

Names Special Productions.

"The special productions which are ready for immediate and near-future release through the United exchanges include Clinton H. Stagg's automobile story, "High Speed," starring Gladys Hulette and Edward Earle; "Chains of Evidence," starring Edmond Breese, Marie Shotwell and Anna Lehr; "The Veiled Marriage," co-starring Anna Lehr and Ralph Kellard; "Wits Versus Wits," recently purchased from Harry Grossman, with Margaret Marsh starred; "Carmen of The North," starring Anna Bos, and "What Children Will Do," a screen version of an original story by Charles K. Harris, starring Edith Stockton. "What Children Will Do" is now in the course of production.

"In addition to these new releases which will pass through United. I have made arrangements with President Berst to release through his organization a number of big special productions in addition to the balance of the twenty-six Famous Directors' pictures, four of which have already been released."

Dooley Comedies on Broadway.

Tyrad Pictures, Inc., announces that the Johnny Dooley comedies have been booked for a showing at the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre. "Some Mind Reader," in which the Ziegfeld star makes his screen debut, has been listed on the program for the week commencing February 1.

Contracts on these comedies have been coming in from the New York territory. To properly meet this demand, it was found necessary to change the original release date from January 15 to February 1.

The Exhibitors Film Exchange of Washington, D. C. have contracted for the territory comprising Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

"The Place of Honeymoons" Almost Ready to Distribute

THE Pioneer-Atlas production of Harold MacGrath's novel, "The Place of Honeymoons," is finished with the exception of a few retakes. Emily Stevens, the star, is now in New York preparing for a tour in her new stage production.

Keenan Buel, who directed the production, will probably have charge of the cutting, after which the picture will be turned over to the Pioneer. General Manager Hoffman, of Pioneer, was present at the Atlas studio, Newton, Mass., when the final shots were taken. He voiced himself as being convinced that the picture, both in subject and treatment, would more than fulfil his expectations.

As soon as "The Place of Honeymoons" is delivered to the Pioneer a new production will be begun. Several stories and plays are under consideration, but difficulty is being experienced in securing material strong enough to meet the standard which has been set by the Pioneer general staff.

"Lost Battalion" Goes On Breaking Theatre Records

WHAT "showmanship" will do for a good picture is again exemplified by the box office records on "The Lost Battalion," the seven reel feature being released on the state right market by W. H. Productions Co. The Gardiner Syndicate, who control the rights to this production in New York State, report each successive booking an increased box office achievement.

Gardiner writes: "Watertown, N. Y., has 36,000 population, and we played to $3,856.75 in four days—breaking the Olympic Theatre record, which was held by 'Mickey.'"

The Boston Photoplay Co. played Pittsfield, Mass., last week, the home town of Whittlesey, who is featured in the production. "The Lost Battalion" opened in Providence, R. I., January 18, and reports indicate another success.

Lesser Has Big Plans for Exploitation of "Sky-Eye"

THE Sol Lesser organization is now under way on a national exploitation campaign for "Sky-Eye," the six-reel aero feature which is being released on a state right basis.

Irving Lesser is now on his way from the coast to make special showings in Chicago, where he will receive the cooperation of a prominent aeroplane company, whose representatives are there in connection with the aero convention at the Coliseum.

The New York office is negotiating for a Broadway run, and preparing several exploitation stunts.

One of the novel methods of exploitation will be the dropping of photographs of the thrilling scenes in the picture from an aeroplane throughout the country.

The Lesser organization is gratified over the amount of inquiries which have come in from state rights buyers in response to the trade paper advertising.

Supreme Comedies Find Ready Market Everywhere

SUPREME COMEDIES made by the Southern California Producing Company exclusively for Robertson-Cole are now being played by leading exhibitors in the United States. So great has been the demand for these clean-cut laughs of the screen that it has been necessary to almost double the number of original prints.

So as to keep this clientele, officials of the producing company are scouring the country for scenarios suitable to the talent of Molly Malone, Teddy Sampson and Harry Depp. At the present time, Robertson-Cole has a supply of Supreme Comedies on hand so that there is no necessity to rush any stories through. It is hoped that the present quality of Supreme Comedies will be excelled by the productions which are to come.

Exhibitors who have been playing Supreme Comedies are loud in their praise of the work of Molly Malone. She was formerly leading lady to "Fatty" Arbuckle and won so much praise by her work that it was decided to star her. Miss Malone is one of the most popular comedy stars of the day and in her honor a song hit has been named after her.

"Mollie's Millions," featuring Molly Malone, is the current Robertson-Cole Supreme Comedy release.

Wide Exploitation for Triangle Film.

"A Gamble in Souls," the fourth on the list of Triangle recreated productions which are now being released through the United Pictures Exchanges, will be available to first run exhibitors January 25 and many theatres from coast to coast have already booked this Thomas H. Ince production, which features Dorothy Dalton and William Desmond.

The United Exchange plans a campaign to show showmen how to exploit this production and get the most out of this Triangle play. The picture has exceptional exploitation possibilities, due to the popularity of Miss Dalton and William Desmond at this time.

Selznick Office Announces Completion of "Just a Wife"

"JUST A WIFE," the first of the National Pictures Theatres, Inc., productions, has been completed, according to an announcement made by Lewis J. Selznick.

The production, which has just been finished at the Selznick West Coast Studios, as been received from the cutting room at the West Coast offices and was reviewed by George Irving, who will direct the Weber productions; Mr. Mack, general manager of the Select branch at Los Angeles; Miss Katherine Reed, who wrote the continuity, and by Harry Rapf, general manager of the West Coast Studios for Selznick.

The story of the production was written by Eugene Walters and was directed by Howard Hickman. Some names which have been connected with the film art for years are listed in the cast of this production. They are Richard Emerson, Beatrice Joy, Kathleen Williams, Albert Van and William Leon West. The photoplay was done by Max Du Pont.

Star and Comedy in Combination.

"Lord Helpus," the single reel Charlie Chaplin special being released on the independent market through Tower Film Corporation, and formerly entitled "Cruel, Cruel Love," is reported to be winning favor on the merits of the production itself in addition to the drawing power of Chaplin. There is here a combination of a big star in a comedy special.

Sidelights and Reflections

PRINTER'S ink has lost none of its power to create big business in the amusement field. An advertising campaign in the newspapers, the like of which New York City had never seen before resulted in Marion Davies in "The Cinema Murder," breaking all records for an opening day's receipts at the Rialto Theatre the week of January 18. The novel has been running in one of the daily papers, and the week before the opening and on the opening day full page advertisements appeared in most of the metropolitan papers announcing the Rialto engagement of the Oppenheim story. The effect of this newspaper ballyhoo was an inrush of ticket buyers from all parts of the city, who crowded the usual run of patrons into the back seats or inside the ropes of the standing places, unless they were early in line at the box office window.

The great city of New York, which is always first or last to adopt some clever advertising scheme, having put into practice the newspaper "smash" long familiar to the exhibitors of Indianapolis and Omaha and many of the larger cities to be found on a map of the United States, will now be forced to admit that "it gets the business."

There was another moving picture opening in New York the same week that proved the same thing. Mary Pickford at the Rivoli in "Pollyanna" was it. The combination of widely read novel, successful stage play and Mary in a part that brought the entire family to the theatre, pa and ma and grandma and the children—the youngsters all old admirers of "Pollyanna," was another argument in favor of the "Get 'em talking about you" policy.

Writers of original stories for the screen may insist that they are the logical source of all that is best in movie material, but just so long as reconstructed "best seller" novels and stage successes continue to fill the theatres with thoroughly entertained patrons, producers and exhibitors are not going to close their eyes to the money getting ability of a picture with a story which is a recognized popular success. To turn a cold shoulder on such an alluring proposition would be like refusing to marry an attractive woman because she had a few hundred thousands in the bank.

Miss Pickford's first United Artists release has come up to all that was hoped for it, and her performance of Pollyanna is a piece of "kid" acting remarkable for its physical embodiment of childhood and for its insight into the mind and heart of a child. Times Square isn't overstocked with the "Pollyanna" brand of sentiment and mirth these days, but its reception of the "glad girl" was all warmth and feeling expressed in alternating smiles and tears.

"A Modern Salome"

Hope Hampton Appears in Society Melodrama Written and Directed by Leonce Perret and Released by Metro.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

HOPE Hampton Productions, Inc., is the name of the company presenting Hope Hampton in "A Modern Salome." The picture will find favor with a well defined portion of the screen public. It is a society melodrama with a beginning laid in the studios of artistic New York, and introduces a nightmare on the part of the heroine, during which she imagines she is the original Salome, the incident of her asking for the head of John the Baptist being reproduced with considerable historical veracity.

Leonce Perret, who wrote and directed the story, has supplied real skill to the management of the elaborate sets that form the backgrounds for the equally elaborate gowns of the star. He has also found a novel way of utilizing Miss Hampton in certain scenes indicating the changing seasons. The entire production shows that money has been spent with a lavish hand.

Hope Hampton, a new star, possesses a generous physical charm, and her acting is in keeping with the character of the story. "A Modern Salome" does not call for broad culture on the part of the spectator, but for a keen delight in the sort of vigorous drama beloved by theatre-goers. Proper classification puts this picture in the popular price list of entertainments. The supporting company is excellent.

The Story.

Virginia Hastings, the heroine of "A Modern Salome," is the daughter of an artist who dies without leaving her any means of support, and the girl, nicknamed Salome, tries to earn a living as an illustrator. Failing in this she becomes the wife of James Vandan, a multimillionaire. Salome loves her husband, but she has allowed herself to become engaged to Roberto Monti, a young broker, who proceeds to blackmail her by threatening to show Vandan the love letters she had written during her first engagement. Unaccustomed to the wealth and luxury at her command, Salome indulges her desire for expensive clothes, gay society and flattery to the fullest extent. When Harry Torrence, a married man and her husband's secretary, refuses to feed her vanity, she finds a way to get even with him.

Monti comes to the house for more money and ends by assaulting Mrs. Vandan. Torrence rushes in and knocks Monti down. Vandan enters at this moment, and the broker puts the crime on the secretary. Salome also says that he is guilty. Sent away in disgrace, Torrence weakly takes to drink and is abandoned by his wife and child. In a fight with Monti, he is accused of assault and robbery and sent to jail. After his release he turns tramp, and comes back to New York when he has grown a full beard.

The millionaire decides to have his wife painted as the real Salome, and Torrence is engaged by the artist to pose as John the Baptist. While he is asleep in the studio, his head so arranged that it seems to rest on the platter after decapitation, Mrs. Vandan arrives and recognizes him. She is so conscious stricken that she swoons. In this state she has a dream in which she is the Salome of the Bible. The entire scene of her dance and of her receiving the prophet's head is enacted. When she recovers her senses Mrs. Vandan clears Torrence, and the secretary goes back to his old position and to his wife and child.

Exploitation Angles: Make a special exploitation of the star to get your public interested, then pass on to the Salome angle, hooking up with the fact that this is a modern story. If the lithographs give you a good cut-out, make several. They can be made to work hard for you. "The Luck of the Irish"

Lengthy Adaptation of Harold MacGrath Story for Realart Features James Kirkwood and Anna Q. Nilsson.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDoald.

HAROLD MacGrath's story, "The Luck of the Irish," affords interesting material for a moving picture production, although six reels are one too many for the best effect. The Realart production, featuring James Kirkwood and Anna Q. Nilsson, is attractive and, for the most part, well made. If it were not overloaded with subtitles which are not always carefully worded, and the action cut to a more rapid speed, it might readily be termed a strong production.

Varying in locale from New York to Hong Kong, embracing Naples, Venice, Gibraltar, Cairo and Singapore, it contains much that reflects credit on the art director. The scenes in the New York restaurant frequented by Norton Colburton are well done, and also some of those in Malay street, Singapore, in which scarlet women ply their trade. In fact no particularly jarring lapse in technicality occurs.

The role of William Grogan, plumber, is a heroic one, and is well played by James Kirkwood, in spite of the fact that once in a while his portrayal is a bit too strenuous. Anna Q. Nilsson fits the character of Ruth Warren as if she were moulded to it. She has perhaps never been seen to better advantage. Harry Northrup is excellent in the role of the repentant stool pigeon. Ward Crane as Norton Colburton makes an excellent heavy, and Ernest Butterworth as "the kid" acts as well as some of the older members of the cast.

The Story.

The story of "The Luck of the Irish" presents the problem of an Irish plumber, William Grogan, much of whose acquaintance with life was gleaned by watching the feet of passersby from the basement window of the plumbing shop.

One day Grogan gets a call from a prominent law firm, where he presents himself promptly on the day appointed, with the little boy Isobel, to whom he has been a father since the day when he picked him up in a back alley. The stunning news which the lawyer has for him is that he has inherited some twenty-eight thousand dollars and thirty-two cents. With this he decides that he and the boy shall take a trip around "the little ol' walnut."

On boarding the boat, under the wing of Cook's Tours, he sees ahead of him on the ladder a pair of neat feminine feet which he has watched for the past three years tripping by his window, and shortly afterward their owner, discovered by Isobel to be his school teacher, Ruth Warren, is formally introduced to Grogan.

The days that follow bring joy to Grogan by installing him protector of the girl, who registers trouble, and is found to be pursued by a stool pigeon of a dissolute man named Norton Colburton, to whom she has been engaged, and with whom she parted unceremoniously in New York. The way leads through various oriental cities, and has its climax in Singapore, where Ruth is kidnaped and placed in a room on Malay street by Colburton, who is soundly thrashed by Grogan. The day of her marriage to Grogan, Ruth is prostrated with brain fever. On awakening from a period of unconsciousness, a number of disturbing illusions are dispersed, and the happy couple sail for America.

List the localities in your advertising and if you can get hold of a world map flag the various cities in which the action takes place with "Played all over the world" for a catchphrase.

While this is not disastrous, it indicates that Katherine's abundant graces of face, form and movement could be more advantageously placed. Miss MacDonald's support, particularly Roy Stewart, Winter Hall and Kathleen Kirkham, make the most of their limited opportunities.

The latter is first to propose and he is accepted. Amelie owes dressmaking bills amounting to fifteen hundred dollars, which her uncle refuses to pay. He will stand for no more of her nonsense unless she marries a rich man. Amelie receives a diamond brooch as a pledge from Gaylord, but she almost immediately regrets her decision, and becomes infatuated with Laird. She dares even to tell him that she will have to pawn her engagement pledge to meet pressing bills.

Laird prevails upon her to accept his check for the amount. He will hold the pledge at her disposal. The spy of a society paper discovers the check and takes it to Gaylord, expecting to gain his favor. He denounces her and all women, and accuses Laird. The latter learns that Amelie has pawned her engagemet pledge. He deliberately leads her on until she accepts him, and they are married at his rooms. Laird then turns on her, denouncing her as one of a class who sell their souls for gain. He raves at her for a while and then breaks down. Amelie calmly anounces that she will leave him and earn the money, and he allows her, now his wife, to go. She returns in due time with the money he loaned her, stating how she got it, and a happy ending follows.

"The Phantom Melody"

Six-Part Universal Production Features Monroe Salisbury in Entertaining Drama.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THERE is an abundance of plot in this six-part Universal subject, entitled "The Phantom Melody." It furnishes a strong role for Monroe Salisbury, quite different from anything he has had recently and equally pleasing in its way. The story deals incidentally with the great war, no less than four of the important characters serving in the ranks. Yet it is not to be classed as a war story, as the chief incidents occur in Italy.

The cast is a large and agreeable one. Mr. Salisbury appears as Count Camello, Jean Calhoun as the heroine and others with important roles are Henry Barrows, Ray Gallagher, Charles West and Joe Ray. The Italian settings are very beautiful and form an attractive background for the main events. The brief war scenes are well staged and full of intense action.

The theme deals with the love of two men for the same girl. One of the men is a coward and by trickery arranges that another go to the front under his name, while he remains at home in safety. Many strong dramatic moments occur as the principals return from the conflict. There is an abruptness of transition in one or two instances, but on the whole the rather involved plot is consistently ad clearly handled. The story is one of unusual character.

The Story.

Count Camello, in "The Phantom Melody," is living on his fine estate in Italy, near the home occupied by Sir James Drake and his family. Gregory Baldi, a dependent cousin of the count, is in love with Mary Drake and they are to be married. Count Camello also loves the English girl, but such is his regard for Gregory that he conceals his affections.

When the war breaks out Count Camello enlists. Gregory has been caught in a gambling escapade with Oliver Drake, a brother of Mary. The latter fights a duel and Gregory leads him to believe he has killed his adversary, Baron Ferrero. Gregory is a coward at heart and induces Oliver to go to war under his name, thus escaping service himself and leading Oliver to believe he is escaping from a charge of murder.

Count Camello returns wounded from the war. He believes Gregory is in service and after the latter has been reported killed, the Count declares his love to Mary and is accepted. On the eve of the wedding, Gregory returns unexpectedly. He needs money badly and one night, when the Count is suffering from shock during a storm, Gregory buries him alive in the family vault. The Count escapes and conceals himself. His whitened hair and long beard later give him an effectual disguise. Oliver returns from the war, having seen Ferrero and learned the way in which Gregory had tricked him. In the midst of exciting events Gregory is killed accidentally and Mary's heart turns to the Count.

The Lost City

Gripping Serial Picture Featuring Juanita Hansen in Vivid Story of the African Jungle.

Reviewed by Herbert J. Hoose.

THE first three episodes of "The Lost City" go to show that where there's a will there's a way in serials to furnish new means of entertainment. Moving picture cameras have been focused on all things imaginable to entertain audiences, and this serial comes forth with a spectacular story of the jungle, with its ferocious beasts, as the locale for a production that will hold many spectators' close interest. The first part of the serial cannot boast of any development of the story, but when wild lions start to worry the heroine, mad elephants to destroy villages and kill the inhabitants, and crocodiles run rampant, there is little opportunity to think of the plot. Scene after scene exposes some thrilling incident.

There is a simple love story woven into the serial, and Juanita Hansen justifies her choice for the part of Zoolah, princess of "The Lost City," by giving an excellent portrayal. George Chesebro is cast as an adventurous millionaire and does good work in a rugged role. Special mention should be made of the animals in this picture because they really do as much acting as the leading players. Time and again they occupy the centre of the action, and it evidently took many weeks to get these results.

As a serial play, "The Lost City" should go big and will hold its own with any of the serials now being shown. It is one that should have especial appeal to children and people who are attentive to stories of the wild African jungles.

Garbo .....Hector Dion
Produced by William N. Selig for Warner Brothers.
Story by Frederick Chapin.
Directed by E. A. Martin.

The Story.

A pretty girl named Zoolah is the Princess of "The Lost City." One day while out riding in the jungle with her sister she is taken captive by a band of natives. The band is attacked by a number of warriors from the city of Bozem, which is ruled by Garbo, a fugitive English ivory hunter, and Zoolah is taken back to Bozem as a prize. They arrive shortly after Stanley Morton, a millionaire who, with his friend Michael Donovan, have come to the jungles to hunt game and seek adventure.

Garbo is suspicious of the pair because they came in an airplane, but finally decides that they are not "after" him. When the prizes of the raid are brought in, Zoolah, who has covered her skin with brown coloring so as to appear as a native, runs to Morton for projection. He notes that her features resemble that of a white person and he asks Garbo to sell her to him. The latter sends her down to the river to bathe and when she returns he sees that she is a beautiful white girl and refuses to part with her. Later she meets Morton alone and tells him how she had been captured and that she is the Princess of "The Lost City." Their conversation is overheard by a native, who, in turn, enlightens Garbo, and he realizes that if he makes her marry him he will then be able to claim the throne. From this point on until the end of the third episode there is a large amount of gripping action—Morton struggling to rescue the Princess and win her love, and Garbo to marry her and gain the throne.

Human Collateral

Corinne Griffith in Acceptable Society Romance from Vitagraph.

Reviewed by Jane McCloskey.

HUMAN COLLATERAL," with Corinne Griffith, is a serio-comic version of that old theme about a girl's hand in marriage figuring as the price of financial help to her family. Except that in this case the "brutal contract" idea is all in the girl's imagination, since the hero is a perfectly high-minded person and performs the pecuniary favor out of unselfish consideration for the young lady, and not from any base designs upon her freedom.

A well-worn bit of suspense is introduced when another man entices the girl on a wild auto ride, which ends in a sham accident.

Corinne Griffith is an exceedingly attractive actress as far as good looks and a pleasing screen presence are concerned. She wears lovely clothes and has a certain youthful breeziness that is always welcomed. Webster Campbell is satisfactory, though uncongruously boyish to be such a power in the financial world. The other characters are respectively well cast. W. T. Carleton in the role of the father, whose plea for help starts all the misunderstanding; Maurice Costello as the supposed-to-be borish cattle king, but suave and polished because he can't help it, and Alice Calhoun in the part of a disappointed admirer, whose wiles avail her nothing against true love. It's an amusing picture, but the situations are a bit old and not treated in a sufficiently masterful fashion to give them decided interest. The smallness of the cast makes the story easy to follow, and there are some amusing lines that will bring a laugh from any good-natured audience.

Patricia Langdon is in love with Roderick Duncan, an attractive gentleman who has apparently as much money as manly charm. Another admirer of Patricia's is Richard Morton, but his unpleasant aggressiveness make him an outsider in spite of influential backing. Patricia's father finds himself in acute business distress, and appeals to his expected son-in-law for help, explaining that his sole consideration is his daughter's happiness.

In the same spirit the rich young man provides the necessary support, and Mr. Langdon pulls himself out of his difficulties. But when Patricia is told of the transaction, she takes it that she is merely bartered collateral for the loan and refuses to enter into her engagement on any other basis than that of a purely business affair, signed and attested to in contract form.

At a house party that follows, it is found that Patricia and Morton are missing. As the cattle king has appointed himself her escort, both the father and the lover fear for her safety. Duncan goes in search of Patricia and arrives in time to knock Morton and a burly accomplice both unconscious, and save the girl. Realizing that Duncan's intentions at the time of the loan were truly honorable, Patricia asks him to please in future keep his "human collateral" where it won't run the danger of being stolen again.

"The Cyclone"

Five-Reel Fox Subject Full of Entertaining Melodrama and Theatrical Tricks.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

SCENIC charm and spirited out-door adventure are combined in this five-reel Fox subject, entitled "The Cyclone," with some excellent melodrama. Tom Mix is the featured player and he is not a hero to be circumscribed by ordinary rules and conventions. He does the ordinary thing as well as any hero could, but does not hesitate to add a little bit more. The closing stunt in this number, for instance, in which he rides a horse up three flights of stairs in a Chinatown gambling house and proceeds to carry off the heroine, a la Lochinvar, may not stand an analytical test, but it does give a new and pleasing thrill to the spectator.

The story is laid in Canada, just above the international boundary line. Sergeant Tim, the hero, belongs to the mounted police and he undertakes to clean up a gang of crooked ranch laborers, operating in connection with Chinese smugglers.

There are some splendid scenic effects in the opening reels and much break-neck horseback riding. The photography is sharp and attractive and the plot a compelling one of its kind. Coleen Moore is pleasing as the heroine.

The Story.

Sergeant Tim Ryerson, in "The Cyclone," is the champion rider and crack shot of the Canadian Mounted Police. He wins a contest in all-around horsemanship at a big athletic event, in spite of the fact that he stops on the way to rescue three girls who are pretending to be drowning.

On the same day he has won this event, Tim accepts a commission to clean up a band of plainsmen and Chinese smugglers, who are operating along the international boundary line. Three members of the Mounted Police have been murdered on this particular post. Tim goes to call on his sweetheart, Sylvia Sturgis, at a ranch near his new station, and while doing so meets Baird, a crooked foreman who is leader of the bandits. Tim quickly proves his mettle by tracing one of the murders to Baird and by frustrating a new raid of the smugglers. Because of this Baird makes a brutal attack upon Tim, following which he abducts Sylvia, with whom he is also in love.

Tim follows the trail of the smugglers, which leads to Chinatown in the neighboring city. Here he makes a bold raid upon a certain gambling house, astride his horse and succeeds in rescuing his sweetheart.

Exploitation Angles: Read carefully the special story elsewhere in this issue. Don't try to sell on any particular angle. Work all of the appeals. There are many points. Work them all. Don't go to extremes and say that this is the best production ever made. Get the people in by telling them that it is a remarkable production and let them go out saying "best ever" for you. It will carry more conviction if done this way, but use all your efforts to get plenty of people in for the early showings that you may get this valuable word of mouth advertising. If the picture is earlier shown in some town not too far away, take the editor and the school teachers and the ministers over to see it. Pay their expenses and play up the story of the trip.

"The Peddler of Lies"

Five-Reel Universal Production Tells Fascinating Story of Jewel Theft.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel Universal picture, "The Peddler of Lies," is an advance upon the ordinary story combining criminal and society life. It has an authoritative social atmosphere and makes a continual appeal to the eye. The cast is uniformly pleasing and makes an excellent impression. Frank Mayo and Ora Carew play the male and female leads, but their work is equalled by several in minor parts. In fact, it is hardly fair to speak of the three crooks, a man and two women, playing a minor role, for their part in the story is as important as it is fascinating. Nell Craig, as Patricia, is a villainess worthy of close study, as her methods are new and unusual.

The production contains plenty of dramatic action. The mystery is not intense, but at the same time is free from the obvious. The denouement is not particularly strong, though satisfactory. The picture makes its great appeal through the interesting cast and the sheer beauty of its presentation.

The Story.

James Kirkland, in "The Peddler of Lies," is the father of a family consisting of a daughter and four sons. They live on a fine estate in a wealthy residential neighborhood. The children have frequent "spats" and William, the elder son, keeps the others constantly worried because of his drinking and uncertain ways. Diana, the sister, usually keeps a watchful eye upon William, and one day sees him on the beach in company with Marquise D'Irancy, who owns a valuable diamond known as the "Sultana."

At an evening party given by a neighboring family, the Marquise suddenly discovers that she has lost her diamond. Attending the party are William and Diana Kirkland, some new neighbors, the De Vallignacs, and a friend named Patricia Melton. The theft is hushed up, but William is pretty generally suspected, even his family thinking he took the jewel.

Diana begins investigations on William's behalf. She is aided in this by a traveling peddler, known as Clamp, who has been some time in the vicinity. It develops that Clamp is in the neighborhood for a purpose, and in the course of exciting events the real criminals are rounded up and William's name cleared. Diana finds herself in love with the supposed peddler.

"The Third Generation"

Brentwood Production with Betty Blythe and Mahlon Hamilton Founded on Problem of Business Integrity.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ROBERTSON-COLE in presenting the Brentwood production, "The Third Generation," written and directed by Henry Kolker, are sure of a fair amount of success. The general character of the picture is such that the average person will be interested in its problem, and although he may not feel personally in sympathy with a hero whose actions are not consistently heroic, his attention will be held to the period of mingled bitterness and joy of which the climax consists.

The picture contains a number of tensely dramatic moments, and is staged artistically. The most forceful impersonation in the production is done by Jack Pratt in the part of Cuthbert Steele. This character is perhaps more consistent in outline than some of the others. Betty Blythe as Helen Van Dusen, the extravagant wife whose love of social life is largely instrumental in causing her husband's plunge to ruin, does good work. Mahlon Hamilton as Alden Van Dusen gets across with a character that is not strongly consistent. A well-balanced cast handles the remainder of the characterization.

The Story.

"The Third Generation" presents the story of a descendant of an old and honorable Knickerbocker family. Alden Van Dusen in trying to sustain the family name and honor in a business founded by his grandfather, fails to keep a tight rein on money matters, and allows himself to be swept along with his young wife into the whirlpool of social life. The result is that when the moment of need comes the exchequer of the company is not equal to the emergency, and they are thrown into bankruptcy.

Steele, a new member of the firm, has paid scrupulous attention to business, while both the other partners of the firm have wasted their hours in riotous living; and when the occasion arrives where a strong hand is needed, he steps into the breach with a suggestion that is not in accordance with the honor of the family of Van Dusen. Alden, after arranging with Steele that in case of his death his wife would be provided for with her widow's third of his estate, disappears in the clothes of a stranger who has saved him from suicide at the river bank, and is mourned by his wife as dead.

Later he turns up in the West on the location of the Man Tiger mine, which Steele and the other partner of the firm deeded to a dummy to save the company from ruin. By keeping his identity secret he learns tha this wife has been swindled out of her inheritance. Returning to the East just in time to prevent

"The Star Boarder"

Paramount-Mack Sennett Comedy Has Capital Parts for Louise Fazenda and Ben Turpin.

Reviewed by Sumner Smith.

Pure foolishness fills the Paramount-Sennett comedy, "The Star Boarder." The fact that the plot is nearly as foreign to its nature as prohibition is to New Jersey makes it an agreeable vehicle to follow a heavy dramatic screen offering. Several times during the course of its run the film threatened to fool the audience and develop a real story, but each time Louise Fazenda, Harriet Hammond and Ben Turpin in characteristic roles saved the day. A little boy, whose name is not announced, shared the honors with the older Sennett stars.

There are several unique touches to this comedy on a boarding house that make it somewhat out of the ordinary, but its chief merit is that it supplies a sort of restful foolishness. It closes with a melodramatic scene of a fair damsel clinging to the drain pipe encircling an upper story of the house. She is rescued by a man who, logically enough, is then deemed courageous enough to brave the dangers of matrimony. His lion heart fails, however, until he discovers that it is a mock wedding in which he is playing an unwilling leading role.

"Live Sparks"

A Robert Brunton Production Which Features J. Warren Kerrigan and Lives Up to Its Title.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IT is true that "Live Sparks," a Robert Brunton production, distributed by W. W. Hodkinson, responds to the suggestion of its title. It is not a comedy, in fact hardly what might be termed comedy-drama. The situation which it presents is more or less colored with tragedy; but the spirit of the hero, Neil Sparks, is not dampened for long at a time. The picture is well made, its characterization is interesting, and its subject substantial. It is a production that will be liked; and perhaps the only jarring note in its makeup is the reflection on womanhood which appears in the character, Bess Kinloch, who throws herself at Sparks and persists in being his fiancee in spite of his protestations.

J. Warren Kerrigan has found in the role of Neil Sparks a character which he portrays well and easily. He plays it effectively. Fritzi Brunette is exceptionally attractive as Myrtle Pratt, daughter of an oil prospector, and the entire cast is a commendable one. Clyde Benson as William Carpenter, the Sparks butler, is one of the outstanding figures of the picture.

The Story.

"Live Sparks" has for its hero Neil Sparks, the gay young son of a rich owner of Texas oil property. Since his father's death Neil has paid no attention to business, and prize fights have been more to his liking than the grind of Wall Street, or the society of the women picked for him by his solicitious Aunt Helen. In fact when Aunt Helen has all but placed a very willing woman named Bess Kinloch, in his arms, he suddenly decides to reply to a telegram from the oil fields in person.

Arrived at the oil fields he meets pretty Myrtle Pratt, the daughter of a man who has been swindled out of his property by some promoters who have just succeeded in laying a secret pipe from one property to another for the purpose of salting a worthless location, in the hope of selling it to a "sucker" for big money.

Sparks, alive to the situation, gets an option on their property, and in the meantime wires for his butler to come on with a certified check for seventy-five thousand dollars. Between them they corner the crooks and force them to buy a certain property which they control and turn it over to the family of Pratt, the man they have swindled and incidentally killed in a fight over the removal of the secret pipe, which they sought to get out of sight before the taking over of the property by Sparks. A romance between Myrtle Pratt and Sparks develops and forms one of the interesting veins of the story. On his return Bess is again forced on him; but he is saved from carrying out a distasteful contract by the arrival on the scene of Myrtle with her five little brothers. The impression gained by the prospective bride is such that she decides to give up the chase to the winner.

"What Would You Do?"

Fox Production Featuring Madlaine Traverse Founded on Well-Rounded Idea.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THERE is a well-rounded idea behind the Fox production, "What Would You Do?" It is not a pleasant thought, and it is a question whether the problem is the proper diet for moving picture audiences. The subject is one that has been under discussion many times without arriving at any definite decision of the right and wrong way of treating it. The query is, should we help incurable sufferers to "throw off this mortal coil?"

With the exception of a slight bit of padding, the picture with Madlaine Traverse in the role of Claudia Chilson is well made. The situation which is presented is intensely dramatic, and the star is equal to every occasion. Her work in the heavy emotional scenes is especially good. There is a peculiarity of construction evident in the coupling of two distinct themes. This is so cleverly done, however, that its regularity will hardly be questioned.

George McDaniel as Hugh Chilson, Claudia's husband, is a virile type, and plays effectively. Frank Elliott has a more difficult role to fill for the reason that it is not sympathetic. He plays it well. Charles K. French adds a pleasant note to a tragic story. The cast throughout is good.

The Story.

"What Would You Do?" tells of an unhappy situation in which a young woman, who, in the belief that her first husband is dead, marries again, and when her second husband becomes a cripple for life, puts a pistol in a convenient place, believing that it is her duty to place within his reach the power of permanent release from his agony.

Claudia Chilson, the wife of Hugh Chilson, silent partner in the firm of Andrew & Co., oil promoters, finds herself in a difficult situation when it is discovered that Andrews has swindled the stockholders, and that her husband is in danger of arrest. Chilson at the request of his wife and lawyer friend, boards a boat for South America. At the first stop of the boat, however, on the order of the authorities he is arrested, and is about to be brought back for trial, when he jumps overboard. The news that he has been drowned is sent to his wife, while he, picked up by a small boat, continues on his journey, and becomes rich through nitrate deposits in South America.

When he has gathered enough together to pay the debts of Andrew & Co., he returns and comes to visit his wife on the morning of the death of her second husband. Intermingled with these incidents is a threat of the arrest of Claudia on the charge of the murder of her husband. Robert Brainert, the dead man's brother, is deterred from pressing the charge through reading an incriminating note written by his wife to Curtis Brainerd before his illness. "His Temporary Wife."

Joseph Levering Production Released Through W. W. Hodkinson Based on Attractive Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

HIS Temporary Wife," a Joseph Levering production distributed by W. W. Hodkinson, is based on a story by Robert Ames Bennett, which succeeds in holding the interest of the spectator from first to last of the six reels. It is not a well constructed picture, however, nor do its subtitles help to make it more attractive. In the latter direction there is much room for improvement. The story is one that should be handled carefully, in fact, delicately; but, evidently without meaning to transgress, the director has at times overstepped the fine line.

The cast is a good one. Rubye de Remer in the feminine lead is particularly pleasing, and Edmund Breese places the polished professional stamp on every scene in which he appears. Eugene Strong is the male lead, and as such is prepossessing.

The subject of the picture is rather out of the ordinary, and will get over with the majority of audiences.

The Story.

Annabelle Rose, the pretty young nurse who is the center of attraction in "His Temporary Wife," is "framed" by a group of jealous associates at the hospital where she is employed, and is blamed for the death of a child, which they claim has been caused by her neglect.

Just at this unhappy moment she is called by Dr. Gould to take a difficult case. Her patient, an irritable, bedridden old man, is much pleased with her, and on his death leaves an envelope for her which is not to be opened until sixty days after his death.

The son of the old man, Arthur Eliot, is in the power of a frivolous woman, Verna Devore, who seeks him for his father's wealth. On learning that one of the stipulations of his will is that his succession to his father's estate depends on his marriage, which must be with a woman other than Verna Devore. She advises him to gain a temporary wife, from whom he is to separate immediately and marry her.

His advertisement for a temporary wife is seen by Judge Laton, and on the appeal for financial help, by Annabelle Rose, he recommends her answering the advertisement. The date for which the "wife" is wanted happens to be the sixtieth day after the death of the old man, and on opening the envelope she discovers that all his property has been left to her. She then decides to go through with the affair for the sake of young Eliot. After the marriage Eliot finds Annabelle so attractive that he refuses to have it annulled, much to the disgust of the waiting bride.

"Before the White Man Came"

Northwestern Film Corporation Make Six-Reel Production with Genuine Indian Players.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE fact that the Northwestern Film Corporation's six-reel production, "Before the White Man Came," is presented with a cast entirely of Indians, gives it a distinction beyond the ordinary film play. To be sure the red people do not always respond to the emotional requirements of the modern stage; but this is to be excused to a large extent, and there is at all times sufficient in the picture to interest the ordinary observer, especially if he is a student of history or race.

The picture abounds in types. There are in it many Indians with the marks of old age, but still erect and hearty, and evidently much interested in the work of playing a picture, as well as children, and men and women in the prime of life. There are many deep perspectives photographed in the hills of Wyoming, and panoramas of the same region, and now and then a group of buffalo. The types chosen for the leaders of the romance on which the picture is built are a handsome maiden with her even handsomer brave. These red people are very much in earnest, and succeed in putting over the story with more "punch" than would be expected from a people so far removed from the paths of the drama. The picture was made under the direction of John E. Maple.

The Story.

The story of the picture written by W. E. Wing covers the romance of Che-wee-na, a pretty Indian maid, and Big Elk, both of the Great Bear tribe. When Big Elk has purified himself after the fashion of the Indian, he proposes to Chee-wee-na, and is accepted. Their happy dreams are soon disturbed by the appearance on the scene of White Wolf, the son of a chief of another tribe. He offers to buy Chewee-na, and is repulsed by her father. He then threatens to take her by force, and approached by Big Elk promises to meet him in the hills unarmed, to see who is the best man. Big Elk is the victor, and refuses to take further advantage of the Wolf, for the reason that he believes himself to be the chosen one of the Great Spirit.

Through Wolf's jealousy the feud deepens, and as a foil one of the squaws of the Great Bear tribe is kidnapped. When Big Elk, chosen to lead the warriors of the tribe, goes to the enemy's camp, he finds the squaw dying and the camp deserted. In the meantime Wolf and his band of warriors enter the camp of Great Bear, kill the men and carry off Chewee-na. In the home of Wolf she feigns insanity, and, as is the custom with the Indians in such cases, she is treated with respect. The illness of a child of the tribe wins her their gratitude, and a promise of future friendliness toward her people. At the same time the jealousy of the medicine man of the tribe is aroused, and he incites the Indians against Che-wee-na, who he accused of poisoning the stream from which they get their drinking water. She is about to be burned at that stake when Big Elk, apprised of the approaching tragedy, hurries to the scene and rescues her. The picture closes with the Indian lovers safe at home.

Comments

SHAKING THE SHIMMY (Fox).—A Mutt and Jeff animated, in which policemen, babies, nursemaids, firemen and everybody has an attack of the "shimmies." Even a dog joins humorously in the new dance. This is typically amusing.

WHEELS OF DEATH (Universal).—Chapter 17 of "The Great Radium Mystery." After her jump from the high cliff, which is repeated at the beginning of this instalment, Gloria swims down the river pursued by the Buzzard. She sets a beart trap and cleverly catches one of her enemies. Bob also meets with further adventures and the number closes with them tied to an ore car, which dashes over an embankment.

ROARIN' DAN, (Western), Jan. 24.—This features Hoot Gibson and Ethel Shannon, the latter being a new and promising screen performer. The girl is a school teacher in a cattle town, the hero a rather wild cowboy of good intentions but addicted to gambling. The girl saves him from a false accusation of robbery and this awakens his better instincts. The story is quite pleasing.

THE FLAMES OF DEATH, (Universal), March 1.—Chapter 4 of "Elmo the Fearless." This opens with the fall of Elmo and his horse through the open bridge spanning the cliffs. Elmo is saved by clinging to a rope. Jacko, the chimpanzee, does some intelligent work in leading Elmo to Edith. Lucille's cabin is burned at the close, with Elmo and Edith trapped in the flames.

ELMO THE FEARLESS, No. 5, (Universal), March 8.—This opens with the escape of Elmo and Edith from the burning cabin. The story then reverts to Checko and a band of smugglers, who are attempting to raise the safe of the burned Santiam, in order to obtain important papers. Elmo makes a daring attempt to scale a rope ladder leading to the smugglers' cave, where Edith has been made prisoner. The knife battle in midair is thrilling and the number closes with Elmo in danger of plunging to death on the severed ladder.

IN THE SWEET DRY AND DRY, (Star Comedy).—A timely and laughable Lyons and Moran comedy, in which the pair improvise a still for making liquor at home. They are caught in the act by a policeman, but escape. The officer charges the Dry Committee, in a meeting upstairs, with evading the law. The number is well made and very amusing.

ROMEO'S DAD, (Universal).—A two-reel number of the Stage Women's War Relief series. This is one of the best comedies yet shown in this series. Tom Wise shines in the leading role, that of a father who flirts with an actress in order to teach his son a lesson and himself falls in love with her. Mr. Wise has great facial expression and should by all means do more work for the screen. The supporting cast includes Ethel Stannard, Conrad Nagel, Helen Lowell, Gail Kane, Jack Devereaux and others.

BILL'S WIFE, (Universal).—Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber appear in this domestic comedy. The plot is slight but amusing. It concerns hubby's efforts to get away from home in order to sit in with the boys in a poker game. This develops in an entertaining way.

BUNGLED BUNGALOWS, (Universal).—Another successful comedy, featuring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. This concerns a young wife who goes to inspect a house with a young real estate agent. She is planning to buy the place to surprise her hubby, but the latter is very jealous and fears otherwise. He and the wife of the real estate agent complicate matters by appearing unexpectedly. This is original and laughable.

WITH BACKS TO THE WALL, (Universal).—This is the 18th and final chapter of "The Midnight Man." It pictures the escape of Jim and Nell from the cave and their subsequent return to get the secret treasure. Jim also learns the true story of his birth. The serial has acquired stronger interest as it progressed and the last episodes bring it to a fine close. It has been better acted in the latter chapters than it was at the beginning and some of the special stunts have been unusually good.

THE BABY DOLL BANDIT, (Universal).—A most enjoyable two-reel comic, in which first honors go to Joe Martin, the educated chimpanzee. The scenes are laid in the Western town of Weazel Tail Bend, and are of a laughable burlesque sort. The events take place in a country school house and its vicinity, as well as in the town itself. This is original and pleasing throughout.

HOT TAMALE, (Universal).—This comic number features Chris Rub, who gives evidence of being a good comedian of the knockabout, character type. This production is a burlesque on the familiar kidnapping and rescue of the heroine. The scenes are laid in a Mexican town and many characters participate. A burlesque battle is an amusing feature.

THE CHANCE TRAIL (Pathe).—Episode No. 12 of "The Black Secret." An interesting situation occurs at the beginning of this number, when Evelyn and Kay meet Vaux in the artist's studio. They openly accuse Vaux of disloyalty to the United States, which he vehemently denies. Evelyn later meets with a new set of spies and is drawn into a dangerous trap. The number closes with her facing death at the hands of an enemy.

THE BANK ROBBERY (Pathe).—Episode 5 of "The Adventures of Ruth." Ruth makes a daring dash into the Hound's office and secures the stolen peacock fan. No sooner has this been accomplished than she is directed by the seventh message to recover some stolen bank funds. She impersonates a fortune teller and is able to return the money to the bank, but her deception is discovered and leads to new perils. The events in this number have been given a rather disconnected development, though the melodramatic moments are quite strong.

THE BORDER FURY (Pathe), Chapter 6 of "The Adventures of Ruth." Ruth Roland does some of the best work she has accomplished in serials in this number. She makes a daring visit to a hacienda, where many guests are present, palming herself off as a Spanish dancer. By this trick she recovers three saddle bags of gold stolen from Don Justino, but is herself captured by the Hound and his followers. The scenes are brilliantly pictured.

WINGS OF MYSTERY (Pathe), Chapter 13 of "The Black Secret." This number further mystifies the spectator as to the character of Frederick Vaux. He is supposedly loyal to the United States, but circumstances are constantly pointing an accusing finger at him. Evelyn and McKay have further adventures with German spies and get into touch with a series of code messages being carried by pigeons.

PATHE REVIEW, No. 35 (Pathe). Some excellent tinted views of Rabat, once the principal city of Africa, lead this number. The citadel and the famous gate of Rabat are shown. Experiments with liquid air, catching live bears, dances by Mme. Desiree Lubovska, and the exposure of certain card tricks by the "slow" camera, are also included.

THE DIPPY DENTIST (Rolin-Pathe). A one-reel comic, featuring "Snub Pollard. He gets into possession of a grip containing a bottle of liquor and the police are soon on his trail. Sambo, the small colored lad, and a dog join in the chase. There is much action of the knockabout sort and the number as a whole contains considerable amusement.

Ramirez in Porto Rico.

M. Ramirez Torres, president of the Selection Film Service, Porto Rico, and Central America, is at the present time making the rounds of the territory in which his exchange does business. He is expected back in his New York office about the tenth of the coming month.

The small advertisement is not to be despised—especially when it is an announcement in The World's Classified Advertising Department.

What a Correspondent Wants to Know About the Erection of a New Theatre

HERE'S an inquiry that I've just received from a correspondent who certainly wants to get at the basic facts of the exhibition end of the industry. Any additional information that the readers of this department care to contribute will be thankfully received and printed.

The writer and several associates are interested in a project concerning which we have but little information, and knowing that there are bureaus and organizations in these times designed for the purpose of supplying specific data upon any industry of consequence, we are endeavoring to get the information we need in this manner.

To be brief, we are concerned with the promotion of a corporation that would provide a moving picture theatre for a little city that will be adequate in every particular and so far surpass the two cheaper houses that we have here as to discourage competition for years to come.

A 5,000 Town.

Ours is a small town with a population of slightly more than 5,000. It is a manufacturing city; it is essentially an amusement loving city, and the demand for high grade pictures is very great—something that we do not have at present because we have no first-class motion picture house.

Moreover, the town is destined to grow very materially, as two big new plants now going up will within two years' time add a thousand additional workmen.

A group of business men are about to form a stock company to provide this town with a first-class moving picture house, provided we can get sufficient encouragement to do so, and this depends upon the information we can secure. If you cannot answer all the questions we ask, will you kindly answer those that you can and refer us to other parties whom you think may be able to give us additional information.

A One Street Town.

(1) This is a one-street town. Is it absolutely necessary to have a theatre of this character upon the main street, provided a fair site can be secured on a side street? How much premium would you be justified in paying for a site upon the main street?

Not absolutely necessary but desirable. It will increase your patronage from those who do not deliberately start out to attend your show, but may be tempted by your display. Premium value would depend upon local realty conditions. You might reduce carrying charges of an expensive location by providing for stores at front, as per plan on page 476 of January 17 issue of Moving Picture World.

(2) For a city of this population there would be occasions requiring a theatre having a seating capacity of one thousand. Under ordinary conditions, seating capacity of five or six or seven hundred would be adequate to take care of the daily patrons of the house. Would you build the house of the maximum capacity, or would you cut it down?

Would suggest an arrangement seating 750 on main floor with a balcony of 300 seat capacity, cutting off latter except when actually required.

(3) Can you give any idea as to the dimensions this building should be—width, depth, and height? What should the interior dimensions of the theatre itself be?

Depends upon size and shape of available plot. A long and comparatively narrow theatre is preferable from projection standpoint. Note loss of seating due to width of house on page 476, already mentioned. For single floor house, not less than 24 feet high.

Stage for Shows.

(4) The stage should be built so as to accommodate traveling shows from time to time or any other features that would require the ordinary theatre stage. How much additional would this cost?

(5) Can you give us any idea of what the total cost of a building would be? What material would you recommend that it be constructed of?

Depends entirely upon material, construction and equipment and furnishings, whether theatre only or stores are contemplated in connection with same. As to material, this is a matter for you, an architect and local conditions to decide. It's not so much a question of material as how you use it.

(6) We want to furnish the place so that it will be attractive from every angle, but we do not want to overdo it. We want comfortable seats, adequate illumination, with the decorative scheme carried out. Can you give us any idea of what furnishings would come to for a house of this size, including seats

It would be easier to tell you how much to pay for a suit of clothes or a motor car. A mid-west concern recently appropriated $500,000 for a string of thirteen picture houses. In our issues of January 24 are plans and description of a house not much larger than the one that you contemplate, costing up in six figures.

The cheapest theatre chair costs $5, the most expensive stock goods costs $25. Decorations and lighting systems vary about as much. The real question is "How much do you want to spend?"

Cost of Equipment.

(7) In the matter of cost of equipment, what does a first-class machine cost? What do first-class films cost? By these we mean the best films that are produced and the first releases. What would an operator cost?

Professional projection machines start at about $425, but you will probably require two and other projection room equipment according to the electric service of your town. Best correspond with the following concerns:

Master Machine Tool Co., 2638 Park avenue, New York.

Precision Machine Co., Inc., 317 E. Thirty-fourth street, New York.

Nicholas Power Co., 90 Gold street, New York, telling them the size of your proposed distance or throw from projector to screen—whether alternating or direct current is available and whether the power is to be relied upon for service at all times. They will recommend suitable outfits and estimate on same.

It would pay you to come to New York and spend a couple of days at the International CinemaQuipment Center at 729 Seventh avenue, where you could inspect samples of apparatus and theatre equipment and observe the working of same in a well arranged demonstrating projection room and theatre as well as inspect the exhibits of accessory manufacturers from all over the country.

Rental Cost Varies.

The cost of film rental varies with the film and the territory in which it is rented. Would suggest that you read our advertising pages, decide upon the character of pictures that you desire to show and then correspond with their makers as to terms.

The minimum union scale for projectionists in your territory is probably about $30 per week. It would pay to secure the services of a good man and pay him more if necessary.

(8) We are so situated that we can get vaudeville from a town of 25,000 that is 20 miles distant. Would the earning capacity of the house be increased any by putting vaudeville on for, say, two or three nights a week? (The house can run on Sundays.)

Stick to straight pictures so far as concerns your own business. If a road

Now Paying Fifteen Cents.

(9) We are now paying 15c plus the war tax for moving pictures. Should this be reduced, advanced, or remain as it is?

Fifteen and twenty cents and tax for evenings, ten to fifteen for matinees and higher admissions for features would be right for your town.

(10) In a town of this size and with the leading house and the leading pictures, what would you estimate the gross earnings for a year would be? What would you estimate the gross cost of operation would be?

Impossible to estimate. A great deal depends upon the personal equation as represented by the manager.

(11) Would you deem it advisable to feature any other things in connection with a moving picture theatre, provided you have sufficient room, such as a Palace of Sweets, bowling alleys and pool rooms in basement, cigar stand, etc., or would you recommend that the theatre remain distictively a theatre?

You must rely greatly upon local good will. If you intrude upon the territory of confectioner, pool room keeper or cigar man, you are in line for considerable "knockin" at the hands of those who can give the knocks wide circulation. You might equip the above and rent them, do not operate them.

Wants Architect Addresses.

(12) Is it possible to secure stock plans and specifications for moving picture houses? If not, will you furnish us with the names of several architects who specialize in motion picture theatre construction?

We feel that we ought to apologize for inflicting so many queries upon you, but if there is any advantage to the industry in having new and high-grade motion picture houses built, we trust that you will endeavor to give us all the information that you can.

Write the architects listed on next text page.

Suggestions Not on the List.

And now, if you will permit, I'm going to make a few suggestions that your inquiries did not call for, but that will probably give you a better line on the entire subject.

A set of the Exhibitors' Library will make you conversant with the methods of the better class of exhibitors, enable you to understand the problems that your projectionist and electrician must master and give you an idea of theatre architecture.

The last two bound volumes of the Moving Picture World and a subscription, commencing with the present year, will place before you the latest news of films, the activities of exhibitors and give you an opportunity to study plans and descriptions of recently erected picture houses and keep abreast with the latest ideas in house equipment.

After you have studied the above literature you will be in a position to know pretty definitely what you want in many cases and where to find out in the others. At present, the chief bar to our being of more assistance to you is that you cannot tell us, within reasonable limits, what your requirements are. You will KNOW after the above course of reading and be in a position to secure definite estimates on the cost of your project.

What They Cost.

The Exhibitors' Library costs, delivered	$11.50

Bound volume, October-December, 1919, not delivered	1.50

You will find the expenditure of this sum a trifle compared with the money and time saving information that you will derive from the purchase.

What the Westinghouse-Cooper Hewitt Mercury Rectifier Is and How It Works

THE growing recognition of the fact that arc projection satisfactory to a critical public can be secured only by the use of direct current, has led to the development of several types of apparatus for converting alternating current into direct current. Prominent among these are the Westinghouse Cooper Hewitt mercury rectifier outfits. The latter accomplish the conversion function with a minimum of attention and in a most economical manner.

Westinghouse Rectifier
This is the Type W. L.

The mercury rectifier acts as a switch opening and closing alternating paths in such a manner that the two halves of the alternating-current waves are transformed into uni-directional waves, without other loss than the low electro-motive force required to overcome the resistance of the bulb, a hermetically-sealed glass receptacle containing mercury, and comprising the main element of the outfit.

These rectifiers are easy to install and require little space, and their first cost is comparatively low. They are simple to operate and have no moving parts.

The regulation is effected by means of an auto-transformer, so that power is not wasted. The efficiency of operation is therefore high.

Bulb Only Requires Renewal.

The bulbs of the Westinghouse rectifiers are of glass. The terminals are sealed in and the bulb is charged with mercury, exhausted and sealed.

In operation a certain amount of heat is developed and a portion of the mercury is evaporated . This increases the vapor pressure inside the bulb. The latter is made with a sufficient amount of surface to act as a condenser for the mercury vapor, and this condensation serves to maintain a low operating temperature. The bulb is the only part of the rectifier outfit that requires renewal.

The Westinghouse type WL projection outfit, which is the logical successor of the older forms of this type of equipment, is a simplified and inexpensive

How to Secure Harmonious Effects When Decorating a Picture Theatre

By E. C. ANDREWS

THERE are many ways of decorating and furnishing a moving picture house, and almost everyone has his own ideas on the subject; but it requires art to have the final result harmonious and pleasing. The architectural design is also an important factor in the final result.

When we step into the auditorium we at once form an opinion—sub-consciously perhaps. "This theatre is bare," "Too plain," "Too empty," if the decorations are undersized. "Too light," or "Too much sameness of color."

At the other extreme, where the decoration is heavy, we think, "It is close in this theatre," or it will induce the feeling that the whole theatre is bearing down on one, an effect of massiveness. This is the result of over decoration, too much design, or too much plastic ornamentation.

Make Patrons Feel at Home.

Every owner strives to have his theatre decorated in such a way as to give a pleasing impression, so that patrons, feel at home. Their minds are then focused entirely on the picture.

No matter who the person may be, how well educated, or how ignorant, every mind immediately forms some opinion and whether this be good or bad, depends entirely upon the judgment shown in selecting the draperies, color scheme, furnishings, etc.

No hard or set rule can be applied to the decoration of theatres, as there are many different types, and so many different color schemes to work with. Consequently, anything that is set forth here is done with the idea of taking into consideration generalities, and anyone who wishes to adapt such a plan must use much judgment even in following these ideas.

My honest opinion of the matter of decoration is, that any theatre owner or manager, contemplating having his theatre decorated, should get in touch with some reliable decorator who has handled theatre work and knows the game.

It will probably cost a trifle more money, comparatively speaking, but the result will be worth it. It is not because I happen to be a decorator that I state this. It is based on the theory that if you want a thing done right, get someone who knows how to do it.

A Concrete Suggestion.

On page 476 of the January 17 issue, appeared the plan of a theatre of the average type. I am suggesting a decorative, furnishing, and lighting scheme for this type of theatre, which is very effective and comparatively inexpensive.

Foyer ceiling in ivory. Walls in creme, and dado border finished in light buff color. If there is an artist who is mercury arc rectifier. In addition to the great price reduction, there have been made important improvements in operating characteristics which result in increased efficiency (now approximately 72 per cent) and a power factor of approximately 70 per cent.

A Single Auto Transformer.

The reduction of line voltage to the necessary value, the provision of a neutral in the transformer, and the introduction of stabilizing reactance are all secured by means of a single auto transformer, so designed that when the proper line voltage (within 10%) is applied to the primary, the secondary delivers through the bulb a steady, stable, direct current having the characteristics best suited to projection.

Regulator type accessory apparatus, included as part of the outfit, provides for adaptation to line voltage slightly off normal, automatic starting and protection of the bulb against dangerous overloads.

A single change which can be instantly made, adapts the outfit to operation of the arc on alternating currents.

The cast-iron frame in which the whole is mounted is small and compact and besides offering a neat appearance, protects the bulb against accidents.

The advantages claimed for mercury rectifiers are that they contain no machinery; the cost of the outfit is low, and the small space occupied by the outfit makes it easy to install and enables it to be placed in a convenient corner.

Advertising is not merely the purchase of so many inches of space. It is telling what you have in a way that will make your patron want to see what you offer. It is not ink, but ideas which count.

AUDITORIUM: X-Ray indirect lighting with ceiling fixtures, coves, cornices or wall boxes produces illumination results demanded in the finest auditoriums. The newest effects in color lighting are satisfactorily secured only with X-Ray indirect illumination.

STAGE: The powerful X-Ray reflector, with color screen, has revolutionized stage lighting methods. Better color values and light control are to be had with this system; with reduced current.

EXTERIOR: The theatre front must be flood-lighted with X-Ray projectors to show its beauty at night. Outline lighting with studded lamps is an expensive way to hide the theatre beautiful; flood-lighting with powerful X-Ray projectors an economical way to enhance its beauty.

DO YOU KNOW that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMANS"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Insist on that name and save money.

competent to paint a good landscape, I would suggest that landscapes be painted on canvas and applied to the side walls above the dado border, but unless certain that the landscapes will be well executed it would be better to use a neat twelve-inch border for a frieze, with a three or four inch band border all around the ceiling, about one foot away from the walls.

Auditorium in Grey.

Finish the auditorium in French grey or pearl grey with a medium ivory ceiling. I presume that there will be a plaster cornice around the ceiling, in order to break the wall and ceiling angle. This should be finished in light ivory. I would use a band border about twelve inches wide and divide the walls off in panels about fifteen feet wide, that is, using the border to panel the walls.

The reason for panelling is to break the monotony of a plain flat surface.

The interior of the panels should be carried out in tiffany or mottled effect. The color scheme of the border should be bright, not flashy. This border would be appropriate to use around the edge of the ceiling, running it about twenty-four or thirty inches from the walls. I would use flat wall paint throughout, as this does away with the shine and glare of ordinary oil paint, and I would recommend that oil color be used through the entire theatre, as water color is not appropriate or serviceable in a building where there is much wear and tear.

Cover Exits with Velour.

Where the state or city ordinance does not interfere with such treatment, I would cover the exits with medium priced velour draperies or curtains. If a blue or green color predominates in the borders used in decoration, I would suggest that blue or green draperies of a medium shade be used.

If reds or browns predominate, I would suggest some shade of medium red draperies. There should also be draperies at the entrance of the auditorium and whatever color draperies are used, the same should be used for a stage curtain.

The most attractive and satisfactory type of curtains are the type that break in the middle, drawing to either side.

Lighting of Great Importance.

The matter of lighting is of great importance, as every theatre owner well realizes. One should choose lighting fixtures with the utmost care, and should be very sure of the result before going to the expense of installation.

The simplest and most effective type of illumination for the average theatre, having a fairly wide auditorium is by semi indirect lighting. When I say semi indirect, I refer to a fixture having the lower part clouded glass. This glass can be had in almost any color to harmonize with the decorations.

These fixtures may be wired so that only one or two bulbs to each fixture are turned on during the performance. Fixtures of this type can be obtained at a nominal cost.

It is my opinion that fixtures of ornamental plaster are the most attractive, as one may have many designs to choose from and also have a more or less distinctive fixture.

If the owner wishes to carry out the lighting further, indirect wall fixtures may be obtained that throw the light upward on the wall. These fixtures may be placed either between panels, or on in each panel, about eight feet from the floor.

[Mr. Andrews speaks with authority and from experience. He is of the favorably known William G. Andrews, Decorative Company of Chicago, which has to its credit the decorative schemes of many successful picture theatres.—Ed.]

We state as an indisputable fact—Power's Cameragraphs made American projectors internationally supreme.

TO A HUNGRY MAN A GOLD BRICK IS A MIGHTY POOR SUBSTITUTE FOR A LOAF OF BREAD,—BUT AN EXHIBITOR HAS NO SUBSTITUTE AT ALL FOR A RITCHEY POSTER!

EVERY exhibitor has to sell a certain number of tickets before his bare expenses are met. It is upon the surplus that his prosperity depends.

Because that surplus may be a very small per cent. of his entire receipts he cannot afford to overlook any detail that will increase it. The additional tickets that RITCHEY posters sell are pure profit for him; is it any wonder he demands them and considers any other kind as the merest substitute?

The exhibitor wants results,—results that can only be obtained through the co-ordinated efforts of the keenest poster experts in the world. In other words he wants the kind of poster that can only be made by the RITCHEY LITHO. CORP.

The RITCHEY poster does get results! The present attitude of the exhibitor more than bears out this statement. His demand is ever growing more insistent for motion picture posters bearing the RITCHEY trademark.

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

A Thomas H. Ince Production
By George V. Hobart

Good Morning, Judge!

YOU and the public acted as judge of Douglas MacLean and Doris May in their first picture, "23½ Hours Leave." The verdict you know. It was double confinement to as many pictures of the same sort as could be made.

Well here's the first one "of the same sort"—the same sort of youthfulness, the same sort of fun, the same sort of love, the same sort of plotful, pepful story—only better.

Those who missed their first one will never miss their second!

Those who saw their first one will never miss their second!

So let 'em know you have 'em!

A Government Resolution
BE it resolved that it is the sense of the Joint Committee on Education of the United States Senate and House of Representatives that the motion picture industry of the United States be requested to do all that is within its power to upbuild and strengthen the spirit of Americanism within our people"
THE greatest motion picture of its kind ever seen, "The Copperhead", had just been made by Paramount when the above Resolution was passed
"The Copperhead" is a faithful screen reproduction of Augustus Thomas' greatest stage play. Lionel Barrymore's matchless acting in the title rôle can now be seen by the entire country
To see "The Copperhead" is to be born again as an American.
This motion picture will thrill millions of people as entertainment, but it will do more—it will show you that Love of Country is not simply a duty but the deepest root of personal happiness, lifting you above your own weaknesses, charging you with a strange new purpose in life.
"The Copperhead" shows why Paramount is supreme You are entertained—but there's something more.

"THIS motion picture will thrill millions of people as entertainment but it will do more—it will show you that Love of Country is not simply a duty but the deepest root of personal happiness, lifting you above your own weaknesses, charging you with a strange new purpose in life."

That's the message the advertisement shown here will bring to over 30,000,000 souls in these United States,—lovers of dramatic entertainment, teachers, A. E. F. men, scholars, doctors, lawyers, ministers, professors, boys and girls, fathers and mothers and good Americans, all.

Secretary Franklin Lane said recently:

"I wish that 1920 may be a Lincoln year, a Lincoln year in which our people will learn to look at things through Lincoln's eyes—those kind, wise, steadfast, honest eyes—in which there was neither malice nor envy, but a great sympathy in a noble common sense. Why can't we make this 1920 a Lincoln year?"

It is a Lincoln year. The greatest success on the New York stage today is the play "Abraham Lincoln." And beginning now—just before Lincoln's birthday, the greatest success on the motion picture screen will be "The Copperhead" whose dramatic power, sublime appeal and inspired acting have never been equalled in motion pictures.

And the 30,000,000 readers of these magazines—readers of that advertisement—are prospective patrons for you:

"ON WITH the DANCE"

WITH

MAE MURRAY and DAVID POWELL

Don't Blame New York!

SAID one: "New York! To me it typifies misery, tragedy and sin where all that is beautiful withers and dies!"

Said the other: "Nothing fine or beautiful ever dies! Don't blame New York! It's not her fault! It's the fault of those of us too weak to fight the brave fight the city inspires. Don't blame New York! She gives each of us our opportunity to make what we can of it. If we're strong and good, the good in us will win. If the bad is strongest, God help us!"

The city! Where Broadway and Hester Street and Fifth Avenue and the Bowery and Herald Square and Harlem and Riverside Drive and Avenue A all meet—the vital, flashing, magnificent, merciless city—New York!

Stripped of its masks, its innermost secrets of life laid bare in a tale embellished in luxury and made human as the beat of the simplest heart.

That's "On with the Dance!"

EVERY New York daily spoke of "The Garage" as one of the funniest pictures ever filmed, when it played four Broadway theatres last week.

The trade papers weren't far behind. They agree like this:

"No picture bearing the Arbuckle brand has ever packed more laughs into two reels of films."—Moving Picture World.

"Should prove welcome to every exhibitor."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"A fast moving comedy that will be liked."—Variety.

"Roused the spectators to loud and emphatic appreciation."—Motion Picture News.

"More laughs than any other effort of his for weeks."—Dramatic Mirror.

Exhibitors who have played it are enthusiastic in their reports.

No Matter What They Say

"THE Tree of Knowledge" is a Paramount-Artcraft sample of what a motion picture intelligently directed by a man like Willliam DeMille and crystallized from a good scenario by Margaret Turnbull can do toward helping one forget some film phantasms of the past."—N. Y. Sun.

"Margaret Turnbull has made a very intelligent scenario of R. C. Carton's melodrama 'The Tree of Knowledge' and William DeMille has contributed high class direction. The Parisian and English locations were carefully selected and there is a fine adherence to atmospheric detail. The whole presentation breathes class."—Variety.

"The play offered Paramount-Artcraft an excellent opportunity for a strong drama with keen humnn appeal. It is ably adapted and well presented."—Exhibitor Herald.

"In many respects a remarkable photoplay. Mr. Warwick a handsome and histrionically effective hero."—Evening Mail.

"Makes an excellent feature picture."—N. Y. Herald.

"All these values and the appreciation shown by a crowded house at the Rialto sum up in ranking 'The Tree of Knowledge' as a product generally and generously good."—Moving Picture World.

"The film is thoroughly enjoyable."—N. Y. Evening Post.

"Proves interesting alike for the story and the well-known cast. The story handled from an angle that holds attention."—N. Y. American.

"The story is nicely developed and the acting is of the very highest type."—Motion Picture News.

That's what the critics say in New York.

But here's the real point:

"The Tree of Knowledge" is a good picture that will please your audiences immensely, attract big business and make money for you.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY CORPORATION

It's unusual nowadays to find a firm giving better goods and improved service without extra cost, and it's just as unusual to find a News Service adding an extra feature without raising the price. One reason why the Big Three

{International News
Universal Current Events
Hearst News}

has a greater circulation than any two of its competitors is because of the unusualness of a Service which has many times added extraordinary features to its news reels (released through Universal) without added charge.

This is a reproduction of the 24-Sheet on "THE FORTUNE HUNTER"

A Play for Head and Heart

"THE FORTUNE HUNTER" is both beverage and tonic. While it pleases the palate as rare entertainment it will inspire the soul with a new birth of optimism. Those who see it will smack their lips and grit their teeth. It is a picture that carries a strong message of hope. It is a story made of man-skin, written from the inkwell of reality; two fistfulls of life pulled out of the mass.

That universal regret among the younger generation of theatregoers, who missed seeing "THE FORTUNE HUNTER" during its memorable and record-breaking stage career, shall be banished. No longer need they be envious of their elders. For these latter it will be a past treat revived. What it was as a stage play and a novel it is even greater as a photoplay. Graham Baker, who wrote the screen version, has brought out all of the author's subtleties and EARLE WILLIAMS has made the hero an excellent object lesson for all young men. TOM TERRISS directed it and the total result of all this effort has been a special production that is naturally bigger and better than the stage play could have been.

What It Did and Will Do

A Stage Success at the Gaiety Theatre on Broadway for forty-nine weeks.

A Novel that always was a "best seller" and always will be as long as people read.

To satisfy the clamor after it took Broadway by storm, road shows played it in every city of 20,000 and upwards.

Its author, Winchell Smith, has never been guilty of anything but success, witness: "TURN TO THE RIGHT" and the latest breaker of records---"LIGHTNIN'".

Now, made into a delightful special photoplay production, it will gather a new harvest of popularity; a new and greater glory for itself and sow its logic and laughs broadcast once again.

WHEN THE CLOUDS ROLL BY (UNITED ARTISTS) DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS (DEC. 20)

"Sure fire winner with any audience."—M. P. News.

Exhibitor Comment—"The fastest, funniest picture the star ever made. Better than his last one and has more action packed into it than any other film of its size. Fairbanks at his best and that's going some. Broke all house records for business. Flood scene was a masterpiece that put them all in the shade." "A splendid feature which pleased my patrons. I played it for one week and it did big business for me every day."

Consensus—"Splendid picture, good puller."

Making good all the way!

THE GREAT FBO FILM WAY

OPEN LETTERS TO AMERICAN PRODUCERS—II.

EXPLOITING FILMS IN GREAT BRITAIN

Film Booking Offices (1919) Ltd
THE GREAT FBO FILM WAY

There are three ways of exploiting a Feature—the haphazard, trusting to chance and casual advice—the empirical—trusting to the old ruts and accumulated experience—and there is the scientific way!

"The Great Filmway" combine both of the latter methods. A central London organization directed by live men, quick to detect the pulse of public taste, of sage film experience and whose reputation is such that they have achieved the last word in effective exploitation of first-class Productions, they stand at the top rank of British renting organizations.

Their methods, too, ensure the highest British prestige for every American Production they handle.

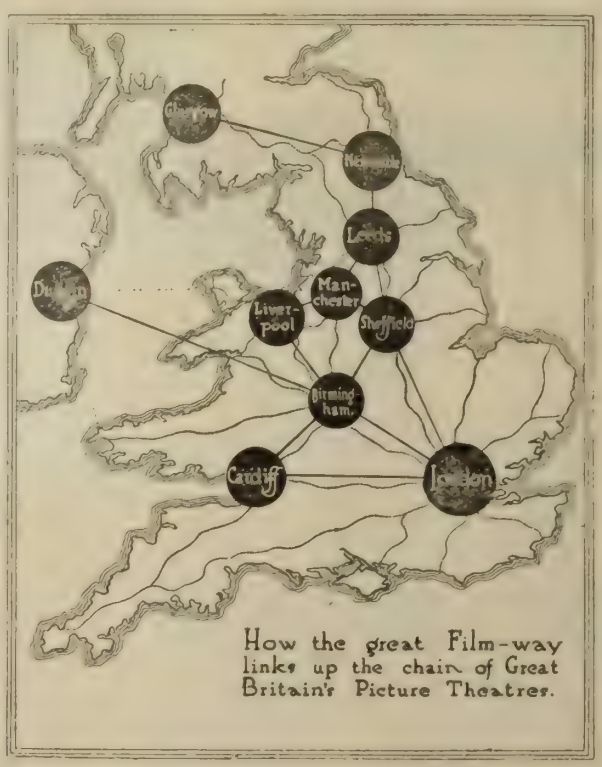
A glance at the records achieved in Great Britain by famous American productions entrusted to "The Great Filmway" will provide ample proof of their claims.

Their system of organization can be summarized briefly:

Nine Branches linking up the most profit-bearing territories are operated from the Central Organization in the hub of London.

Each Branch is a replica of the Central Organization and is fully equipped with Travelers, Private Theatre, Despatch Department, Telephone Exchange, etc.

The Sales Department operating from the Central Offices, links up and quickens the activities of The Great Filmway's Representatives in every Territory of the United Kingdom.



How the great Film-way links up the chain of Great Britain's Picture Theatres.

Its Publicity Department, under the guidance of a noted Newspaperman secures Publicity for F. B. O. features that is second to none.

The American Producer who wants to build up his business with Britain on the "rock foundation" policy, will be interested in "The Great Filmway's" system.

Our financial standing is such that we are prepared to pay cash on sight for any Productions we handle.

Write—or better still cable—us, and we will be happy to provide you with some solid satisfying facts about The Great Filmway's system.

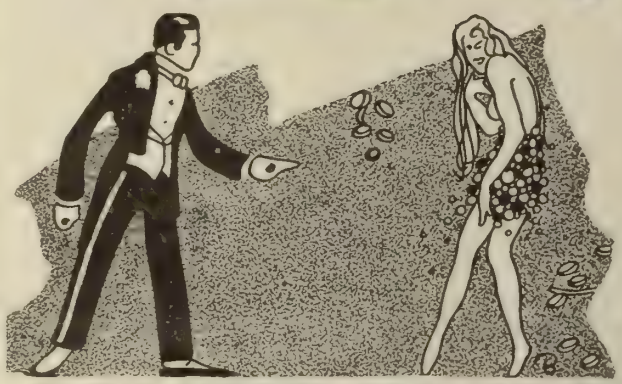
'EVE



"You will never be a lady," said the society man. And even as Eve, she replied, "I care not, so I win the man I want."

Her feminine instinct warned this unsophisticated girl to beware of the unloved male, but before she realized it she was struggling in his grasp.

The prophet of the Shining Band fought to shear her beautiful tresses, that she might be ugly in the sight of man, for his creed said that love is a sin.

Rather than see her in the arms of another, the prophet determined that she should die, and raised his rifle to fire on the lovers.

Census Ignores Screen

SEEKING information for use later in the year our daily contemporary has uncovered the fact that in the United States Census for 1920 there will be incorporated no statistics of value to the motion picture industry. When inquiry was made of the census bureau in Washington the information was forthcoming that "the motion picture industry is not a manufacturing industry in the sense of that term as included in the law."

As undoubtedly the particular law to which reference is made was put on the statute books many years ago or at least before the days of the motion picture, the information contains no matter warranting surprise on the part of any reader.

Several weeks ago the Washington bureau of the Moving Picture World instituted inquiry in the Internal Revenue Department as to the possibility of obtaining definite figures as to the number of persons paying admission taxes to motion picture houses, if there could not be adopted some method under which those admissions could be segregated from those of cabarets and stage performances, for instance, not to mention amusement parks. The reply was given at that time that such action was not considered advisable, owing to the comparatively large number of houses combining motion pictures and vaudeville, to enumerate one of the reasons.

The significance of the foregoing is that there is small likelihood of the existence of any reliable and detailed official information about the motion picture for another ten years—and not then unless some agency initiates a movement in that direction. We commend the whole subject to the attention of the directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Here is a business variously estimated as ranking from the fourth to the sixth in importance in the country, yet possessing no official record of its activities and practically debarred from having one for another decade.

Mr. Hickenbottom Is Indignant

WE print on another page a letter from J. F. Hickenbottom, of Milton, Oregon, who has been exhibiting pictures for five years. The letter is out of the usual in that the writer declares his sympathy with a movement to create boards of censorship; at least he says in a way susceptible of no misunderstanding that he will not be a party to the creation of any fund designed to combat propaganda in favor of censorship.

Mr. Hickenbottom relates an incident in which he was "stung" on a shifted booking for a Christmas performance, a substitution as to which he was not consulted, and one which he was compelled to run under the alternative of a dark house. The Oregon exhibitor points out that if censorship boards are created the support of these bodies ultimately will fall on the theatre owners; that if they are created the blame for the action may be placed squarely on the few producers whose work is responsible for the antagonism displayed by some against all pictures.

It is the unthinking as well as the unscrupulous who make unnecessary trouble for the great mass of picture men.

Male Patrons Increasing

THERE is possibly a hint for producers in the observations of Herman Stern, of Pittsburgh, which are printed on another page. Mr. Stern declares he has noticed in several towns surrounding the Pittsburgh district no longer a preponderance of women among the patrons of picture houses. Where once the feminine buyers of tickets outnumbered the masculine two to one the exchangeman says he finds in the theatres more of the men than of the women.

Mr. Stern makes no attempt to suggest the cause of this near reversal of ratio. He does not make the obvious remark that it is due to prohibition. Neither does he go on to intimate that there are any less women among the followers of the screen than formerly, nor that the shift, if there be a shift, is due to the increasing number of males seeking a new form of recreation.

What the exchangeman does say is that where heretofore among producers the feminine viewpoint has been a large consideration it perhaps may be the part of wisdom to give an increasing amount of attention to the subjects that contain matter of interest to the worldly-wise adult male. Mr. Stern's remarks make good reading.

Cleaner Films or Censors, Says Northwest Exhibitor

To the Editor of Moving Picture World:

I NOTICED recently an article about a censorship board to be established in one of the eastern states. It is suggested possibly the theatres of that state or of the United States will be assessed to raise funds with which to defeat the passage of such a law. Personally, I take issue with those behind any move to defeat a measure calculated to eliminate the rot that goes through in some of the pictures, some not fit for decent people to see, yet for which the exhibitor is forced to pay. I have refused to show a number of these in the past six months.

If the producer continues to make these kinds of productions, the exchanges continue to show them, it is only a question of a short time when all the states and all the cities and towns of note will have a censor board to support. Listen, fellow-exhibitors, the support will fall on us. If the exhibitors would refuse to show pictures of a nude character or suggestive nature the censor board problem would take care of itself.

Did you ever get really stung? I did, last fall. I contracted for a certain special attraction for Christmas. It was recommended by the salesman to be particularly suitable for this day. After the contract was secured and without my consent there was substituted another picture, one of the scenes of which was an attack by the villain on a girl behind a door locked by the former.

The picture came too late for a try-out, and I was compelled to show that rot for a Christmas night. Now, if there is a movement on foot to cut out such stuff and if I am expected to contribute to a fund to defeat that intended action you will find me the hardest nut to crack you ever tackled. Yours for cleaner pictures.

J. F. HICKENBOTTOM,
An exhibitor for five years.

Watervliet Wants Sunday Shows.

Through the common council of Watervliet, N. Y., proprietors of picture theatres in that city have just started a movement in the hopes of being able to open their houses on Sunday. A petition has been presented the council, but action has been postponed, the city's governing body apparently being split on the issue.

Tucker-Famous Players Case Is Argued in Court

A MOTION by George Loane Tucker for a temporary injunction restraining the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation from issuing lithographs and other advertising matter relating to "The Miracle Man" unless the name of George Loane Tucker was in letters as large as any other type matter, three times as large as the name of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, which produced the picture, was argued recently before Justice Platzeck of the New York Supreme Court.

Mr. Tucker also asked that the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation be restrained from cutting and assembling the second picture which he made. Mr. Tucker does not seek to enjoin the distribution of "The Miracle Man."

The defendant corporation produced evidence tending to show that it had given Tucker tremendous publicity, and that the teaser campaign which they conducted with the slogan, "'The Miracle Man' is coming," could not be regarded as a violation of any contract.

The court reserved decision.

Ministers Would Take "Sun Out of Sunday"

WHILE former Ambassador Thomas J. O'Brien, speaking before the Michigan State Society, was warning reformers to "make haste slowly" in attempting to force the passage of a Sunday closing bill for the District of Columbia, the Rev. H. W. O. Milligan, chairman of the committee of the Pastors' Federation, which is pushing the measure, told the members of his organization that the law will not be sufficiently stringent and that efforts must be made to secure its amendment by the inclusion of severe penalties for violation.

Characterizing the proposed closing law as another measure for the oppression of the people, Mr. O'Brien pointed out that too much regulation was one of the things responsible for the spread of Bolshevism in the most strictly regulated countries of the world—Russia and Germany.

"I hope this bill will not be passed," he said. "It ought not become a law, because Sunday should be a time when the people should enjoy every concession. We may, I believe, trust Congress to weed out proposed legislation which is undesirable."

Regulation, and more regulation, was the cry at the meeting of the Pastors' Federation. The Sunday closing bill, declared Dr. Milligan, will lack the desired stringency by the time it gets through Congress, and it is planned, if such is the case, to follow it with a measure which will, as one moving picture man expressed it, "take all the sun out of Sunday."

Possible failure to get the bill through at the first attempt was foreseen by the speaker, who declared that if such was the case, it would be due to the widespread indifference of the public toward a strict observance of Sunday.

T. L. Tally Resigns from First National Circuit

Los Angeles, January 27.

T. L. Tally, vice-president of First National Circuit, has sold the First National franchise for southern California and Arizona to Sol Lesser, president of the All Star Feature Corporation, and Gore Brothers, prominent Coast exhibitors, and will offer his resignation as vice-president of First National to that organization in a few days.

Tally says his intention of retiring as executive of First National is not caused by friction or disagreement of any kind, but is impelled by a desire for a less active life and a much needed rest. He took advantage of an opportunity to dispose of his franchise holdings and his retirement as an official of the circuit is the automatic result.

The Kinema Theatre, a first-run house on Olive street, owned by Tally, was also taken over by the Lesser-Gore combination. Gore Brothers control theatres in Los Angeles, San Diego, San Francisco, Seattle and Portland. Tally will devote his time to the management of Tally's Broadway Theatre.

Powers Denied Appeal in Suit with Eastman

ACCORDING to a decision handed down in Rochester last week by the Appelate Division, fourth department, the Eastman Kodak Company won another victory in its suit against Harry A. Warren and the Powers Film Products, Inc. The Appellate Division refused to grant permission to the Powers corporation to carry the case to the Court of Appeals.

The action was begun early last spring when Warren left the employ of the Eastman Kodak Company and went to Powers Film Products, Inc. Under a contract Warren was not to go to a rival firm within two years after severing connections with the Eastman Company, where he had been employed in the film-coating department.

The Eastman Kodak Company obtained an injunction order against Warren and the Powers company, which forbade Warren from working for that firm. Justice Adolph J. Rodenbeck modified the order so that Warren was permitted to work for the Powers company, but ordered him not to betray trade secrets. Later Warren was prohibited from working for Powers by a ruling of the Appellate Division. An attempt was made by the Powers firm to carry the case to the Court of Appeals but last wek's decision of the Appellate Division prevents them from doing so.

Indiana Pastors Unite to Close Theatres Sundays

MINISTERS in Plymouth, Culver, Argos and Bremen, towns in Marshall county, Indiana, have united in an effort to close the picture theatres in these places on Sundays.

In doing so, the ministers have announced that as soon as the fight in Marshall county has been completed a similar struggle probably will be started in St. Joseph, Elkhart, Laporte, Kosciusko, Starke, Pulaski and Fulton counties, all in the northern part of the state.

"The fight is more than a fight against the motion picture theatre," said one of the ministers of Plymouth in explaining his position and that of the other members of the clergy. "It is a battle to see whether the churches shall or shall not fix the standard of life in the community. The fight against the motion picture theatres is only the beginning of a fight which will eventually lead to the closing of cigar stores, candy shops and all other places which infringe on the laws of the state."

The attitude of the ministers of Plymouth is said to be supported by the congregations of the Presbyterian, United Brethern, Christian and Methodist churches. Although nothing definite has been done to date it is highly probable that the ministers of the aforementioned counties will band together and fight the proposed movement to a finish.

October Tax Returns Show Increase Over Previous Year

WHILE collections on liquor fell off some twenty-three million dollars last October, as compared with October, 1918, taxes on admissions showed an increase of two millions.

According to a report just secured from Commissioner of Internal Revenue Daniel C. Roper, $6,500,731.60 was collected from the admission tax during October, as compared with $4,452,272.12 during the same month of 1918. During the month, also, $101,244.07 was collected from the seating tax, as compared with $28,710.20 in October, 1918, and $182,412.61 was received as tax on films released and licensed.

Total collections for the month show an increase of forty-seven million dollars over those for the same month of the preceding year, the report for last October showing $182,929,487.21, although, in addition to the loss on liquor, the taxes collected on estates also fell off five million dollars.

Bacharach Introduces Substitute for Film Tax

THE repeal of the film rentals tax, in company with the present war and excess profits taxes, the soft drink and ice cream taxes and the luxury stamp and insurance taxes, is contemplated in a bill just introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Isaac Bacharach, of New Jersey.

To replace the loss of revenue Mr. Bacharach suggests a tax of one cent on each dollar or fraction thereof paid for any article of merchandise in excess of twenty cents, sold for consumption or use, up to $500; and of five cents on each dollar or fraction thereof when in excess of $500; of one-half cent on each dollar or fraction thereof, in excess of $500 on real estate sales; and one cent on each dollar or fraction thereof on sales of raw materials taken from mines, woodlands, waters, etc.

Ontario Will Censor All Sorts of Advertising

THE Ontario Government has passed an order in council which provides for the censorship of all moving picture posters, handbills, cuts, newspaper advertisements, periodical advertising, banners, flags, still photographs and lobby displays used by all theatres in the Province. A special board has been established for the purpose. The chairman of the new board is Otter Elliott, chief inspector of moving picture theatres in Ontario. J. J. Burns has also been appointed to the board and a third person, possibly a woman, wil be selected.

The order provides for the collection of a fee of $150 per year from moving picture exchanges for having all paper and photographs examined. All theatres are to be charged $10 per year for this censoring.

A penalty of from $20 to $200 is specified for failure on the part of exchange managers or exhibitors to submit all posters, advertisements, heralds and other printed matter for censorship. The order does not state how an exhibitor in a city or town seven hundred miles away will be able to send copies of newspaper advertisements or special lobby displays to Toronto for censoring and get them back in time for use for a current attraction.

Another Bill in Congress Advocating Two-Cent Coin

ANOTHER bill providing for a two-cent coin has been introduced in Congress by Senator McLean of Connecticut. The coin provided for in this measure is intended to be a memorial to the late Theodore Roosevelt, and on the obverse a medallion of the former President is to appear, with the dates of his birth and death. The coin is to be composed of an alloy consisting of 95 per cent. copper and five per cent. of tin and zinc, and is to be of a size easily distinguishable from the one-cent pieces.

Reports from the Director of the Mint show that while his department is able to keep up with the ever-increasing demand for pennies by working the mints overtime, and it has been found impossible to get far enough ahead of the demand to provide a reserve to be issued in case of necessity. The two-cent coin, it is pointed out, would not only make it easier for the mints to keep up with the demands for subsidiary pieces but would be much easier for the public to handle.

Urge Cleaner Theatres.

A campaign to bring about improved sanitary conditions in theatres in the territory covered by local film exchanges is to be inaugurated by the Salt Lake Film Board of Trade. At a recent meeting the board discussed the question at considerable length. While most of the theatres in the larger cities of the state are up to the required standard in all respects, it was pointed out that many show houses in the smaller towns are in dire need of improvement.

The film men are going to make a vigorous effort to bring about improvements in such houses. Many of them require improved ventillating facilities, and this is one of the questions that will be urged upon exhibitors.

Screen Supplants Liquor at Famous Sauntaug Inn

THOUSANDS of people with healthy appetites, expensive thirsts, a craving for music and the bankroll to satisfy all three desires have for years visited the famous Sauntaug Lake Inn at Lynnfield, Mass. New Englanders in their Rolls-Roughs and foreign diplomats in their limousines have all sought out the unique environment of this hostelry to be welcomed by Proprietor Harry Mansfield. The genial proprietor is now dead and John Barleycorn has passed away, but still the people come, another attraction having supplanted that of liquors.

The recently vacated throne room of John Barleycorn is now a projection room, presided over by two Simplex projectors. They flash the latest feature on the screen for visitors from near and far. Mrs. Eggleston, a well-known Massachusetts exhibitor, recently purchased Sauntaug Inn and added it to her chain of theatres along the north shore of Massachusetts.

The Simplexes were furnished by the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, which has also sold Simplexes in one month to the Town Hall, Middleboro; Union Square Theatre, Summerville; Rialto Theatre, Brockton, and the Strand Theatre, Lynn, Mass. Each purchased two Simplexes.

Associated Exhibitors, Inc., Starts with New York Capitol Chief Unit

THE Associated Exhibitors, Inc., with franchise holders representing 250 theatres of the country and which will have additional circuit and other alliances was lately organized at a meeting of important exhibitors held in New York City. It represents a formidable combination of theatre owners and is devoted to the development and purchase of pictures and the protection of franchise holders against other combines.

At the first meeting of the organization Messmore Kendall, president of the New York Capitol Theatre Realty Company, was elected president; Edward Bowes, New York, first vice president; James Q. Clemmer, Seattle, second vice-president; Saul Harris, Little Rock, third vice president; H. H. Wellenbrink, Newark, secretary; Harry Crandall, Washington, treasurer, and Fred. C. Quimby, general manager.

Directors—Messmore Kendall, Edward Bowes, Harry Crandall, Michael Shea, Dennis Harris, I. Lisbon, Samuel Harding, Joseph Lubliner, James Q. Clemmer, Hugo Lambach and Paul Brunet.

Initial Franchise Holders.

Among the exhibitors who have associated themselves in the new enterprise are Lubliner & Trinz Theatres, Chicago; Reuben & Finkelstein, Minneapolis; Capitol Theatre, New York; Harris & Ackerman, Los Angeles; H. Cornwell theatres, St. Louis, and Harris & Ackerman, San Francisco.

Harris & Libson theatres, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati; Paul Gustanovich, Cleveland; J. H. Cooper, Oklahoma City; Harry Crandall theatres, Washington; Samuel Harding, Kansas City; Bishop Cass Investment Company, Denver, and Harding & Cohen, Omaha.

J. Q. Clemmer, Seattle; Olsen & Sourbier theatres, Indianapolis; Harris & Libson, Detroit; H. H. Wellenbrick, Newark; Michael Shea, Buffalo; Merrill Theatre Amusement Company, Milwaukee; Clemmer & Lambach, Spokane; Samuel Harris, Little Rock, and Clemmer & Lambach, Portland, Ore.

Men of Millions Represented.

The financial interests back of the theatre circuits embraced in the organization represent millions. It is claimed that before the step was taken they had the assurance of the co-operation of other theatre owners who will join with them in the purchase and distribution of motion pictures.

In New York City the franchise of the new organization goes to the Capitol Theatre. This means that the productions taken over by the organization will have their premiere at that theatre.

Careful selection has been made of the best theatres in Chicago, San Francisco, and other large centers and important theatres in those cities have secured the franchise for their territory. This gives them first runs on the pictures.

An All-Exhibitor Organization.

The Associated Exhibitors, Inc., is completely an exhibitors' organization, according to the first announcement of its policy and plans. In each territory the franchise holder will sell subsidiary franchises for the territory.

Each exhibitor will be protected from competition in the showing of the organization's productions for he will have the exclusive rights in his territory. Thus every franchise holder will be assured of productions.

A purchasing committee made up of well-known exhibitors will pass on productions before they are bought for distribution. The purpose of the association to bring the producer, star, director and independent seller of features into direct contact with the exchange will thus be accomplished. Supplementary to this its object is to prevent any attempt at monopoly.

Promise Equity in Dealings.

Dealing directly with the star, director, or producer the exhibitors, it is asserted, will be better able to fix the valuation on a picture and to reward those responsible, according to the drawing power of their production. Their work will, it is declared, be encouraged by proper distribution of the profits to those responsible for the pictures.

It is pointed out that a committee purchasing a picture for an association of exhibitors in one contract can acquire the picture for an amount much less than the total if each exhibitor negotiated separately. The producer renting the picture can afford to name a fair price, for he is eliminating sales effort and is insuring himself a market.

Pathe Will Distribute.

The Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has selected the Pathe Exchange to handle their product throughout the world. Pathe is said to have more branch offices than any other distributing concern, is operated on sound business principles, has a long history of successful operation. Another factor in the selection of Pathe is the broad business policy and the square dealing which has characterized its relations with exhibitors.

Ferrandini and Craver Visit Atlanta.

The First National Exchange at Atlanta received a visit recently from Frank Ferrandini and R. D. Craver, owners of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Georgia, Florida, Virginia, Alabama, North Carolina and South Carolina.

C. R. Beacham, manager of the Atlanta Exchange, gave a get-together oriental supper for the visitors, all First National employes, and several visiting exhibitors.

"True southern hospitality awaits any member of the First National organization from Maine to the Pacific," says Mr. Beacham.

Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, Vitagraph Scenarist, Dies Victim of Pneumonia

VERY unexpectedly Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady died at his home on Park Hill, Yonkers, Saturday morning, Jan. 24. He was stricken with pneumonia only two days before and despite the best medical attention died surrounded by members of his family before they fully realized the danger. Dr. Brady was in his fifty-ninth year, having been born in 1861 at Pittsburg.

When he was a boy of ten his family moved to Leavenworth, Kan., where the youth subsequently was graduated from high school and was admitted to Annapolis. When he was graduated from the Naval Academy the prospects of promotion were negative and he, therefore, turned his attention to other pursuits than sailoring for Uncle Sam.

Brady was first employed in railroad work, and married in 1883, the year of his graduation from Annapolis. Clarissa Sidney Guthrie was Dr. Brady's first wife, and three children resulted from the union. Mrs. Brady died while her husband was rector of an Episcopalian church in Crete, Neb.

From Railroad Man to Clergyman.

Dr. Brady's studious nature had revolted at prosaic railroad work and he had undertaken a course in theology under Dr. Worthington, Bishop of Nebraska, with Dean Gardner of the Cathedral in Omaha as his tutor. The parish in Crete was his first charge.

From Nebraska Dr. Brady moved to Sedalia, Mo., where he was rector of the Episcopalian church, when he married Mary Bartlett, of Sedalia, who, with three children resulting from the union, survives him. St. Mark's, Denver, was Dr. Brady's next assignment and he later became archdeacon of Kansania.

It was while he was rector of a church in Overbrook, Pa., that Dr. Brady turned his attention to literature. "For Love of Country" was his first book; followed by "The Grip of Honor" and "For Freedom of the Seas." Since 1897 more than a hundred novels, juveniles and works on history and religion have been the fruits of Dr. Brady's authorship.

In the Spanish-American war Dr. Brady served with the First Pennsylvania Volunteers as chaplain—thus attaining the record of serving his country in both army and navy. Returning from the war Dr. Brady decided to make New York his home, but after living here a short time he was called to Trinity Church, Toledo, and then to St. George's, Kansas City.

Serves in Both Army and Navy.

Dr. Brady's last fixed mission as an Episcopalian clergyman was in Mount Vernon, N. Y., although he has continued to preach and do missionary work in Episcopalian churches and Y. M. C. A.'s in and around New York. He was, indeed, conducting a series of Sunday afternoon missions in St. Stephen's Church, New York, in his last days of life.

Six years ago, after two of his scenarios had been produced by other firms, Dr. Brady signed a contract to write for Vitagraph and has since been exclusively employed in turning out feature and serial stories for Vitagraph presentation. His first Vitagraph was "The Island of Regeneration."

His other Vitagraph feature included "The Chalice of Courage," "The Little Angel of Canyon Creek," "Hearts in the Highway," "The Hero of Submarine D-2" and "The Island of Surprise." The last feature Vitagraph produced from Dr. Brady's pen was "By the World Forgot."

While these works were going through the process of production there were several serials in which Dr. Brady collaborated with A. E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, in preparing and presenting. "The Fighting Trail" was done in 1917, putting Vitagraph "on the map" as a serial concern.

Six Years as Film Scenarist.

"Vengeance and the Woman," "A Fight for Millions," "The Iron Test," "The Perils of Thunder Mountain," and "The Invisible Hand" were subsequent Brady-Smith serials that have made money for showmen. There is still in Vitagraph's hand, to be produced, another serial at present unnamed. "The Invisible Hand" and "By the World Forgot" are cited as the last serial and the last feature done in Dr. Brady's life.

The degree of L.L.D. was conferred upon Dr. Brady by St. John's College, Annapolis, and other signal honors had come to him because of his ability and devotion to militant churchmanship. His funeral was conducted by Bishop Burch, of the Diocese of New York, at St. Stephen's Church, and the remains were interred in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, Tarrytown.

Colonel Jasper Ewing Brady, editor of Metro's scenario department, and Mrs. L. C. Ashbrook, Mitchell, Neb., a brother and sister, are the only immediate relatives other than those previously named, surviving Dr. Brady.

Minneapolis Exhibitors Protest as "Flu" Threatens Dark Theaters

Minneapolis, January 28.

GUARDS were stationed today by Dr. E. E. Harrington, Minneapolis Public Health Commissioner, in front of all motion picture houses with strict injunctions to disperse all lobby crowds as a preventative measure against the influenza epidemic. Ticket sellers were warned against issuing any tickets after houses were filled. Theodore Hayes, president of the Twin City Scenic Company, was appointed by the Exhibitors' Protective League as chairman of a city committee to co-operate with city health authorities following a meeting to-day of thirty Minneapolis motion picture exhibitors with Dr. Harrington to protest against the proposed closing of theatres as announced by the city health department.

Dr. Harrington was informed that if theatres here were closed exhibitors would see that every business of the city was also closed if the fight had to be taken to court. Other committee members are A. E. Parks, New Franklin Theatre, secretary; W. A. Steffes, Northern Theatre; Clyde Hitchcock, Princess Theatre; Burton Meyers, Pantages, and Henry Green, New Lake.

The Minneapolis committee will meet this week with a committee from St. Paul headed by A. E. Braddock,, of the New Liberty Theatre, to devise measures for co-operation between the Twin Cities next week during the Northwestern Automobile Show, when more than 50,000 out-of-town visitors are expected. All theatres have special attractions for the week. Finkelstein and Ruben, owners of more than twenty-five houses in the Twin Cities, ordered all newspaper advertising dropped to-day for a week because of Harrington's orders. It is estimated that guards will cost exhibitors $5,000 daily in business.

Mr. Parks issued the following statement to-day:

"Influenza epidemic is not serious. Less than 1,000 are ill in Minneapolis out of a population of 400,000. Exhibitors are tired of being singled out for persecution in every calamity. If theatres are closed, we will see that every department store in the city is closed. Theatres are fumigated and are more santary than crowded street cars, building elevators and basement stores. I favor a permanent committee to uphold exhibitors' rights in the future. Harrington's action has united exhibitors as nothing else has done."

The Exhibitors' Protective League today took up the question of assisting North Dakota exhibitors to purchase 100-foot trailers for 300 houses in the State, to carry propaganda against Sunday closing. Secretary H. L. Mitchell announced that league members will confer February 3 with A. J. Kavanaugh, Ruby Theatre, Jamestown; Joseph Isaacs, Strand Theatre, Grand Forks, and Sam R. Cornish, Strand, Fargo, representing North Dakota exhibitors, as to means for helping in the fight to reopen the State for Sunday theatres.

Harris Secures Injunction.

An opinion was handed down Wednesday, January 28, by Justice Platzek in the New York Supreme Court(Special Term, Part 1) granting an injunction to restrain the production of a motion picture, "East or West," by Carlyle Blackwell. Application for injunction was made by William Harris, Jr., producer of "East Is West" at the Astor Theatre, and Samuel Shipman and John B. Hymer, authors. Justice Platzek said in his opinion: "It is apparent that the two titles in this case are so similar as to create confusion. Plaintiff's title is fanciful and so is defendant's. Of course there can be no monopoly in the use of such words as 'east' or 'west.' Anyone may use them as part of a descriptive title. But the fanciful combination 'East Is West' is entitled to protection against another fanciful title so nearly like it as 'East or West.' The motion for an injunction is granted."

Maryland Exhibitors Vote Against Percentage and Bond Themselves

THE Governor of Maryland has promised to appoint a Baltimore exhibitor on the Censor Board of Maryland. Governor Ritchie will give a hearing to the exhibitors' side of any question which may come up pertaining to the film business in Maryland.

These facts were given out in the reading of the minutes of a meeting which was held by the Exhibitors' League of Maryland on January 19, by Secretary William E. Stumpf, at the rousing meeting held by this body of exhibitors on Sunday afternoon, January 25, in the Baltimore headquarters of the league. The meeting on January 28 was called to order by President Eugene B. McCurdy.

Those at the table with him included Samuel Berman, executive secretary of the New York State League; Thomas D. Goldberg, vice-president, and William M. Stumpf, secretary of the Maryland body. The minutes of the preceding meeting as well as the financial report were read by Mr. Stumpf, which were both approved and accepted by the members present.

The Maryland League is well on its feet according to the financial report. According to the report of Mr. Goldberg, chairman of the Business Committee, the method of utilizing the screen for advertising slides, has proved a success and is progressing very favorably.

Screen Advertising a Topic.

A point was made by Mr. Goldberg, however, that if any prospective screen advertisers approach an exhibitor, he should refer them to the business committee of the league and co-operate with them so that the project will be a success. That several exhibitors had told prospective advertisers that they knew nothing about advertising on the screen as arranged by the league, had been called to his attention, said Mr. Goldberg, and this was his reason for saying what he did.

Frank H. Durkee, chairman of the Legislative Committee, which also includes Frank A. Hornig and Harry Reddish, reported that as the Maryland Legislature is now in session, information about any bill or discussion which may come before that body will be communicated to him immediately. He has arranged for someone to watch out for the interests of the league.

Vote Against Percentage.

The new plan of percentage booking by producing companies was thoroughly condemned by those present and the following motion was made by Thomas D. Goldberg and seconded by Myer Fox:

That all members of the league are not to book any pictures on a percentage basis and that each member of the league is to deposit $100 or the equivalent thereof, to be forfeited if they play any picture on a percentage basis. This motion to take effect immediately for a period of one year after the signing of the necessary legal papers.

A storm was created at the meeting by that part of the motion relative to the depositing of $100 to show good faith. Those present became divided into two factions.

Discussion Over Percentage.

Frank Durkee lead the one against that part of the motion which was originally introduced as an amendment and later incorporated in the motion which was suggested by Goldberg, moved by Rome and seconded by Pacey. The other side was lead by Thomas Goldberg.

A heated discussion between the two factions followed and a vote was taken. Of the 34 members voting, 20 favored the motion while 14 were against it. So the motion was adopted. Mr. Pacey then suggested that a committee be appointed to interview the various members as to who would back it up, and Frank H. Durkee, Myer Fox and Marion S. Pearce were appointed.

Stirring speeches were made by Samuel Berman and Thomas D. Goldberg relative to the danger to be incurred by percentage booking. Some of the shots that Mr. Goldberg put over were:

Goldberg Fires Hot Shot.

It is none of the producer's business what the expenses of a theatre are. What right has a producer to see the books of any theatre. We want to buy pictures on a flat basis and let the producer figure his overhead and charge accordingly. Pictures should be sold like any other merchandise, so that producer and exhibitor can make a fair profit. No other manufacturers ask to see the books of the retailers, and banks are the only people who want itemized statements and that is because they are lending you money. The producers do not offer to help make up your losses.

Mr. Berman sounded a warning to the exhibitors by stating that the profits to the theatre manager or owner, if they accepted the percentage booking proposition, would in a short time, not be a fifty-fifty proposition, but would probably be a 75-25 per cent. basis—75 per cent. being in favor of the producer.

"It may come to the point where there will never be a flat rate again for booking pictures, if the percentage basis gains headway," he said. He also stated that he had been down south recently to get a line on business conditions and he found most of the exhibitors very nervous relative to business at the present time and explained that the Lynch interests had bought out 176 theatres.

Berman Sounds a Warning.

How the owner is approached and his theatre bought, notes being given, and then the profits of the theatre being used to pay off the notes, which practically means that the theatres pay for themselves, Mr. Berman explained.

Louis Schlichter said that only recently in New York he had heard someone connected with a producing company brag about how the percentage basis had been put over in Baltimore and what big chumps they were.

Mr. Berman next spoke about advertising reels that are now being produced by a certain company regularly, which are rented through state leagues to exhibitors on a fifty-fifty basis and half the rental thereof being given to the league for its territory

A list of names which are to be submitted to Governor Ritchie, from which he is to make a selection for an exhibitor to be appointed on the censor board was made up. The next appointment for the censor board that will be vacant will be the chairman of the board

As the Democratic party is now in power in Maryland, it was decided that this appointment would have to be a Democrat, so all the names on the list are staunch Democrats.

Governor Shows Fairness.

When Governor Ritchie spoke to the exhibitors at the meeting on January 19, he is reported to have said that he was willing to co-operate with all businesses and industries in the state of Maryland regarding their troubles and complaints But he wanted a man who was in the business to come and talk to him rather than have someone outside of the industry talk to him as its representative.

There is also a chance, it is understood, to have an exhibitor of Baltimore appointed on the State Board of Moving Picture Operator Examiners. Harry Cluster and Louis A. DeHoff were the names mentioned for this appointment.

Elect Officers and Directors.

Next the election of officers and Board of Directors for ensuing year was held and the following members were unanimously chosen: Eugene B. McCurdy, president; Thomas D. Goldberg, vice-president; J. Louis Rome, treasurer, and William E. Stumpf, secretary. Sixteen names were nominated for election to the board of directors, and an election followed with the result that the seven members were elected as follows: Charles A. Hicks, Walter Pacey, Frank H. Durkee, Frank A. Hornig, Louis Schlichter, Benjamin Cluster and Wallace High.

List of Those Present

Those present at the convention were: Harry Morstein, Wallace High, Arthur B. Price, Harry Reddish, Myer Fox, Vincent Valentini, Miss Ulman, Mr. Ulman, J. Louis Schlichter and Mr. and Mrs. Phillip Miller.

Famous Players-Lasky Executives and

Company Will Institute Individual Exploitation and Feature Aids to Exhibitors

EXECUTIVES and sales representatives of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation from all the districts and branches of the organization throughout the United States opened the first national convention of its character ever called in the history of the moving picture industry at the Hotel La Salle, Chicago, Monday morning, January 19, and closed Friday evening, January 23.

Adolph Zukor, president of the organization; Jesse L. Lasky, vice president; Arthur S. Friend, treasurer, and H. D. H. Connick, chairman of the finance committee, did not arrive until the Friday morning session, making the closing day the most interesting and spectacular of the convention.

Monday's Sessions.

The convention was called for the purpose of discussing problems of sales, distribution and exploitation. The opening session was conducted by Al Lichtman, general manager of the department of distribution, at which he sounded the keynote of the convention. He reviewed the history and development of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation from the days of the Famous Players Film Company, the original organization, and the first feature release, "Queen Elizabeth," up to the present time, and he touched on the various problems that had been encountered and which resulted in the development of various plans of distribution.

Mr. Lichtman reviewed the various sales and distribution methods which had been followed in the past and announced that the sales organization was going back to first principles, namely, that every picture would be ultimately distributed and exploited solely on the basis of its own merit, without reference to any other consideration.

"All the methods of the past have been makeshift methods," said the speaker. "These were developed and employed to meet emergencies as they arose. None were based on a consideration of all the elements of solid fundamentals. One picture is the basis of the industry and each picture must be distributed to the exhibitor and to the public absolutely on its own merit. The time of the exhibitor must be measured against the quality of the picture.

Era of Specialization.

"This is the era of specialization and we must be specialists on every picture. We are organizing a special force of exploitation experts and salesmen combinging the duties of selling first to the exhibitor for the producer, and then selling to the public for the exhibitor. The plan calls for the recreation of our sales force. It calls for the organization of a corps of film experts, who will consider each production as a living thing and not as so many cans of film. This exploitation force will be increased by one man for each exchange, he to work under direct control from the home office and in thorough harmony and co-operation with the branch executives."

After the opening session the publicity and advertising department and the exploitation force met in separate session, with John C. Flinn, director of publicity and advertising, presiding, to discuss exploitation problems. The distribution department continued its departmental sessions, with Mr. Lichtman presiding.

Tuesday's Sessions.

Problems arising in the sales and exploitation departments of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation were considered in detail during the second day of the convention of executives and representatives of the sales and exploitation department.

Among the items of discussion were film service on a percentage basis and the element of skipped bookings. Methods to reduce the number of skipped bookings were also discussed.

One of the interesting features of the session was the urgent instruction given to branch managers that reports be made to the home office, New York, on all salesmen who show promise of developing their ability, so as to justify placing them in positions of greater responsibility.

In the course of the general discussion Mr. Lichtman said:

"We are going to continue to be the leaders in this industry both in production and in distribution. We can distribute in any way that any other organization can distribute, and in any way that their product can be distributed.

Won't Shut Out Exhibitors.

"Exhibitors have taken in $750,000,000 through their box offices in the last year and we feel that we could invest our money in the exhibiting end of the business with chances of getting better returns on our investment than we now receive; but we feel that if we were to do this we would shut out other exhibitors and thus cut off our own production outlet."

A tribute was paid to Cecil B. DeMille for the quality of his releases.

John C. Flinn, director of advertising and publicity, outlined the general plan of publicity and exploitation which will be adopted, by which each production will be given individual exploitation by experts in the field. Claud Saunders, manager of the department of exploitation, followed, giving further details of this plan of development. Jerome Beatty, advertising manager, detailed the improvements that have been made in poster paper designs, and described the phenomenal growth and development of the designing department in that and other advertising work.

The exploitation department representatives held a separate meeting at which their work was outlined in careful detail by John C. Flinn. A. C. Dillenbeck of Hanff-Metzger, Inc., advertising, discussed the national advertising campaign and the part it plays in the general exploitation of the productions.

Wednesday's Sessions.

The sales organization and the advertising and exploitation departments held a joint session and considered a wide range of subjects. During the day an open forum was held at which the exploitation representatives from various sections explained the manner in which they had carried out their plans for the benefit of exhibitors. It was shown that a special effort had been made by the exploitation forces to aid the small exhibitor to get the maximum of revenue from the pictures shown. This work has been highly successful throughout the country.

During the day the plans for the growth and extension of activities of the exploitation department were discussed in detail, and it was decided that no more pictures will be handled than can be given thorough and comprehensive exploitation. The dates on the calendar will no longer regulate releases. The only regulation will be their own pulling power.

Will Feature Accessories.

The attention of the convention was given to the matter of marketing accessories in such a way that they will bring increased revenue to the exhibitor. The proper use of accessories is of vital importance to the box office and the exhibitor will be educated to the intelligent use of these money makers.

The delegates attended the Winter Garden show in the Consumers Building, in the evening, and the leading men of the convention were made the butts of the jests of the performers. They then went to the Chicago office of the organization, where they were the guests of Special Representative J. W. Allen and Branch Manager Fred Creswell. They viewed the first pre-release of "On with the Dance" and a special production showing the ramifications of the department of foreign distribution of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. A light supper was also served, after which the exchange was inspected thoroughly.

Thursday's Sessions.

The only item of Thursday's business given out was the speech of H. D. H. Connick, chairman of the finance committee of Famous Players-Lasky, which was delivered during the afternoon session. The speech follows:

"No business that I know of has the opportunity today that the motion picture business has. You have got the greatest company; you distribute the greatest pictures and you have an organization that is ten times bigger than any other, and bigger than all the others put together.

"Your company's financial condition is as fine as that of any other big corporation in any line. At the rate you are growing now I would not be surprised to see the corporation grow to three times its present size and power within the next few years.

Connick Declares Industry Has Had Only Average Share of Diseases of Childhood

Proportion of Margin Inadequate.

"All you have got to do is to watch your step and push your pictures. The only big criticism that I would make is that you operate on too small a margin. You do not get the same proportion of margin that the man gets who makes any one of a large number of other products.

"You are in a good substantial, solid industry. It is just as firm a business as any other industry. This business has no more of the diseases of childhood than any other big business has had.

"You have not begun to scratch the surface of your possibilities. There is the foreign field; there is the wonderful future for the feature production and all the other fields of which you now have a little knowledge. New fields will develop as the industry grows, which will give you even greater opportunities for expansion than you have known.

"No need to worry about the combination of other interests. The same thing occurred when United States Steel was organized. There were plenty of imitators; but none of them got very far. United States Steel is all right because its foundation was secure and sensible. So is Famous Players-Lasky Corporation."

Friday's Sessions.

Adolph Zukor, president, and Jesse Lasky, vice president in charge of production, were present at the morning session. Mr. Lichtman again was in the chair.

President Zukor's speech on the occasion was not given out to the press; but it is said that he aroused enthusiasm among the delegates by his reference to the loyal and steadfast service which they have rendered and to his confidence in their purpose to develop and grow with the organization in the future.

Plays and Stories Under Contract.

Vice President Lasky held the close attention of the delegates as he outlined a program of production which will insure to the exhibitor the choicest material available in book stories and the drama. He announced that arrangements had been completed with a number of successful writers and with theatre organizations, by which the organization will receive the benefit of their entire output. He mentioned in this regard the works of J. M. Barrie, secured through the Frohman interests; George Broadhurst's, through the same channel, and also the works of John Williams, Oliver Morosco's productions and others of like merit. Famous Players-Lasky has the first call on all of these for their works, Mr. Lasky declared.

Speaking of directors, Mr. Lasky said that the services of the "big five" are assured for a number of years. These include Cecil B. DeMille, George Fitzmaurice, William DeMille, George Melford and William D. Taylor. This list does not include Hugh Ford, whose work in London can well be classed with that of the others. The "big five" will probably make twenty special productions in the year.

Great Stock Company Announced.

Mr. Lasky said that the production department has also developed the idea of a great stock company, which will enable the producers to put on their productions with an all star cast.

Mr. Lasky stated that plays already contracted for, or which are now in work, include "Peter Ibbetson," "The Sea Wolf," "The Roundup," with Roscoe Arbuckle as the Sheriff; "The Sorrows of Satan" (by Marie Corelli), "Held by the Enemy," "The Prince Chap," "The Fighting Chance," Victor Hugo's "Toilers of the Sea," in which some wonderful spectacular effects, including the battle with the sea monster, will be filmed; "The Savage," "The Man Who Killed," "The Heart of Maryland," "Civilian Clothes," "The Crimson Alibi," "Sacred and Profane Love," in which Elsie Ferguson is to star on the speaking stage and in which she will star in the picture production; "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," which John Barrymore has just completed for Famous Players; "Declasse," "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," "For the Defense," "The Charm School" and "The Great Day." "We will also have the works of Max Marcin and Salisbury Field to draw upon," Mr. Lasky said.

Mr. Lasky promised that the art titles of motion pictures produced by his department will be made most distinctive by the employment of artists of unquestioned ability, who will title the pictures in the spirit of the production itself. Radical improvements and developments in this line are promised.

What the Convention Accomplished.

The inauguration of a completely new plan of exploitation and distribution of Paramount-Artcraft picture was brought about by the convention just closed. The change from old methods, in themselves highly successful but outgrown, is almost revolutionary in character. The plan is to give the exhibitor of Paramount-Artcraft pictures the maximum financial returns on every picture of that brand that he shows. Each picture will stand absolutely and solely on its own merits, without relationship to any other picture. Each picture will make its own record for the exhibitor and for the producer. The good ones will stand on their merits and will not serve to bolster up the occasional weak ones.

The motion picture going public will be the sole judges of the compensation received by the exhibitor and the producer. To the exhibitor it means that he will get the full pressure of the exploitation, sales, advertising and publicity departments back of every picture he shows. This force will be concentrated on the individual picture instead of being scattered among the list. The adoption of this plan will bring about a complete reorganization of the exploitation and sales departments to meet the new conditions.

First Step in Reorganization.

The first step in the reorganization will be to double the number of the existing force and train the new men to carry out the work in the field. This work will be outlined by a corps of experts in the home office and in the field. Each exchange headquarters will have assigned to its territory one or more of these trained exploitation men whose services will be given direct to the exhibitor. A zoning system will be worked out, as quickly as it can be done, with an intelligent consideration of all local conditions and requirements. Exploitation salesmen will be assigned to these zones and will carry the exploitation to the box-offices.

The adoption and application of this plan will open the way to every exhibitor of Paramount-Artcraft pictures for longer runs of pictures with merit, to greater profits from the showings and to more thorough and satisfactory conditions in every element of their relationship to the distributing organization.

To Announce Profit Sharing Program.

It was announced during the convention that the finance committee and the executives of the corporation are completing a profit-sharing program, the details of which will be given out in the near future. The committee has been at work on this plan for several months, investigating the operation of various similar plans that have been adopted and put into effect by other corporations, and taking the best elements from all these for their use.

"Pep" Issued Daily During Convention.

During the convention a daily edition of "Pep," the confidential house organ of Famous Players-Lasky, was issued by the publicity department. It was edited by Gordon H. Place, editor of Progress-Advance, directed by Mr. Flinn.

Accompanying the New York delegation were George W. Weeks, of Toronto, general manager of Famous-Lasky Film Service, Ltd.; N. L. Nathanson, Toronto, and A. H. Blank, Omaha, who operates an important chain of theatres in the Middle West.

The following district managers were present: Harry Asher, Boston; W. E. Smith, Philadelphia; C. E. Holcomb, Atlanta, Ga.; Louis Marcus, Salt Lake City; Herman Wobber, San Francisco.

The special representatives present were Melvin Shauer, New York; J. W. Allen, Chicago; M. H. Lewis, Kansas City; W. J. Pratt, Atlanta, New Orleans and Charlotte, N. C.; L. L. Dent, Dallas, Texas.

Robertson-Cole Has Release Rights to Johnson's "Who's Your Servant?"

"WHO'S YOUR SERVANT" has been secured for release by Robertson-Cole from L. L. Hiller, who controlled the world rights to the production penned by Julian Johnson, a motion picture critic of national importance. This special feature has attracted the attention of hundreds of exhibitors in all parts of the country, owing to its exploitation possibilities and the timeliness of its story.

The picture is based upon a stage play that had a successful run at the Princess Theatre in New York City. The plot lays bare the astonishing conditions prevalent in some homes owing to the confidence which the family has in its servants. To carry out this theme, Mr. Johnson was in constant communication with one of the leading police officials of the United States, who took a personal interest in the making of the drama.

Statistics compiled by Mr. Johnson show that every city in the country at the present time is having its own troubles in settling the servant problem. Murder, theft and fire are placed directly at the door of the servants in Mr. Johnson's story, and he shows how these evils have their origin and what are the methods of bringing peace and qniet into the home via the servant route.

Well Exploited.

One of the leading first run exhibitors in the United States, while on a visit to New York, asked to see the film. After the screening this man of national importance in filmland said that "Who's Your Servant?" was without doubt one of the best pictures ever given to the trade for exploitation, according to Robertson-Cole.

"'Who's Your Servant?' is without doubt one of the best exploitation pictures ever sold by me," said Mr. Hiller. "As soon as I heard the title of Mr. Johnson's version of the up-to-date servant question I wanted to see the print. To see this picture is to book it, for after I had the production screened, I secured the world's rights to the sensation of the year.

"There is a tieup for every exhibitor in the land in this picture. The police approve of it, and as Mr. Johnson's theme is true to nature, exhibitors will receive all kinds of assistance to put this picture over with a bang. It is a big picture with a big theme and contains a wealth of exploitation possibilities."

Many Accessories.

No matter what the exhibitor wishes to feature in his exploitation, whether it is his lobby, stunts, advertising tieups or window displays, he will find his problems all solved when he books "Who's Your Servant?" The campaign book and the special publicity supplement cover every possible angle involved in selling the picture to the public. Besides these there is a long list of accessories that range from a tiny sticker to elaborate four-color designs for postals and window cards.

Special attention has been devoted to the development of ideas that will enable the exhibitor to build up his advertising in co-operation with public service corporations, merchants and others. This plan gives the theatres the benefit of whole page newspaper advertising at a no greater expense than he customarily spends on an ordinary production.

To Stage Fight Scene in Mountain Pass.

British and Indian troops numbering 900 will battle in the Santa Susana Pass during the coming week for scenes of "The Hope," the Drury Lane melodrama now being filmed by Screen Classics, Inc., as a Metro release. This pass, located in the mountains above Chatsworth, Cal., is the division between the San Fernando and Ventura valleys.

It was chosen as the location for the fighting scenes because of its similarity to the famous Khyber Pass in India. This historic "gateway to India," is the scene in Cecil Raleigh's and Henry Hamilton's melodrama of a spirited engagement between Afghanistan savages and troops of the British India army.

Goldwyn Has Controlling Interest in the Bray Pictures Corporation

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION now holds a controlling interest in the Bray Pictures Corporation, whose product it has been distributing since September 1919. It is stated that the scope of the Bray Corporation's production will be substantially increased along entertainment, educational and industrial lines. The first move will be the introduction of a weekly release under the title of Goldwyn-Bray Comics, in addition to the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph.

At a meeting recently held the following officers and directors were elected. J. R. Bray, president; Francis A. Gudger, vice president; J. F. Leventhal, vice president; Moritz Hilder, treasurer; Gabriel L. Hess, secretary; Erich Sonay, assistant secretary, assistant treasurer; Watson B. Robinson, assistant secretary. Executive committee: Francis A. Gudger, chairman; J. R. Bray, Samuel Goldwyn. Board of Directors: J. R Bray, Francis A. Grudger, E Dean Parmelee, Duncan A. Holmes, J F. Leventhal, F. J. Godsol, Max Fleischer, Moritz Hilder, Watson B. Robinson, Gabriel L. Hess.

Leslie's and Judge Represented.

In making the Goldwyn-Bray Comics the producers will have the backing of the extensive resources of the Leslie Judge Co., publishers of Leslie's Weekly, Judge and other magazines. The Comics will contain one of Bray's animated cartoon subjects and a compilation of paragraphs selected and edited by Leslie's and going under the general head of Penpoints.

Mr. Bray declares there is a steadily increasing demand for instructive subjects coming from schools and other institutions. The Bray company controls patents that make it possible for instructive drawings to be perfected to the highest point, and the same processes may be utilized in conjunction with straight photograph in making industrial films.

Another important step in the progress of the organization is the sending of cameramen to all parts of the world to secure travel and scenic subjects in far-away countries never before visited by photographers. Several expeditions already have been sent out and others are planning to leave soon.

Bray Among Cartoon Pioneers.

The growth of the Bray organization forms one of the interesting chapters of motion picture history. Back in the early days of the screen, Mr. Bray then a newspaper cartoonist contributing to the leading comic weeklies and various newspaper syndicates, conceived the idea of putting humorous cartoons into motion pictures.

During 1912 he perfected a process whereby animated pictures could be produced at a profit. Under these processes the number of drawings necessary was reduced from thousands to hundreds, the time from months to days, and the quality and artistic finish were greatly improved. Patents were obtained on the process.

The first cartoons were distributed under a contract calling for six cartoons within six months and a try-out, the negative being sold outright. The initial subjects met with such success that a large increase in production was demanded, and Mr. Bray trained a staff of assistants until he had a force of twenty-five artists in his employ.

Joined Goldwin Last September.

In 1914 Bray Studios, Inc., was formed with a capital of $10,000. In 1915 the company decided to retain ownership of its own negatives, having arranged for the distribution of the prints throughout the United States. Business relations with Goldwyn date from last September.

Finding that cartoons went best in lengths of 500 to 600 feet, the Bray company decided to put educational split reels on with the cartoons to balance the release and complete the 1,000 feet. Thus Bray became a pioneer in the educational subjects because of the funny cartoons attached to the releases, in spite of a strong prejudice against educationals at that time. In this way educational pictures were introduced into many theatres, until now programs are not considered complete without an educational subject as a part of it.

Helped Greatly in War Training.

During the war the Bray company discovered that the processes used in producing cartoons were adaptable for making animated technical drawings for educational purposes, and films of this type were produced and circulated with great success. Early in the war Bray went to West Point and produced six reels on the training of a soldier. The War College accepted Bray's idea, appropriated money for motion pictures for the training camps and the Bray company was commissioned to make the films.

These pictures show the operation of the mechanism of the Lewis and Browning machine guns, rifle grenades, trench mortars and all the various ordnance pieces, as well as how to read military maps, harness cavalry horses, etc.

As a result of the success of this type of picture in the war, a great demand for these films has developed among industrial concerns for the training of their men, exploiting their goods, and in other ways increasing the efficiency of their business. Educational institutions are calling for pictures of the kind, because it has been found that many of the scientific courses can best be explained by the animated technical drawing. Films on botany, astronomy, chemistry, physics, biology, geology, history, geography and other sciences have already been produced by the Bray company.

The latest development of this concern is the cartoon in color, which has just been perfected. It will doubtless be of great value commercially because of the new artistic possibilities it opens.

The company's steady development resulted in recently increasing its capitalization from $10,000 to $1,500,000 to provide for the expansion of its business. Bray Pictures Corporation will now be able to develop further the educational and industrial fields.

Equity Plans Graphic Pageant for Easter Pilgrims to Western Mecca

A PAGEANT in which 2,000 people will participate and in which motion picture players will constitute the entire cast of principals for the first time in history, is to be staged at Riverside, Cal., Easter Sunday, April 4. Clara Kimball Young and her producing organization will be responsible for the entire pageant, and Miss Young will be seen in the leading role.

Riverside, Cal., has long been the Mecca of Christian worshippers on Easter, and each year thousands make the pilgrimage to a huge wooden cross on top of Mount Rubidoux, just outside the town. This cross, erected by Frank Miller, owner of the famous Mission Inn, of Riverside, is on the highest peak of the range, and can be seen for miles.

Miss Young and her company will stage the pageant on the lawn of the Mission Inn, thirty miles from Los Angeles, and the drama pageant will be Marah Ellis Ryan's story of southern California, "The Soul of Rafael," in which Miss Young will appear in a motion picture production for Equity. "The Soul of Rafael" is woven around the missions of the Sunset State and lends itself admirably to this enterprise.

Many to Take Part.

Two hundred Indians have been secured from the government and will be transported from their reservations to Riverside. One thousand natives of Riverside county will take part as supernumeraries. Monks and priests from Santa Barbara, San Rafael and other noted missions will be seen in the pageant, and Clara Kimball Young, Conway Tearle, Sam Sothern, Edward Kimball and all the other principals at the Garson studio will have the leading parts, with Miss Young in the title role.

Harry Garson will have charge of the staging, assisted by a number of technicians, and John W. Voshell, technical director at Garson's plant, will be in charge of sets and construction. There will be no admission charges, but Garson will photograph a number of the scenes to be used later in the film production of the same story. The United States Railroad administration will offer excursion rates for the occasion and will exploit the affair at all railroad stations and ticket offices.

Proceding the pageant there will be services on top of Mount Rubidoux, at dawn, on Easter Sunday. This manifestation occurs every year at the same hour and is usually the attraction for 10,000 or more people. After this service the drama will be staged.

Miss Young has secured the services of a number of California organizations and a number of historians who will aid in putting the proper atmospheric touches to the attraction. Marah Ellis Ryan, authoress of "The Soul of Rafael," will also aid in the production, as she will later with the film offering. Churches and religious organizations throughout the entire state have already pledged support and 50,000 spectators are expected this year.

Applause Greets First Screening of Violet Hopson Film in Canada

A PRIVATE screening of the first of the British releases to be presented in Canada through the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, Ltd., Montreal and London, took place at the Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, on Friday, January 16, before an invited audience of 300 people who evinced their appreciation of the picture by considerable applause.

The feature screened was "The Gentleman Rider," a Violet Hopson production, in which the stars are Violet Hopson, George Scott and Stewart Rome. Like many other British pictures, the plot revolves around a horse race at Epsom Downs. The screening was arranged by Milton F. Gregg, V. C., M. C., of Ottawa, who is one of the directors of the Anglo-Canadian Picture Plays, which holds or controls the Canadian rights for fourteen British film producers.

Comment Favorable.

The comment of experienced moving picture men regarding the quality of the feature shown at the Imperial Theatre was quite favorable. It was evident that the sympathy and sentiment of the crowd was aroused toward the British picture while the exhibitors who saw the presentation and who looked upon it more from the box office point of view, regarded the release as being among the best that had ever been brought from England.

No severe criticism was offered by exhibitors. One man expressed the belief that the sub-titles had been remade in Canada, as they were better than had been seen in previous British attractions. One man declared that too many British film plots were based on a horse race, a comparatively large number of British features seen in Canada during the past year or two being of this type.

Sentiment Favors British.

It is understood that no attempt was made to secure local bookings for the feature after it had been shown, as the apparent purpose of the screening was to introduce the Anglo-Canadian company to the public. The newspaper critics who viewed the picture were quite favorable in their reports. One newspaperman declared that the picture equalled the "standard productions of well-known American companies." One prominent local exhibitor declared that "The Gentleman Rider" was worth a three-day booking.

There is a strong possibility that the British features, as secured by the Anglo-Canadian Company and distributed by the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., Montreal, will gain some headway in Canada, because the sentiment of the people generally has been aroused in favor of British productions by a number of government officials, so-called Imperialists and others, ever since the release in Canada of a considerable number of war dramas of American origin. Feeling ran high in some sections against the American war pictures for a time and there are those who yet express themselves strongly in the matter.

Gallagher to Star in Supreme Comedies.

Another name has been added to the list of stars appearing in Supreme Comedies, released by Robertson-Cole. Ray Gallagher, for many years a juvenile leading man on the legitimate stage, will be co-starred with Molly Malone.

Mr. Gallagher returns to the screen after an absence of two years, during which time he toured the world with the Melies Company. He played in many Christie Comedies three years ago.

"Artistic Temperament" will be the first production. It is said to be a clever bit of satire on "temperamental" persons.

Another Supreme Comedy which will shortly be released is "Her Novel Idea," in which Teddy Sampson and Harry Depp play the leading roles. It was written by Frank Roland Conklin.

Realart Claims Good Cast in Support of Miss Minter

MARY MILES MINTER has completed her second Realart offering, "Judy of Rogues Harbor," adapted from the novel by Grace Miller White. The story is a mirror of American girlhood.

Miss Minter is provided with varied opportunities to employ her youth and charm. Heart interest is stressed by Realart as the vital quality, and Miss Minter is said to put this human message across with skill.

One of the outstanding characterizations is the role of Pop Ketchell, depicted by Theodore Roberts. Herbert Standing, as the governor of the state, is said to invest the part with naturalness and dignity.

Among the other players are Frankie Lee, Allan Sears, Clo King and Fritzie Ridgeway. Director William D. Taylor has had supervision of the production. He declares that the evenness of the cast gives the story opportunity to get across. The novel was adapted for the screen by Clara Beranger.

Educational's Growth Necessitates Fifteen New Distributing Offices

THE Educational Films Corporation has grown so large that it has been found necessary to open offices in fifteen of the large distributing points east of the Mississippi river in order to meet with the ever-increasing demand for quick delivery of their attractive short scenics and educationals.

This enlargement of the Educational's scope is the net result of E. W. Hammons' recent trip to Europe to confer with the group of English interests that are closely allied with Educational. It means further ambitious developments of a branch of the film industry that has been growing by leaps and bounds for two years.

Five years ago Mr. Hammons started to put Educational output on the screen and met with such serious rebuffs that anyone less persistent would have given up in despair. The great majority of exhibitors insisted the public would not be interested in anything that savored of the educational. These were the days of crude thrillers, when that element of all development, imagination, was not overly plentiful.

Overcame Prejudice.

Gradually Mr. Hammons beat down this prejudice, and his scenics and wild animal life studies found their way upon the screen. Today the world is being photographed in terse units and being brought to the view of the patron in the smallest picture houses in the land as well as the most pretentious ones.

Educational Films Corporation has grown from an experiment into one of the important factors of the film industry. It is backed by great resources both as to finances and intelligent direction of its affairs. Mr. Hammons declared after his return from London, where larger affiliations for world conquest were completed, that the sky is the limit and the bottom of the sea is to be penetrated before the scope and reach of Educational films is one-tenth explored.

"At one of the labratories we are now perfecting," said Mr. Hammons yesterday, "a camera which will register life under the waves and show the hidden beauties of the deep. In marked contrast to this development will be an aero service with specially outfitted camera equipment for catching bird life on the wing, and the only limit is the height to which an aeroplane can be raised.

Represented the World Over.

"Expeditions carefully outfitted by Educational are now in India, Africa, the Arctic regions, South America, the South Sea Islands, Antarctic fields, China and the Far East and the wonders of Europe and America, contrasting civilization with every form of wild animal and natural life in the remote places of the world. Here the camera will unerringly reveal beauties and conditions which have been known to only the most daring of explorers or the few scientists who have devoted their lives to unearthing the secrets of the unexplored world."

Mr. Hammons naturally was reticent to discuss the part he has played in developing this field for the moving picture industry, a branch to the advancement of which he and his associates have contributed so largely. And now from the humble start, when men had to be coaxed and cajoled into showing the pioneer scenics and natural life studies, he has reached the position where the output is in such demand that a chain of offices is to be opened to facilitate delivery.

Educational views and subjects are chosen from the carefully gauged angle of the exhibitor, for these scenes and life studies are not mere photographic achievements, but are selected with a thorough knowledge of the entertainment and dramatic qualities combined. It is never overlooked that the theatre after all is a place of amusement and nothing lives upon the screen that does not possess the dramatic flavor.

Plan Musical Accompaniments.

Joseph Lee, one of the best known film hustlers, has just joned Educational and has left on an extensive tour of the country east of the Mississippi river to open distributing offices for the new output in fifteen of the great centres where film exchanges are now flourishing. By the time this trip is concluded, Mr. Lee, under the guidance of Mr. Hammons, will have placed Educational's output at the immediate call of the exhibitor and in such a way that these studies will be given the same expert exploitation that is now devoted to a feature.

It is likely that some of the finer efforts will have special musical accompaniments arranged for them, and the advertising specials and illuminating press copy will supply the exhibitor with the same pretentious aid that is now turned out by the biggest presenting forces that handle feature subjects for screen distribution. This concentration of energy and exploitation means an ever increasing interest in Educationals.

Pathe Press Force Enlarged by Addition of Three Men

THE Pathe publicity and exploitation service have been strengthened with the addition of Thomas C. Kennedy, J. Irving Greene and Joseph A. Brady. Mr. Kennedy started on the staff of Motography five years ago and later joined the Exhibitor's Trade Review in November, 1916, as a reviewer and advisor on exploitation. He is now handling the publicity on the Jack Dempsey serial, "Dare Devil Jack."

Mr. Greene is a graduate of Brown University. His initial work was on the newspaper advertising of the "Elaine" serials. He remained with International until 1917, when he joined the advertising staff of Paramount. Later for a short time he did special promotion work for the Edward MacManus Corporation. In the Pathe forces he is working with Victor Shapiro, who is in charge of feature exploitation.

Mr. Brady started newspaper work with the New York American several years ago. He later did publicity and then served on the staff of the New York City News Association and was four years with the Evening World. Recently he became associated with Robertson-Cole publicity and advertising, and left to join the Pathe, where he is working under Randolph Lewis, publicity manager.

Pastor Says Church Should Utilize Screen's "Inherent Power for Good"

DECLARING that motion pictures have an "inherent power for good" and suggesting that the churches form a motion picture exchange for the quick and broad distribution of films for churches and Sunday Schools, the Rev. Dr. Joel H. Metcalf, pastor of the Unitarian Church, Winchester, and a clergyman-astronomer of fame, has caused widespread discussion in Massachusetts. Dr. Metcalf's parish is the church-home of many wealthy and influential residents of Greater Boston.

"There is nothing wrong with the movies themselves," declared Dr. Metcalf. "They may be put to bad uses now and then, but that in no way prohibits their inherent power for good. On a Sunday night, for example, your churches are empty and your movie houses are filled. Why could not the church have movies and bring the people to herself?

Not to Compete with Theatres.

"I do not mean that the church should endeavor to compete with the theatres. I mean that the church should endeavor to bring itself up to the times and make itself attractive. The trouble with the church is, that it is, as far as methods are concerned, back somewhere in the Stone Age. The men and women of today are modern children and they want what is modern. It is the church that is to blame. The church should step in and take the new inventions, the new triumphs and make them her own, and the moving picture, one of the century's achievements, should be one of her greatest instruments for good.

"One would only with difficulty exaggerate the possibilities of the movies in the hands of the church. As a means to wholesome recreation it is incomparable. The church, we know, should not separate itself from life and hold itself as something apart. It should intertwine itself with every branch of life. It should be social. So, if the church should arrange to exhibit good, up-to-date movies on evenings and Sunday afternoons, it would have taken a long step toward the quickening of her own life and the life of the people.

Educational Films First.

"I do not mean, you know, that the church should exhibit problem plays and those thrilling dime novel dramas. Nor do I mean that the church should cease to have regular church services. It is not a plan to compete with the movie theatres.

"We could start with educational films for children. They could be confined to Bibical subjects. Then we could branch out on a broader educational field. One could have travelogues, studies of foreign peoples and places, studies of the habits of animals and the wonders of the mountains and the seas, and so on. Children would no longer be loath to come to Sunday School. They would be eager. And it would be not only interesting, but profitable.

"I have long considered the advantages of movies in the church. But it was my first experience on the other side that first brought home to me their really great potency. I saw weary, homesick doughboys grow gay and lighthearted just from watching wholesome, hearty movies. I saw the sick and the wounded forget their sufferings as they lay on their cots and followed the episodes of a photoplay. I saw the morale of the men improve under the stimulating influences of these exhibits. The movies over there did a great deal to make our boys happier and better, better men and better fighters.

Suggests Church Exchange.

"There is absolutely no doubt that the proper movies are invaluable as a recreational and educational power. But beyond this, in the right hands, they could be a mighty, uplifting and spiritualizing force. And the right hands are the hands of the church.

"Once it was the church that not only ararnged amusements, but originated them. Dancing, for example, was religious before it became secular. The modern drama itself is but a product of the old church's miracle plays and pageants, but now these things seem to have gone away from her. She should change her policy. The attractions that are taking the world away from the church should be used by her to bring them back. And the movies furnish the first convenient step.

"It is almost imposible for a solitary minister to put on the proper movies. He is all alone and would be unable to get the films he wanted. Hence, it is why the church, as an organization, should undertake the project. Moving picture shows should be started in all the churches. The church should organize, or at least superintend, an exchange where pastors can get the films they wanted, whether they are Bibical and religious or recreational. The exchange should have up-to-date pictures, healthy, stimulating pictures. It should have a method of quick and broad distribution. Once this is done the first step will have been taken. This step will accomplish much toward the bringing of the world back into the church."

Plans Prepared for Wick's New House in Kittanning

SKETCHES have been made for the theatre which John Wick, Jr., announces he intends building on the north side of Market street, Kittanning, Pa., between the Alexander and the Citizens' Hotels, opposite his opera house, which he recently purchased from the Moose Lodge. Tenants on the premises have been notified to vacate on April first.

The theatre will have a frontage of 41 feet 6 inches and a depth of 200 feet. There will be an outside lobby eight feet deep and an inside lobby seven feet three inches in depth. The seating capacity will be 1,342 and the seats will be arranged in four separate blocks, separated by two four-foot four-inch aisles. The ceiling will have a height of 17 feet and there will be 18 different exits. The second floor may be converted into a ballroom or other amusement place. A third floor may also be added. The building will be of concrete, reinforced with structural steel, and Mr. Wick hopes to open the house on Labor Day.

The Opera House will be used for road shows and special feature film productions after the new house is completed.

Adele Farrington to Be Seen in Neilan Picture

MARSHALL NEILAN has announced the addition of Adele Farrington to the cast of his second big independent features for First National release, which is now in course of production at the Fairbanks studio in Hollywood. Miss Farrington, by her long experience on both stage and screen, is well fitted to play the character part in the forthcoming picture for which she was selected.

Before her entrance into motion pictures, Miss Farrington was on the legitimate stage for twenty years. Most of the time she was in comic opera. Later she was starred in "Tess of the D'Ubervilles," and then played the vampire part in "A Fool There Was."

Her best known screen successes are "Too Much Johnson," with Bryant Washburn"; "A Fugitive from Matrimony," with H. B. Warner; "Rio Grande," an Edwin Carewe production, and Marshall Neilan's "In Old Kentucky."

Miss Farrington is an accomplished musician and composer. She recently wrote both words and music to "War Baby's Lullaby" and "Liza Lou," which were published and which are now being sung throughout the country.

No two men advertise alike. If they did, there would be little pull in advertising. But the man who does the best work is usually he who makes the most radical departure from the average.

Adele Farrington.
Will play big role in Marshall Neilan's second production for First National.

Baron Daue Brings French Films, "Call of the Blood" and "Alsace"

THE first of the big French films to reach this country since the outbreak of the war has arrived from Paris and will be distributed here shortly. These subjects were brought over by Baron R. C. de Daue, a special representative of M. Louis Mercanton, managing director of the Societe des Films Mercanton, who is generally recognized as the foremost film producer of France.

Baron de Daue will spend some time in this country. He has established an affiliation with Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., the American exporting company recently organized by J. J. McCarthy, Theodore Mitchell and Guy C. Smith, by which the Mercanton interests in America are looked after, in association with the Mercanton interests in the American film subjects which Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., handles for the world outside of the United States and Canada.

Baron de Daue is a veteran of the film industry in France and has been interested in the development of the cinematographic art for the past twenty-five years. He is a great friend of American films in France and continental Europe and his present visit is to establish reciprocal relations between the leaders of the French and American film industries, or rather those branches of the business devoted to the presentation of the big feature specials.

Has Two of the Best.

His services were of great value in establishing "Intolerance," "The Birth of a Nation" and "Broken Blossoms" in the European markets. The last named picture, made by America's D. W. Griffith, Baron de Daue unconditionally pronounces the finest cinema ever presented upon the screen, and he predicts that its European vogue will exceed that of any motion picture that has yet been presented upon the screen throughout the civilized world.

Two Good French Pictures.

Baron de Daue brings with him two of the best pictures made in France since hostilities ceased. Foremost of these is M. Louis Mercanton's production of "The Call of the Blood," a picturization of Robert Hichens' novel of that title. The scenes were taken in Rome, Sicily and Africa, where the action of the story takes place. It follows the Hichens narrative closely.

The scenes are said to be realistic and beautiful and the direction to be faultless. The surroundings and background are actual glimpses of aristocratic life in Rome, with a pastoral charm of Sicilian exteriors. The picture's value is further enhanced by a cast including the stunningly handsome Phyllis Neilson Terry, M. LeBargy, one of the foremost actors of the Comedie Francais in Paris, and Ivor Novello, De Gravone, Desdemona Mazza and Lo Turco.

Scenes of Alsace.

The other picture Baron de Daue brings over is "In Old Alsace," a charming and whimsical study in photographic action of the Erckmann-Chatrian operetta, "L'Ami Fritz," which Jack Mason and Marion Manola did in this country some years ago, and which was subsequently used as a vehicle by young J. K. Emmett. It is a semi-human fairy story of the rural life of a town in Alsace when men had to be coaxed into marriage under the ever watchful eye of the storks and a few busy humans who made the assisting of courtships a vocation. With the original music synchronized to the action of the picture, it is said to be irresistibly charming.

"In Old Alsace" was taken in that regained province of France under the direction of Rene Rervil, who was aided by Mme. Devorod, of the Moliere Films Societe, an associate of the Comedie Francais, from which institution the cast was recruited. It includes such distinguished artists as M. Max, M. Mathot and Mlle. Duflos, one of the most beautiful women ever presented to the screen.

During his stay in America, Baron de Daue is making his office with Guy Croswell Smith, Ltd., at 807 Longacre Building, New York City.

Just Read the First!

THE article on page 877 from Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Company of Chicago, inaugurates a series of feature stories to be published by MOVING PICTURE WORLD on novel and practical uses of the motion picture.

As Mr. Rothacker himself has said, "The best advertisement will never be written" because the motion picture, more powerful than the written word, has entered the field of selling to the public.

And, too, the growth of the non-theatrical lines of the moving picture has been one of the most stable developments of the industry. The making of pictures serving church, school and industry at large has taken on proportions so large that in many cases the plants catering to these lines have not been able to keep pace with the demand.

The series of articles inaugurated by this story of Mr. Rothacker's is therefore particularly timely. It will be followed by others, dealing not in generalities, but as here with specific cases where the motion picture has served novel and at the same time practical ends.

Good reading!

Pat Dowling Turns Round and Looks Toward California

PAT DOWLING reached the eastern limit of his tour of North America in the interest of Christie Comedies, early in the week ending January 31. He sailed around Broadway in his high-top rubbers and said he was satisfied that all he had heard about the improvement in our city was correct.

He found some faults and discovered more to praise, striking an average of approval for what has happened since he last visited New York's Main Street. He echoed the general complaint that there was nothing to take that made the lights seem brighter and frequenter, but kicking against the Eighteenth Amendment gets nobody anywhere—and Pat admitted it.

Hopping from Christie exchange to Christie exchange has been a pastime with Pat in his trip from coast to coast. He was willing to talk but no one would listen to his "statement."

"The year 1920 will be the greatest in the history of an infant industry for comedy films" was as far as he ever got. Repeatedly he tried to deliver to the tradepapers a verbal translation of the fat bundle of mimeograph copy he carried under his arm.

For President: "Christie."

Asked about his views of the forthcoming Presidential marathon, Pat said he had only two candidates for vice-president and virtue president, to wit: The Christies, Al and Charlie. He didn't say which office should be filled by whom—just so they each got one of the two chairs to be offered as prizes next election.

During the course of fifteen minutes' conversation in the office of Moving Picture World Dowling mentioned the name of either Al or Charlie Christie just eighty-six times. He said Fay Tincher would make Broadway "sit up and look" if she came along in one of her Christie Comedy costumes.

"Charlie Christie gave me an awful big wad of money when I left the Christie Comedy lot," said Dowling as he handed in this terrible piece of copy, "and I must do SOMETHING to earn it. Try and slip this through, will you, kid?"

Taken utterly aback by such conversation—here's the result.

Dowling will be here for ten days or so—if he doesn't break through into the "singles" he is using as the core of a roll of pretty large sheets of money.

Much Activity Reported from Selznick Studios

A REPORT from the Selznick Fort Lee and Bronx studios states that some excellent interior scenes are being made for three of the Selznick productions now in the making of the studios.

"The Woman Game," said to be a powerful drama, and which was written for Elaine Hammerstein by Leighton Osmun and Frank Dazey, is nearing completion under the direction of William P. S. Earle. The production abounds with a variety of sets of more than usual magnificence.

"Glorious Youth," by John Lynch, is the sixth starring subject of Olive Thomas. The opening scenes of the pictures were made in New Orleans and the first reel is concerned almost entirely with the lovely, fast vanishing, old-fashioned southern life, actually made in the country where the story is laid. Alan Crosland is directing, assisted by William J. Scully.

In the Selznick studio, Sophie Irene Loeb's big melodrama, "The Woman God Sent," is taking form under the direction of Larry Trimble, who adapted the story to the screen. The cast includes Zena Keefe, Joe King and John Wade.

Fight Epidemic Closing with Facts Gleaned from Last Influenza Panic

TAKING a leaf from their experiences of the last epidemic, wise managers are already preparing to fight against the theatre closing orders which nervous Board of Health officials are likely to slap upon the picture theatres.

During the epidemic of the fall of 1918 the picture theatres were the first to come under the ban. When the epidemic became noticeable in a town the theatres were closed. Later on perhaps the schools and churches and even the stores might be closed, but few Health Boards seemed to wait to think before closing the theatres. It was a spectacular move; the theatre managers were few and unorganized. They wanted to be doing something, so they shut the theatres.

Don't let it happen this time, and don't wait until it does happen before you begin to fight. Start right in today.

One of the best of the schemes which were turned up in the last epidemic was developed by Steve Farrar, of the Casino, Eldorado and Orpheum, Harrisburg, Ill. Steve got the opposition house to come in with him. The two managements pooled their interests and united in an advertisement for which they got a special rate of two thirds, the newspapers contributing the other third on the representation that they would lose the advertising of both houses were they closed.

How it Was Done.

One advertisement was a cross page nines under the heading of "Notice to the Public." It was followed with this material, the first, in a bank across five of the seven columns reading:

Desiring to co-operate with the local health authorities to prevent the spread of Spanish Influenza in Harrisburg and Eldorado, and to safeguard our patrons, and for the protection of this community, we make the following suggestions and requests:

1.—Don't attend our theatres if you cough or sneeze. Coughers, spitters and sneezers will be refused admission.

2.—One of the important things in preventing influenza is to prevent chilling the body, especially if you are tired. It is suggested that those who attend the show tonight remove their heavy wraps while indoors so that they will not be chilled when they go out.

3.—Change damp shoes and stockings as promptly as possible.

4.—Don't be panicky, but be careful. Protect yourself and help protect others.

5.—If you get a cold these days, go home, go to bed and call a doctor. EVERY cold is serious when Influenza is prevalent.

6.—Stay in bed until your doctor says you are completely well. If you have a fever, stay in bed for three days after the fever disappears. This is the best way to avoid pneumonia and other serious consequences.

7.—Our theatres will be thoroughly aired, ventilated and disinfected each day. We are making every effort to protect our patrons. We desire the co-operation of all good citizens, so that it will not be necessary to close the theatres, schools and churches.

8.—At present there is practically no influenza in Eldorado and Harrisburg, and if we all will co-operate to keep it out, there will be none.

There followed a double column article on the Flu, giving the causes, symptoms and treatment, with hints on the avoidance of the disease. This was headed: "Spanish Influenza—What It Is and How it Should Be Treated," with a sub-head: "Nothing New—Simply the Old Grip or La Grippe That Was Epidemic in 1889-90. Then it Came from Russia, Now it Comes from Spain."

Keep it Going.

Handbills were also printed and distributed. Mr. Farrar wrote that with houses all around them closed, the theatres and other public resorts kept open and they had a smaller percentage of cases than any towns in Southern Illinois.

Build up on this idea. Use the screen. Get up slides with the points plainly lettered. Give special matinees for children—free morning matinees—where a couple of comedies are the reward for reading the slides and listening to a talk from some Board of Health official or local physician. Paste posters all over town. Print the tips in your programs and get out throwaways.

Get the papers to take the matter up. They will if you advertise. Get them interested to the point of going with you on the space bills. Give them facts to work with. It is a notable point that New York City showed a smaller death rate than any city in the country, yet remained wide open. Tell them that a hysterical scare will actually help to spread the disease. Point out that "Be cheerful" is one of the rules for the avoidance of the pest and that it was for that reason Dr. Copeland refused to close the New York theatres.

New York differs from most cities in that the traffic flows only in three directions and every form of transit is packed morning and night. Elevated and subway trains are crowded to suffocation night and morning and are a hundred times more dangerous than the most crowded theatre. People are forced into the cars until there is absolutely no room for another passenger. They stand face to face for twenty minutes to half an hour. They are herded together on station and platforms for another ten minutes, and the housing congestion exceeds that of any city on the continent, yet the New York percentage was smaller than in any other place in the country.

It Is Not Crowding.

Evidently it is not crowding which spreads the infection. But it must be remembered that the cars ran with open windows, even in the coldest weather, and some relief was obtained by changing the hours of opening the stores and theatres, so as to spread the rush over a longer period, reducing the crowds somewhat.

But ventilation was the real safeguard. and the wise manager will play up his ventilation. A. C. Raleigh, then managing the American, Butte, obtained a supply of confetti, which he threw into the auditorium, showing how the huge fans sucked up the tiny bits of paper. Others used strong perfumes or smoke, which were quickly cleared.

After it was all over many state and local officials admitted that an error had been made in the wholesale closings. Dr. Bracken, of the Minnesota State Board, said: "I regret more than I can explain the action of the Minneapolis officials in closing the city as has been done. It is not in a sense of criticism that I am making this statement, but merely as an expression from a state official who believes that a serious mistake has been made." Minneapolis closed down. St. Paul, across the river, kept open and many from Minneapolis sought their amusement in St. Paul, yet the St. Paul percentage was smaller than that of Minneapolis.

In Review.

If the truth could be known, it would probably be found that fear killed almost as many as the flu. People were scared to death. They were told of the terrible dangers they faced. They were required to cut off their usual amusements, to herd by themselves in their homes and were led to believe that a bad cough was the hollow voice of death. Their resistance to the disease was gone.

Any physician will admit that a hopeful patient stands the best chance of recovery. Any one of them will admit that a man can be scared to death by newspaper headlines. A quarantine is a bad move, and cheerfulness combined with caution will do much to prevent the spread of disease. Only about four per cent. of the cases are said to terminate fatally and there is a disposition to ascribe to the prevailing plague many deaths which are really due to other causes, which help swell the death rate to no good end. Combat superstition. Fight stupid bureaucrats. Help keep your community free from disease through advertising and propaganda. Do your bit and we shall have none of the errors of 1918 repeated.

Cradle Rocking for an Infant Industry

Glancing Into Moving Picture World Ten Years Ago

THE issue of Moving Picture World dated February 5, 1910, contained nothing like the "startling" outcomes of present day promotion in THE industry. "Wall Street" was looking elsewhere for its investments; there were no million dollar theatres and no combinations of exhibitors. The "Infant" was just worrying along, its cradle far enough away from the wall to prevent damaging the mop-boards as it rocked.

The Imperial Film Exchange was doing full page advertising. The president was William F. Steiner, known perennially to film-fame as "Big Bill." He's still "the same old Bill," but is now a producer for the independent market instead of renting films to the independent exhibitors of other days.

Tom Moore Gets Into the Game.

Tom Moore was manager of "Bill's" Washington branch. Unless the similarity of names tangles the assertion into a misstatement, Tom is the same Moore who is now a leading picture showman of the Nation's capital. Other officals of the Imperial Film Exchange were William Devery and Representatives Lon Vail, Lee Langdon, Frank Noeles and J. S. Levin.

R. H. Cochrane broke into cartoonery to illustrate "the independent movement." With a broom labeled "bluff" a dame tagged "old mother Patents Company" was trying to sweep back the tide. "It is to laugh," said Mr. Cochrane in his Laemmle advertisement.

Calehuff's Day and Night Film Service showed a "Henry" standing ready to motor off with a load of film to Philadelphia exhibitors. It is believed that the practice of picking up films after the show, inspecting them during the night and delivering them to another showman next morning was, at about that time, "revolutionizing the renting game."

Richardson's Other Job.

Aside from doing a projectionist department for Moving Picture World F. H. Richardson has just been hired by Nicholas Power to inspect all machines before they were shipped to purchasers—to make sure they were "100 per cent"—an expression, by the way, that had not, at that time, blossomed into film-language. It is used now to prove how the industry has advanced!

New locations were being sought by the picture makers. The Vitagraph players were on their way to Jamaica, West Indies, to take "pichers," the Biograph has just started a troupe to California and Kalem had, for some time, been in the South. These moves were all hailed as epoch making steps by an Infant already walking without a shove-chair.

"Manufacturers are recognizing the personalities of the actresses who make the films. The public has its favorites on the screen as well as on the stage. Some of these portraits have been published in Moving Picture World. Some are shown in entrances to moving picture theatres." The foregoing excerpt tells of a day previous to the star system and bathing girls in stills and on the screen.

Film Banquet First Photographed.

Pioneering a practice that has since kept the tradepapers highly illustrated with "feed fest" flashlights, the World printed a cut made from a photograph of "Cincinnati Exhibitors Dined by Exchanges." The Gibson House sold the food and the committee of arrangements included I. W. McMahan, Cincinnati Film Exchange; Thomas A. Reilly, Southern Film Exchange; A. Dresner, Magnetic Film Service, and James L. Steele, Pittsburg Calcium Light Company. A very pleasant time was had by all.

The Thanhouser Company, New Rochelle, N. Y., had lately completed its studio, was working on production and promised early releases.

The Mastermark of Picturedom.

Remember that one? It was William N. Selig's hallmark. "Shooting an Oil Well" was the Selig release that then took on more of the nature of a latter-day news reel than a "feature." They're still "shooting oil wells"—and many a bank-roll to boot!

Maude Allen was then "creating a furore with Greek dancing" and Pathe hooked the furore into advertising the film "In Ancient Greece." Length, 410 feet. "Coloring, $9.50."

Think of it! Edison Notes occupied 2½ inches; Essanay Notes, 4 inches; Vitigraph Notes, 7 inches. The publicist for films had not then been introduced to the space-stealing game in tradepapers.

Enter Times Square Electric Signs.

The editor saw hopes of moving pictures taking their proper place on Broadway. "The Sign in the Sky" was his caption to an editorial that spoke of the pioneer moving picture sign on the Great White Way: "And we saw outlined against the black sky in bright letters: 'Moving Pictures.' The sign to which we refer is placed immediately above the roof of the New York Theatre." It's different now around Times Square.

Bret Hart's "The Luck of Roaring Camp" was a release ready for Edison distribution. Nary a name mentioned of star or cast!

"Five Minutes to Twelve" was a Vitagraph—fifteen minutes ahead of Marie Doro's "12-10" of nowadays. "The Confession" was an Essanay. Page Joe Brandt!

Indicating the Dotted Line to Picture Showmen in Dixie Land

By Nat Bregstein

FROM the station to the main street in Lynchburg, Va., is like climbing the Alps. Two exhibitors run the movies in town. C. M. Casey owns three theatres, the Isis, the Belvidere and the Gaiety. The Isis will increase its seating capacity soon from 650 to 1,000. I was shown a newspaper clipping regarding a little agitation against the theatres in Lynchburg. The church faction is very strong. The other exhibitor is Mr. Trent who owns the Trenton Theatre, seating 1,100.

In Tennessee.

Covering Tennessee is not the easiest thing to do via railroad. Aeroplane would be better. Trains are rather limited in number and local in stops. Starting at Knoxville, we have a town of 90,000. The Signal Amusement Company controls the situation in Knoxville, owning the Queen, 800 seats; Strand, 1,000; Rex, 400; and Majestic, 300. Loew also has a theatre, at present being renovated.

The Brichetto Brothers own the Crystal, 350 seats, and the Liberty, a small suburban house seating 200. The Brichetto boys have the "mazuma." They lately bought a piece of corner property costing $68,000. Regular Dough Boys, eh? They have been in the show business about six years. The Brichettos informed me that melodrama gets money for them. They are cleaning up; both good fellows who deserve success.

Signal Strong in Chattanooga Also.

From Knoxville to Chattanooga is a night's ride. The latter is another city where Signal Amusement Company is in full bloom. They control the following theatres: American, 900 seats; Royal, 750; Bonita, 400; Superba, 400; Fine Arts, 700; Alcazar, 950; Rialto, 900; Lyric, 850, and one more theatre under construction in the Tivoli.

F. H. Dowler, Jr., general manager of this concern, was on a trip at the time of my visit. I spoke to F. H. Dowler, Sr., who said, "Business is excellent. Wait until Dowler, Jr., gets back."

Abe Solomon and A. J. Alper are teamed up and run the Strand and York theatres in Chattanooga. Abe, a good press agent, says the York was named after Sergeant York, famous war hero of Tennessee.

Memphis Looked Over.

It was a typical southern story-book day when I arrived in Memphis, Tenn. The millionaires out for pleasure, commercial travelers out for business, and actors in for a few days to amuse the populace, all made the city look like a busy place. All the life is centered on Main street, within a radius of about ten or twelve blocks, with the movies doing a land office business all along the line.

One of the first showmen I visited in Memphis was General Manager McElroy of the Lynch Enterprises, offices over the Savoy Theatre.

McElroy believes in plenty of newspaper space and exploitation. Mrs. Christie Collins, McElroy's secretary, recently went skying a bit with Aviator Lieutenant Francis. While up in the air she dropped literature pertaining to "The Miracle Man." Did it pull well? I should say so. "The Miracle Man" lived up to its name. After counting the receipts it was a miracle how McElroy got them all in.

At the Majestic Theatre, one of the Lynch Enterprise houses, Abe Morrison is manager. This man has had a world of experience in the show business, and is turning his talent into pleased patrons —and currency.

Memphis Theatres.

A complete list of houses catering to whites is as follows: The Lynch Enterprise-owned Strand, 1,100; Princess, 650; Bijou, 500; Empire, 500; Savoy, 490; Majestic, 1,100; Loew's have a house in town under the supervision of Ben Steinbach, who talks with his hands and is a handsome talker. His house gets capacity business, too.

"Old man Richards" runs the Beauty Theatre, which doesn't live up to its name in all respects. I think Mr. Richards believes in Santa Claus. The house seats 250 and charges five and ten cents, using shooting and fighting.

Across the street is another theatre, but its manager is on the alert.. While he hasn't an up-to-date house he is an ambitious worker. J. Frederick, the manager of the Queen, is the young man alluded to. The Queen seats 220, admission price, ten cents.

Going Through Birmingham, Ala.

Birmingham, Alabama, with a population of 132,000, is surrounded by steel plants, which exhibitors claim are in competition with the movies, the reason being they have pictures of their own, book big attractions for their employes and charge low prices.

According to a statement made by the Mudd & Colley Amusement Company, this is the exact situation in town. This concern owns the Rialto and Trianon. Mr. Mooney, the manager, states there are eleven suburban towns within a short ride of Birmingham, all with theatres of their own. Birmingham gets very few customers from these towns.

The Lynch interests have several houses in town, among them being Strand, seating 850, first run house, and the Colonial, seating 700. Loew has a house seating 2,000. F. H. James looks after it.

The colored section is well taken care of by H. Hurry, affiliated with Engle. These boys look after the Champion and Frolic theatres. Mr. Hurry has been in the colored section for several years. I asked him about the taste of the darky on the movie stuff, and he claims they like high grade productions, fine orchestras, etc., and he is giving it to them. Mr. Hurry is soon to erect another colored house to cost $50,000.

Marvin Wise runs two white houses, the Alcazar and the Odeon. Mr. Wise claims a fair business. He raises his prices on special productions and claims producers are 200 per cent. out of the way when it comes to asking prices. He wants it known that he will book big productions on percentage.

Many Picture Theatres Are Planned for Southern States

IN addition to new motion picture houses to be built this year in the southern states and already announced in the Moving Picture World, a number of other such projects have been announced in the past ten days.

The Savannah, Ga., Savings and Real Estate Corporation has advertised for bids for the construction of a bank, office building and theatre.

F. L. Kuykendall is to build a store and theatre at Columbus, Miss.

The Atlanta office of Marcus Loew announces that a new $300,000 theatre will be erected at Dallas, and that work will begin in the near future. It will run on the usual Loew policy of high-class pictures and vaudeville.

Dr. W. H. Ivey of Greensboro, N. C., has announced that he will build a $100,000 theatre and moving picture house in that city.

Will B. Wood will spend about $40,000 enlarging the Belle Theatre at Gadsden, Ala. He plans to increase the seating capacity to 1,500.

A five story building, the first floor to be leased as a motion picture theatre, will be built at once in Knoxville, Tenn. The building will cost about $200,000.

Hill Buys Greensboro Interests.

Roland G. Hill, of South Carolina, has purchased all the George Pryor theatre interests in Greensboro, N. C. The purchase takes in the Victory, Bijou, and Isis Theatres and the consideration named is $75,000.

Many Franchise Holders Attend United Picture Theatres Meeting

A MOST enthusiastic and beneficial meeting was held by the United Picture Theatres of America, at the Yates Hotel, Syracuse, N. Y., on January 22. At least 50 per cent of the franchise holders in northern and western New York were present. Many important improvements and policies were adopted at this meeting.

A classification committee was appointed, as follows: Emmet Cornell, Eckel Theatre, Syracuse, chairman; J. S. Burnham, Temple Theatre, Cortland; W. A. Callahan, Regent, Rochester; J. J. Walker, Lincoln, Schenectady; James B. Kelly.

A result of the meeting was the admission of five new members and the general endorsement and adoption of all policies as laid down by the United Picture Theatres of America up-to-date. One of the chief subjects of discussion was the dominating entrance of Wall Street into this industry, and plans and policies were proposed which will eventually offset outside interference toward any members of this circuit of theatres, it was announced.

Those Attending.

Among those present were: J. D. Roe, Actograph Theatre; Harry Gilbert, Regent; George Sardino, Hippodrome; Mitch Fitzer, Happy Hour; Emmet Cornell, Regent; E. B. Thompson, Lyric; Pete Smith, Novelty; Metzger Bros., Acme; August Schneelack, Seymour; Merriman Bros., Alcazar, all of Syracuse; Shane & Kaufman, Star, Rome; A. B. Blessing, Carrol, Rome; J. W. Schwarzwalder, Universal, Auburn; Morris Silverman, Happy Hour, Schenectady; Sam Suckno, Albany, Albany; J. S. Burnham, Temple, Cortland; M. Gardner, Temple, Cortland; James B. Kelly, Buffalo branch manager; H. L. Taylor, assistant Buffalo branch manager; Max Rowley and Arthur Dana, personal representative of United Picture Productions Corporation.

Another meeting of the United Picture Theatre Exhibitors will be held at the Hayward Hotel, Rochester, Wednesday, January 28, at 2 p. m., at which J. A. Berst, president of the United Picture Theatres, and Harry Hall, vice-president of the United Picture Theatres of America, will be present. A large atendance is expected.

The United Picture Exchange is now fully established in new quarters at 86 Exchange street, Buffalo, N. Y., and in addition to controlling all Triangle Corporation productions it will handle the distribution of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation.

New York League Would Deny Cities Local Option on Sunday Question

IT came to light recently that the State Bill Drafting Commission, acting on the request of George H. West, of Albany, one of the prime movers of the New York State Civic League, is drafting a bill for later presentation in the legislature which has for its purpose the repeal of a law passed last year that allows motion picture houses to open on Sundays in all cities, following permission from the governing bodies of the municipalities.

For the last two or three weeks there has been a persistent rumor that the league was preparing for some such action and that it would have the backing of ministerial associations throughout the state. While the Bill Drafting Commission refused to divulge the nature of the bill in its details, it was said that it was a short one, that it would be introduced in the near future and that no mention was contained of censorship matters.

There is every indication, however, that certain interests will induce Assemblyman John W. Slacer, of Buffalo, who fathered last year's censorship bill, to introduce a similar bill in the very near future. The provisions of the bill include the appointment by the State Regents of a board of censors of three members. Films may be disapproved that are found to be sacrilegious, indecent or immoral or tending to debase or corrupt morals.

Capes Meets Senator Walters.

This bill must be understood to be entirely distinctive from any which will follow a second meeting of the special committee appointed by the State Conference of Mayors. W. P. Capes, secretary of the conference, in Syracuse the past week, had a long talk with Senator J. Henry Walters, majority leader of the Senate.

In going over the program which the State Conference of Mayors has outlined for this session, Mr. Capes and Senator Walters came to the question of censorship.

"What do you intend to do in regard to this?" inquired Senator Walters of Mr. Capes. The latter replied that the specially appointed committee was at work and that he did not know what the outcome would be until after the meeting in Albany on February 2, which will be closed to the press and at which the four sub-committees will report, and after which another committee will be named to draft the recommendations that will be made to the legislature in regard to the need of further regulation of motion pictures in New York State.

Senator Walters refused to commit himself in connection with the censorship problem. Walter W. Nicholson, of Syracuse, commissioner of public safety, and the head of one of the four subcommittees, following an illness of several days, is again at work with members of his committee on matters concerning the National Board of Review and will report in this city on February 2.

Son to Replace Theatre in Which Father Died

A NEW Orpheum Theatre to cost over $100,000 is to be constructed at Mexico, Mo., to replace the show house that burned on January 3, resulting in the tragic death of its 72-year-old owner, O. B. Thompson. The announcement was made recently by Shirley C. Thompson, son of the old exhibitor.

Work on the new structure will start in thirty days, Mr. Thompson said. The location has not been decided upon, but several are under consideration.

"I intend to give Mexico the finest theatre of its kind possible to erect here and it will be built with a view to the future growth of the town into a much larger city than at present," the exhibitor said. "The theatre will be fireproof throughout and will have a seating capacity of 2,000."

Plans include a large stage to accommodate the largest road shows and their usual massive scenic equipment, in addition to moving pictures. The front of the building will be handsomely constructed, giving an artistic touch to its four-story effect. It will have every modern convenience, including rest rooms for both men and women.

Mr. Thompson has contracted with several leading film companies, including First National, Goldwyn, Fox Film and Famous Players-Lasky.

"Bathing Beauties" Fined.

Three of Mack Sennett's Bathing Girls were fined $10 each in police court at Atlanta, for the alleged violation of a city ordinance covering indecent exposure; B. J. Shea, manager of the girls, was fined $50 on the same charge.

The "Bathing Beauties," as they were termed, were in Atlanta during the engagement of the Sennett production, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," at the Criterion theatre. Police officers visiting the show declared that the girls did everything but go entirely nude, and as a result Chief of Police Beavers swore out a warrant against the whole outfit —six of them—including the manager.

Oklahoma Association Indorse Bill.

Resolutions urging the passage of a bill to prevent the transportation of moving pictures showing scenes of crime, adopted by the Oklahoma Press Association, have been submitted to all members of Congress from that State following the adoption of similar resolutions by the Oklahoma State Bar Association.

The Oklahoma Press Association indorsed the act now before Congress and urged its immediate passage.

Harnessing Pictures for Practical Use

Rothacker Organization Helps DuPont Sell Dynamite to Farmers and Big Western Bank to Put Over Bonds

THE fact that conservative financiers have turned to motion pictures for help in selling gilt-edged bonds is one of the most significant recognitions of the screen's value to modern business.

There was a time when business men looked upon motion pictures as a freak or novelty. That most certainly was the attitude of the average business man when we blazed the trail in the industrial pictures branch of motion pictures ten years ago.

Movie Not a Freak.

Through a film we made for the DuPont Powder Company in 1911 it was first proved in a big way that instead of being a freak, the motion picture rivaled printer's ink as a business getter.

At that time DuPont had demonstrators in various parts of the country for the purpose of increasing the market for dynamite for farm uses—stump blasting, under soiling, ditch digging, etc. There were drawbacks to these demonstrations. A demonstration could not be given in frosted ground, and during the spring and summer months farmers were often too busy to attend a demonstration. And the very word dynamite was enough to cause many farmers' wives to keep their particular farmers at home.

We proposed to DuPont that one perfect demonstration be made before the movie camera and then the film sent around to work in the winter and at night without causing any accelerations of feminine pulses. Well, that films was shown all over the United States, in Canada and in foreign countries.

Demonstration Clear.

This was the first advertising film for which nation-wide circulation was ever attempted—and obtained—in this country. It educated farmers as to the farming possibilities of dynamite at a far lesser cost than the field demonstrators, and several DuPont officials held that the celluloid made the demonstration much more clearly than the human demonstrators.

Another unusual problem presented itself when the Central Illinois Public Service Company put out a bond issue of $4,000,000. This corporation serves 131 communities in central and southern Illinois, with one or more of such public necessities as electric light and power, heat, gas, water, ice, street and interurban car service.

Pictures Promoted Enthusiasm.

The motion picture was made primarily to "sell" the bonds to the bond salesman. In order to make good salesmen it was necessary to impress upon the minds of those salesmen a picture of the corporation's extensive holdings, so that they could tell prospective customers about it.

To take the salesmen over the concern's property, which covers practically the entire south central portion of Illinois, would have been a very expensive precedure, involving much time. The corporation decided to do the modern thing and take the property to the salesmen.

We were selected to make the pictures. In order to pack up a substantial portion of the corporation's holdings ready for shipment via the "Celluloid Rapid Transit" to the salesmen in Chicago, it was necessary for the Rothhacker camera men to shoot 5,000 feet of film. The five reels showed many of the power plants, mines, gas plants, oil wells, electric railway lines, ice plants, water works, etc., which the company owns in the southern part of the state.

Buyers Saw Exhibition.

When these five reels were shown before a gathering of salesmen in a Chicago hotel, those salesmen learned as much about the company's property in a space of minutes as they could have learned in a personal visit which would have taken weeks. The pictures were found to be so successful in educating salesmen that several exhibitions were given.

The pictures "sold" the bonds to the bond salesmen so effectively that it was decided to use its film to sell securities to prospective buyers. Shortly after the film was completed two investors came on from New York with a view to buying substantial blocks of stock—after carefully going over the corporation's holdings. To their surprise it was not necessary for them to make a tour of Southern Illinois. They sat in a hotel room and saw all they wanted to see. It is needless to say that the most eloquent salesmen cannot compete with motion pictures when it comes to letting prospective bond buyers know what a company has behind it. Halsey, Stuart & Co., handled a large part of the bonds, and Halsey-Stuart salesmen would invite prospectives to the private picture show in the Chicago Hotel.

Film Showed Publicly.

After all the bonds were sold the Central Illinois Public Service Company found that the film was practically just beginning its usefulness. Some citizens of the 131 communities served by the corporation had the idea that the public utility was confined to their respective cities. They did not know that the corporation operated in other cities, that its holdings covered a large area of territory.

Under such circumstances, therefore, when the citizens saw a balance sheet of a public utility and found that it had thousands, perhaps millions, of dollars of bonds and stock outstanding, they were likely to form the concept that the corporation was vastly over-capitalized. Loose talk of politicians and publication served to accentuate this impression.

The pictures were shown in various cities in Illinois. The public was impressed with the true proportions of the public utility corporation and the vast amount of money tied up in the extensive holdings. Wherever citizens were unable or unwilling to conceive of the magnitude, strength and financial requirements of the public utility, the film was put to work.

"Americanization" Program Calls to Patriotic Picture Showmen

THE first definite instructions to motion picture exhibitors concerning the industry's campaign on Americanization have been issued by Harry M. Crandall, chairman of the exhibitors division of the general committee. The committee, which was selected by Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, is composed of Lewis J. Selznick, representing the distributors; Adolph Zukor, representing the producers; Harry M. Crandall, repsenting the exhibitors, and Major Raymond Pullman, the municipalities. Secretary Lane is chairman of the committee.

Mr. Crandall's statement is as follows: "After working night and day for the past five weeks the committee has finally come to a definite understanding regarding the distribution of these films.

"I had hoped to have been in a position to give out some information two weeks ago, but, unfortunately, our plans were not all completed at that time. In all my dealings with the committee I want to emphasize the fact that I am, first, 100 per cent. for my country, and, second, 100 per cent. for the exhibitors.

The Call of Patriotic Duty.

"According to our plans, there are to be fifty-two pictures issued, one for each week in the year, beginning with Lincoln's Birthday. With the exception of fifteen, which will be two-reelers, these will be single-reel features and will be made by the best brains and include the best known stars in the industry.

"I understand that a number of companies will probably produce longer patriotic pictures, but these will be sold wholly on their merits and are outside the jurisdiction of the committee. I want the exhibitors to realize that these pictures are not being shown for profit.

"No manufacturer or distributor is to profit on these pictures and our whole aim is for circulation. We want them to be shown in 100 per cent. of the motion picture theatres of this country.

Not a Matter of Profit.

"Under the present arrangement, 50 per cent. of the gross will go toward the cost of the picture, 35 per cent. for distribution, and the remaining 15 per cent. will go toward meeting the expenses of the committee. I have been selected treasurer of the committee and will have access to all of the figures pertaining to the cost and distribution of the picture.

"If we find that this proportion is not fair we will change it. If any profit is made from a picture it will go into the general fund of the committee.

"It has been agreed that all scenarios are to be first approved by Secretary Lane. No picture is to be shown until it has been approved by him.

Pictures of the Very Best.

"This will insure us getting only the best stories and the highest class of pictures. It will also be a gurantee to the exhibitor that he will receive only new and up-to-date pictures. It will also insure a good box-office proposition to the exhibitor.

Screen Vital to Government.

"The committee has decided to have the film distributed through each manufacturer's own distributing agency at a nominal charge. We have tried to make this fee as low as possible.

"I cannot impress how necessary it is for every single exhibitor to take an interest in this work and to do his share. It will be your duty to see that every single picture is shown in your theatre. The fact that your competitor may show a picture a day or sooner should have no effect upon you.

"This is not a question of competition but wholly one of duty to your Gvernment. During the war the motion picture exhibitors responded nobly.

'Vice-President Marshall, in a speech to our committee in Washington, declared that in his opinion no single industry did as much toward bringing the war to a successful conclusion as did the motion picture industry and the exhibitors of the country.

"Another great crisis now faces our Government. We are again called upon to loan our screens to the aid of our country. As an exhibitor I want to impress upon you the absolute necessity of doing this work. I have given much thought and care to this question. I want to hear from the exhibitors of the country.

"In conclusion, I trust that every exhibitor will carry out Secretary Lane's suggestion for special programs on Lincoln's Birthday and on other holidays."

House Passes Bill Prohibiting Transportation of Immoral Films

Washington, D. C., January 28.

The bill adding lewd and lascivious motion picture films to the list of articles which are prohibited from moving in interstate commerce either through the mails or by freight or express, introduced in Congress by Representative Joseph Walsh of Massachusetts, was passed by the House of Representatives without debate.

Five Years or $5,000.

The law provides the following penalties:

"Whoever shall knowingly take or cause to be taken from such express company or other common carrier any matter or thing the depositing of which for carriage is herein made undawful, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

This is the measure recommended by the industry at the Rochester convention in August. Its adoptions was urged before the House Judiciary Committee recently by Jack S. Connell on behalf of the industry and was promptly agreed to. The indorsement given it by the committee made possible its passage by the House today. It now goes to the Senate and Mr. Conolly already has assurance of its early consideration and probable prompt passage.

Films to Aid in Fighting Flu.

The aid of the film and screen has been enlisted in the fight against influenza. President William A. Brady, of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, on January 24 redesignated the same committee that had charge of the work in the epidemic of 1918: Chairman John C. Flinn, of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; John M. Quinn, of Vitagraph, Inc., and Frederick H. Elliott, Executive Secretary of the National Assóciation. This committee will arrange for a program of co-operation with the health authorities.

The following news weeklies were represented at the meeting at the offices of the National Association: Fox News Weekly by Pell Mitchell; Kinograms by Terry Ramsey; International by E. B. Hatrick; Gaumont by A. C. Duff. Telegrams were sent to officers of local F. I. L. M. clubs and exchange managers' associations.

Rubbernecking in Filmland

Avaunt Thee! Proud Orange. Hail! Hail! The Movie as California's New King.

By Giebler

A PROUD week. Filmland is the subject of flattering pieces in the press, not written by press agents. Articles anent our greatness adorn the fair white surfaces of the Morning Editions, and the Evening Green Sheets pat us on the back with thirty-six point pyramid heads.

The Chamber of Commerce has stepped out with a statement that deluges the public with data, flabbergasts it with figures, and staggers it with statistics of the magnitude of the Movies.

We quote a few of the figures.

The forty studios located in our fair city and the environs immediately adjacent are valued at more than twelve and a quarter million dollars. Ten thousand people find more or less work in the film plants. Three hundred and eighty-four thousand six hundred and fifteen dollars and six bits are paid out at each weekly walk of the studio ghosts.

And that is not all.

Cannot Supersede the Orange.

We are greater than the orange. The orange has long been the symbol of California's greatness. Other things have tried to supersede the orange, but they have always failed. The lemon tried to squeeze its way to the top in vain. The fig fizzled out after a short fight. The grape gasped its last long ago. The bean was winded early in the race. The prune, after worming its way along the course for years, dried up and quit.

We quote from an editorial in the Evening Herald:

"Fifty millions of dollars is the estimate placed on the value of the films produced in this city in a year. That is approximately equal to the entire value of the orange crop of Southern California."

It remained for the movies to push the orange from its proud perch.

I went out to Brunton and called on Harry Rapf, manager of the western end of the Selznick organization, one day this week.

Mr. Rapf has two productions going at full blast—"Blind Youth," under the direction of Ted Sloman, and "The Children of Destiny," with George Irving at the wheel; and by the time this gets into print, Wesley Ruggles and Owen Moore, who have just arrived on the Coast, will be shooting on Owen's new film, "His Word of Honor."

Gets a Good "Butt."

Mr. Rapf said he feels that both "Blind Youth" and "The Children of Destiny" are going to be superfine productions when they are finished, and suggested that I go over to the studio and have a look at the sets. He cracked open a new box of cigars, and I lighted up the first smoke that I've picked up since Christmas that didn't taste, look and smell like a holiday rope, and went over on stage five, where "Blind Youth" was on the fire.

Alfred Green started to make "Blind Youth," but got sick, and Ted Sloman, who had just finished directing Bessie Barriscale, and was getting himself all set for a little rest, was called in to finish it.

McGrail Is Some Actor.

Walter McGrail, who plays the lead in the picture, and Claire McDowell were working out a scene when I arrived. Mr. McGrail was wearing a dressing gown. According to my mind, any actor who can be dramatic in a dressing gown is some actor, and Mcgrail was getting away with it in great shape.

It's hard to judge a production by a little peep at a little of the action in the studio, but there was that air of smooth work, confidence in the director, and an atmosphere of everybody being satisfied with their parts, and all doing their darndest, that you do not see in every film when it is being made. Taking all this, and the fact that "Blind Youth" is a big story, into consideration, I am willing to back Harry Rapf up in his statement that the film is going to be a whale, whether he ever gives me another cigar or not.

They've got a dandy cast for the story; in addition to McGrail and Miss McDowell, there are Colin Kenny, Ora Carewe, Leatrice Joy, Clara Horton, Leo White, Joseph Swickard and Buddy Post.

Bear of a Musician.

"Blind Youth" was the only one of the Selznick productions I was able to see, however. When I got over to the stage where George Irving is making "The Children of Destiny," with Edith Hallor in the leading role, the place was deserted. But I'll get George yet, see if I don't.

After this I met George Hackathorn, leading juvenile, who told me about having just finished a good part in Lois Weber's latest production, and George and I stepped in on the glass stage and watched William Park directing Bessie Barriscale in a Greenwich Village story about a musician who was a bear on the fiddle, but didn't have gumption enough to keep from falling for the stuff of the lady heavy of the piece.

A story with kids in it and a lot of tender stuff about the woman who understood and brought happiness out of misery by her understanding. A fine vehicle for Miss Barriscale. Forrest Stanley plays the opposite lead, and the fiddle. Thomas Holding is the husband of the lady heavy, played by Dorothy Cummings. The four kids are Stanton Williams, a fat, cute little rascal, Mary Jane Irving, Gloria Holt and True Boardman.

Does that name bring back memories? This True Boardman is the little son of the True Boardman of fame in "Stingaree," and many other films. The little chap is only seven, but he is wearing his father's shield in a worthy way, and he gives promise of some day being as good an actor as the True Boardman who died.

I thought I had garnered all the dope possible for one afternoon, when I left the Barriscale set, and I was just going to call it a day and take advantage of H. H. Van Loan's offer of a fast ride back to Broadway, when I saw one of the best make-ups I have ever seen, coming out of the cafeteria.

Money in Strong Makeup.

It was a little, dried-up looking geezer with stringy whiskers, wearing a dingy dressing gown, with a hundred or so pins stuck in the lapels, and split up the back like a locust. Its fingers trembled with the palsy—its chin shook with age.

"Hey, there," it piped in a whining voice.

I "heyed" and took a good long look before I could place the chap. It was William V. Mong, known for many years to the eastern legitimate circuits in "The Claybreaker," and known to the films as the creator of many parts, and particularly that fine bit of the dissolute doctor in "The Miracle Man."

Billy Mong, if anybody wants my opinion, is one of the best character actors in the business. Billy told me he was supporting Jack Kerrigan, and as I had been trying to get a glimpse of Jack at work for weeks, I said "Lead me to him," and we went over on the other end of the big stage where I had just tried to find George Irving and Miss Hallor.

And there in a neat little boxed-in set were Jack Kerrigan, Ernest Ward, his director, and Frank Geraghty, the assistant, and a bunch of actors making "One Week-End," a story of a chap who has been unjustly accused of crime and sent over the road—who escapes and gets into a week-end party and meets the heavy who was responsible for his trouble—makes him believe he is the son of a rich man the heavy is trying to trim, and from that goes on at a fast and furious pace that furnishes as much action and excitement as two or three average plots.

Might Write Movie History.

Mr. Kerrigan's sister, Kathleen, is in the play, and she and Jack and Ernest Ward are making a sort of reunion party of it. Mr. Ward was with the Kerrigans when they were on the regular stage with Clay Clement in "Sam Houston," and this is the first time the three of them have been thrown together since.

I had a long conversation with Jack, who was not in the action then being shot, and he told me a lot of things about the early days that will make mighty interesting reading when I write the complete history of the Movies in seventy-six volumes, as I intend to do some day.

Fritzi Brunette is supporting Mr. Kerrigan in "One Week-End." Emmett King, who is an author as well as an actor, is in the cast with a good part. Lilie Leslie, of London and other Metropolitan stages, does a vamp role. Alfred Regnier, a mixture of French, Irish and American pep, depicts a college athlete. Frank Geraghty is doing double duty by assisting to direct the production and filling an important role at the same time.

That's nothing for Frank, however. He's a versatile chap. In addition to being an assistant director and actor, he has five successful scenarios, two one-act plays and a popular song to his credit, and while putting all this over he has found time to play tolerably well on a saxophone.

Announces Levering's First Picture.

One of the surprises in picture circles the beginning of the year was the announcement that Joseph Levering, director of a score of screen successes, had started in "on his own" as a picture producer.

The new producer chose as his first effort Robert Ames Bennet's magazine story, "His Temporary Wife," announced by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for mid-February release, and to ensure its success Mr. Levering selected a strong cast, including Rubye DeRemer, Edmund Breese, Mary Boland, Sugene Strong, W. T. Carleton and Armand Cortes.

"The Christian" Is Bought for Screen Presentation

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has purchased the picture rights to Hall Caine's "The Christian." The price paid for this masterpiece, which will be given a production in keeping with the importance of the work, is said to set a new record. Goldwyn plans to make the film version of Hall Caine's powerful drama one of the greatest photoplays ever screened. No story written in this generation possesses to a fuller degree all of the essentials for heart-stirring action, and every resource of Goldwyn's vast organization will be at the disposal of the director and players selected for the interpretation.

The records of publishers and librarians in England and in this country show that "The Christian" for more than twenty years has been one of the most widely read books in the English language. Many editions numbering hundreds of thousands of copies have been printed and the book has been translated into a dozen languages. At the present time there is a steady sale for the novel here and in England, and it is in constant demand at the public libraries.

Shortly after the story had become established as a literary sensation, it was made into a play which scored a phenomenal success in London and New York.

"The Kentucky Colonel" To Be a Sumptuous Film

HARRY M. RUBEY, president of the National Film Corporation, announces that "The Kentucky Colonel" is about one-third finished, and when marketed, about March 1, it will be the most sumptuous and costly feature ever attempted by the National. Although many of the exteriors and all the interiors were made in the mountains near Los Angeles, where the National built a city as called for in the novel, a number of scenes will be made in Kentucky, near Louisville, the "locale" of the story.

The principals in the production, who will accompany Director William A. Seiter to Kentucky, are Joseph J. Dowling, Francis McDonald, Elinor Field, Lloyd Bacon, Jill Woodward, Fred Kohler, Thelma Salter and Gordon Griffiths.

According to Mr. Rubey, "The Kentucky Colonel" will be sold outright. Press material and hints on exploitation are now being prepared.

Drives Motorcycle Through Window.

Noel Smith, who directs the Jimmy Aubrey comedies for Vitagraph, recently drove a motorcycle through a garage window because he couldn't find anyone else to do it the way he wanted it done. After he had been restored to consciousness the members of the company congratulated him on not having broken his neck. He only had some severe lacerations of the scalp and face, and a broken finger. He was back on his job after a few days.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Washington Advertising Director Takes Issue on Hand Lettering

NELSON B. BELL, of the Crandall theatres, Washington, takes courteous exception to our comments on the Crandall advertising in a recent issue. To save you the trouble of looking back for the reference, Mr. Bell sought to cut down the size of his displays while retaining their prominence. He sought to do this with cut work and hand lettering because the other houses were all using retaining border. We suggested that type would have been better.

Mr. Bell comes back with the one defense of hand lettering. He got more in the line than he could have done with the most condensed type in the newspaper's sample book. But that does not apply to the advertisement in its entirety. Mr. Bell concedes this by using part type in one of his later displays. Now and then a wide title can be put into one line of lettering where no decent looking type would fit, but these constitute the exception and not the rule.

Mr. Bell also points out that he is advertising to meet his local situation, where he has to fight two pages of theatrical advertisements on a Sunday. He got attention for his space by a departure from the conventional border designs of the other houses. He accomplished his object, but we think that he did so at the cost of plain reading. It is of no great advantage to have your advertisement seen if it is not also read. There is room for a compromise.

We think that both Harold B. Franklin and Samuel Sivitz have solved this problem more advantageously. Both use hand lettering and both use comparatively small spaces; smaller spaces than Mr. Bell employs, but they go in for lightline rather than for heavy art work, and if the idea is to fight heavy borders, then lightline, by all means, is the best weapon. Mr. Bell sends in two more recent examples. He disarms comment by admitting that the Farrar display does not show prominently, yet adds that it was the most conspicuous display in the papers.

And yet we think that the same frame mortised for the message in type would have been even more conspicuous because of the white space and black lettering within the grey border, which here would serve much as white space might. He gains a better effect with the Clara Kimball Young display, but if his object was to command attention we think he could have gained an additional saving in space and greater attraction by using just a strip showing the eyes, twice the size of the present cut, with the lettering of the title immediately below and the star's name above, preferably the "Eyes of Young in Eyes of Youth" idea.

Mr. Bell raises another interesting point. He says that with hand lettering he escapes the monotony of display due to the use of the same faces by all advertisers. The choice of type faces is limited in a newspaper composing room. Hand lettering gives him variety. For the cost of three or four hand-lettered designs, plus a Sunday afternoon with a type book, he could lay in three or four fonts of title type which would be as much his own as the best of hand lettering, and would also be more legible. We think if Mr. Bell will go over the pages of this department for a couple of months back he will find many interesting suggestions. As he says, our comment is from a general viewpoint and not from the Washington angle, but we think that he can better his displays with less art work.

"Everywoman" Lends Itself to Unusual Advertising Effects

JUST as "Broken Blossoms" was responsible for many unique advertising effects, "Everywoman" is capable of unusual treatment. The character of the story is best told pictorially, and this is one of the few plays in which art work sells better than straight type. One of the best displays we have seen comes from the Rialto, Atlanta, Ga., in prominence rather than the actual number of square inches, and short of a full page we do not believe that this strip could be improved upon. The copy might be bettered to stress the fact that this is an extension of the engagement, but the general layout is unusually good.

Kunsky Advertising Offers Pointers For Students Who Plan Layouts

HOWARD O. PIERCE, of the Kunsky houses, Detroit, sends in some samples of the work done for the Adams and Madison theatres. They offer good studies in layout, for most of them show skill above the average. We like least the first of the three displays in the triple cut. This is a three tens, the largest yet the least effective of the three. A checkerboard design, which has nothing in particular to do with the story, is used to gain prominence, with a cut of the star and pictures of the De Havens in the lower corners. This added attraction accounts for the larger space used. The only selling talk is a four-line bank in a break in the cut near the upper right hand corner which tells "Cast on an island in scanty raiment, Fate brought her the love of a good man." Most of the stars have taken turns at being cast away on a desert island with few clothes, and this appeal probably sold more tickets than any other line of attack would have done. A much better display is that for "What's Your Husband Doing?"

Three Displays Which Show That the Largest Advertisement Is Not Always the Best.

Here there is an almost perfect combination of title, selling lines and cut. Few cuts fit the stories they are supposed to advertise, but this does and will immediately attract attention which the lines will build up on. It is only a three nines, but is plenty large enough to get it all in. Just below the title is run "The sensational story of a man, his wife and the other woman told in a way that's going to make old man Cadillac sit up in his grave and take notice." That should sell tickets if anything can, for Cadillac is the local patron saint (and not an automobile), who has been dead for some time. The smaller space is a three sevens showing a more advantageous use of the same picture of Miss Thomas.

Just to show what they can do there is included a cross page sevens for "The Greatest Question" with the question mark facing the right way. There is no special talk here. None is needed. It will sell on the producer and the stars or it will not sell at all, so the only argument used is that this will be offered at the regular house prices. There does not seem to be any particular merit in the advertisement.

It might be that anyone could throw an advertisement together like this, but to the contrary it is harder to get a good simple advertisement like this than it is to fill the space with words. It takes both restraint and intelligence to get an effect like this. It is an art to know when to stop talking, and this art Mr. Pierce seems to possess. All of his stuff is brief. He says something good and stops. He knows if he cannot reach the patron with one good argument, more will not help a sale in the least. It would be a good plan for the beginner to memorize that last sentence. It is one of the commandments.

W. C. Watson Believes in Teasers If Only You Give Them Time to Work

W. C. WATSON, of the Wenonah Theatre Co., Bay City, Mich., is another who believes that the teaser is a powerful draw if only you give it time to work. Like Mr. Tally he tried the stunt for "Back to God's Country," using the First National stock dog truck cuts, and like Mr. Tally, he cleaned up on the showing, because he gave the teasers time to tease. He ran his teasers ten days before the first showing date. He ran them for a week with no other advertising. His spaces showed only the foot-pad prints with "Follow the tracks of Wapi."

After the fourth day he added "Announcement soon." This was to hold interest, lest the people get tired of watching for the space daily. This brief addition put fresh interest into the teasers. The people had become interested. Possibly their interest was being strained past the curiosity point, but the assurance that the mystery would soon be solved brought a fresh interest. It carried past the danger point. It was along the same lines as an old vaudeville act. When the curtain rose the artist was discovered in bed. The unusual situation brought a laugh, then curiosity.

Holding Up Suspense.

When the suspense had almost reached the breaking point, the performer wagged one foot. It got a fresh laugh and roused fresh suspense. What would be the next development? It ran the opening to double the time originally possible. In the same way the addition of the phrase kindled fresh interest. The fifth day brought "Watch for the big announcement." The last day brought "The trail is nearing the end. Announcement tomorrow. Don't miss it." No one did. They were all waiting for it when it came.

All of this merely brought the readers up to the point of interest when the real announcement was sprung, but it did more than that. It assured the careful reading of the full announcement and the reading began with the prospect assured that it was something out of the ordinary. He came to the first display advertisement already assured that the picture was good. The full text merely confirmed and amplified this belief. This could not have been done in a three day teaser campaign.

Got the Run of the Paper.

And no special effort was made to get any definite position. To the contrary the ad was permitted to run wherever the make-up man put it. It got on the home page one day and attracted the women. Another day it was on the sporting page. It reached everyone through this variety of placing. The first displays were only a two ones. Later they went to two five and a halfs and again dropped to ones, but always the pages were prominent.

Of course the nature of the teaser, the picture and the campaign must determine the length of time it runs. If you use the "Should a ——" series of titles to tease with, they will not hold interest as long as the dog pads unless they are built up with a change of copy. Here the title alone is not good for more than three or four days, but with some novel idea, such as that used by First National, ten days in advance and a full week of teaser is not too long.

What Bleich Has Done Will Work for You

How George A. Bleich Gets the Confidence of Patrons

LIKE Houdini, "Bleich" has become a dictionary word in the lexicon of the showman. To "Bleich" your advertising is to tell the truth, even if it hurts a little at the time. Sometimes it may cut down business, but for every dollar George A. Bleich loses by telling the truth about a weak film he gets a hundred on other subjects. He does not have to take a full page advertisement to make people think he has something better than usual. He can tell it in the usual space and the town will turn out because they know it will be so. Here's a little example of how it works. He had Constance Binney in her first production. She was unknown to his patrons. He took a single 11 1/3, told the story briefly and added:

You come and see Constance in this play on my say so of being well pleased.—Bleich.

That was all he needed. A page of press stuff and criticisms and other corroborative evidence could have done no more than these four lines in ten point. Bleich said so. His patrons knew it would be so. He never has to sell through superlatives. He just tells what he knows. Here are some examples taken at random:

"THE VENGEANCE OF DURAND."

The story by Rex Beach and is quite tragic. It is an elaboration of the old famous Vitagraph picture, in which Earl Williams and Edith Storey appeared some years ago.

"THE LIFE LINE."

A big melodrama with thrills—advanture—romance galore! Spectacular and big. Be sure and see it.

"THE THIRD KISS."
Harrison Ford Is the Hero.

—And it's a very different picture than the ones you have usually seen Vivian in. It isn't a simple little love story—it is of a stirring nature, melodramatic and exciting—the kind that makes you set up and take notice, keeps you busy watching every minute.

BOND OF LOVE.

An absorbing drama of love and sacrifice; a page from the book of life. It will tug at your heart-strings; it will bring tears to your eyes and a smile to your lips.
Really the best Pauline Frederick Picture seen here in a great while.—Bleich.

Mr. Bleich does more than save space with this policy. He makes and holds friends. He is adding a fourth theatre to his local string with a fifth in prospect when building material can be had. Another recent stunt was to launch a serial with souvenirs to all the kiddies. And he added: "If you haven't the price of admission, come anyway and we'll pass you in." That is an old idea, but it never fails to work.

Used Shoe Exhibit as Excuse for Ad Film

THOMAS D. SORIERO, of the Strand, Lowell, Mass., used an exhibition of odd boots and shoes to put over an advertising film. It was a successful camouflage and made the audience like the paying feature. For two weeks the lobby of the Strand was filled with show cases containing displays of shoes, some of them said to be a couple of centuries old. The second week a film was shown advertising the making of shoes by modern machinery. Apparently it was a follow to the shoe display and not the real reason for the display and for this reason it was accepted where a straight advertising film might have made trouble. It also helped displays of the shoes advertised in the windows of the local shops, apparently an independent hook-up, but presumably a part of the general scheme. It gives a new angle to the much discussed advertising film problem.

Is There Magic in the Name El Dorado?

There must be magic in the name of El Dorado. Out in Eldorado, Ill., Steve Farrar has hustled until he has three theatres where he had but one. In El Dorado, Kansas, H. G. Ramsey is a hustler, too. He sends in the first of a series of weekly five twenties to show he started the New Year right. He writes: "This is quite a large display for a 400 show, but the space sells for only twenty cents an inch and I have found that good newspaper advertising always pays." It assuredly does do that very thing, but it takes nerve, even at that, to plank down $20 a week for just one display and then build up with a daily space, but Mr. Ramsey plans to make this weekly a sort of miniature magazine, with cuts and readers as well as the announcement of the program for the week, and we think it is going to bring in many times the twenty dollars he pays. It will not be easy money to trace.

That is one fault with this style of stuff. You do not advertise any single attraction. You advertise not alone the week, but the pictures in general, and you cannot put your finger on any one night and say that that space brought in an extra ten dollars. You must sense the results; you must even be willing to wait for the full results, and here is where many managers fall by the wayside. They do not give the big space time to sink in. They put it in the Saturday issue and want to see the whole twenty come back to the box office Monday evening. It is the wrong idea. No breakfast food man ever put in a single advertisement and expected it to sell a given number of packages of his product. He advertises broadcast and then watches the general result on his business.

Theatre managers must learn to be willing to wait for results. It is probable that the space will do Mr. Ramsey more than twenty dollars' worth of good even the first week, but he will not be able to put his finger on any particular money and say that is the direct return. He knows that it will pay in the long run and he will keep on. Others will be less patient and lose the best effect. He knows. Others are impatient and lose the full value of their investment. He sends in some good-looking smaller spaces for single attractions, varying his space to fit the attraction. He has a terse, definite style. He doesn't go in for fine writing or the "greatest ever" style of stuff. He starts out to sell film by talking about its good points, moderately and with conviction. We shall be glad if he puts us on his regular mailing list, for he is in the El Dorado class. There are many more El Dorados in other states. Let's hear from them all.

H. M. Addison Disclaims Credit Due Another Man

BECAUSE H. M. Addison seemed a fixture at the Oneonta Theatre, we credited him some issues back with some particularly good advertising, but he very promptly wrote giving the credit to Edward R. Moore, for he has moved on to Binghamton, where he has charge of the Stone Opera House and the New Binghamton. He writes of Mr. Moore:

He is one of those few regular fellows. Came in slow and kept his eyes open; after a month on the ground worked out his own ideas, and now a fixture with the firm. Seeing the wonderful opportunities by using a special border, our Boss ordered the same border for all houses, and now the ten houses use this border exclusively.

The Border Used by All of the Hathway Houses

They All Say Here it Pays to Advertise

The border is simple and effective. In the display we show Mr. Addison has worked it to the limit, but in most instances it is used to border the entire space. It pays to get a distinctive border. One looks for the border and can always locate the advertisement. One corking good stunt Mr. Addison recently pulled was an advertisement writing contest. Ten dollars in gold were offered for the best written advertisement by a nonprofessional. The management printed the title and a few pointers some days in advance. Entries were received from 172 patrons. The judging was done by the advertising managers of the department stores. the best displays being used for the regular advertising the others being shown in a window.

Mr. Addison offers to send the dope to anyone who writes, but any exhibitor can work the scheme from what we have printed here, it would seem. The chief value of the stunt is the attention every one gives the details. The entries represent only a very small percentage of those who gave the advertisement careful study. Probably the whole town knew all about that particular picture, and at a cost of only ten dollars. Try it and see how it works for you.

A Double Decker Proves "It Pays to Advertise"

DEMONSTRATING that it pays to advertise, H. A. Albright, of the American, Butte, Mont., took a double page for the play of the same title, hooking up other concerns, but taking rather more space for his own announcement than is usually taken up by the house management, to prove his own belief in his theories. This slogan lends itself well to the hook up page and can be worked in almost any town, but Mr. Albright got a double page for his space and he put the picture over. For the same play he advertised for a lost key to be returned to the office of the newspaper for a ticket reward.

In this connection a predetermined number of keys were "lost" in various parts of the town, each fastened to a tag stating that this was the key referred to in the want advertisement and that a pair of seats would be given for its return to the office of the paper if accompanied by a clipping of the advertisement in question. This helped the paper boom its lost and found classified advertising, and got Mr. Albright more free space than the seats cost him. The tags were plain manila baggage tags and so few were used that they were typewritten instead of being printed up.

This idea is an excellent one to try on almost any picture where it is desired to work in with a newspaper, and in every town with more than one paper there is always one eager to boom its classified advertising department and it will be easy to persuade the advertising manager to come in with the necessary space. Where there are many classified advertisements, a good variant of the scheme would be to scatter small ads, giving a clue to the hiding places of the keys, which would ensure all of the advertisements being read. In this case the keys should be hidden in places where the eager public could not do property damage. When the stunt was first worked by the English papers, with money rewards, the interest was so keen that much damage was done to property by the excited searchers. This can be avoided by a proper planting of the keys in places where grass cannot be trampled or shrubbery broken down.

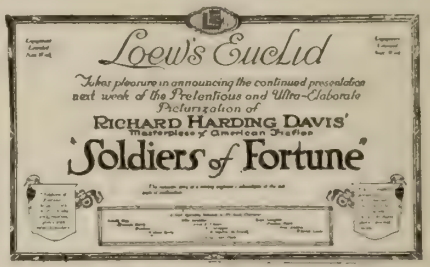
Used Club Women to Get Over Second Week Run

BECAUSE they held "Soldiers of Fortune" for a second week at Loew's Euclid Theatre, Cleveland, E. E. Bair did some intensive advertising for that feature. His Sunday announcement was 125 lines across the page, right at the top. The upper portion is hand lettered, but the work is clearly done and this seems to be one of the few instances where the hand lettering is to be preferred to all-type. This is a special announcement and the hand lettering calls attention to that fact. The lettering is so large in the original that it is not difficult to read. In a smaller space the hand work would have been out of place, even in a special announcement, but there is no crowding here and the work is well handled.

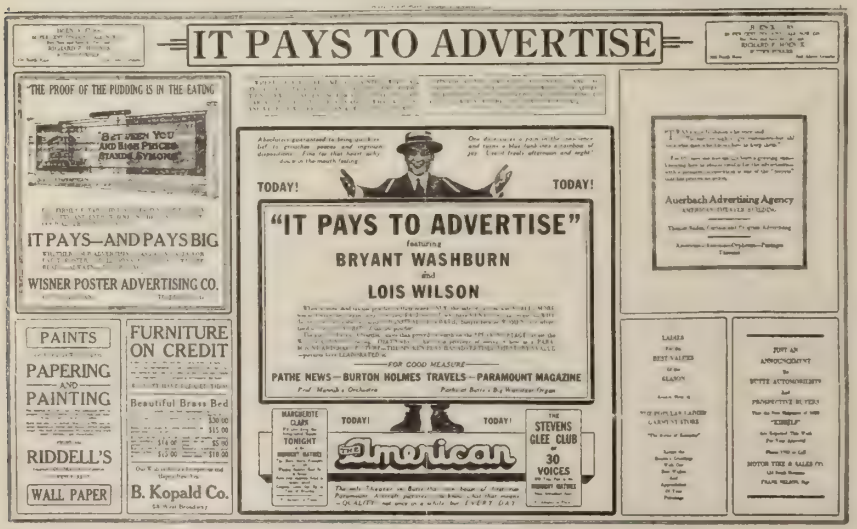


A Cross Page 125 Lines Deep from Loew's Euclid, Cleveland

All of the matter below the title is in type, italic faces being used the better to harmonize with the general style. This hand lettering might not have worked with a new attraction, but where the film has already been advertised for a full week and is presumably sold on argument, the use of the formal announcement is good form. In the smaller spaces the space on the left is given to the opinions of the Cleveland clubwomen. A special morning performance was given for their benefit and they were asked to write their opinions. Some of the comments of the women most widely known were picked up for the advertisement and, of course, interested other women.

Two Smaller Displays from E. E. Bair.

This is a new angle for "Soldiers of Fortune" and gives the Boy Scouts a rest. If you have the film and the chance, work both ideas and as many others as you can devise. If a special morning performance will cost you ten or fifteen dollars and bring in a dollar more than it costs, it is good business. You make the dollar and you get an advertisement that will run on past the showing of any particular film. You cannot work the idea too often, but you can use it once a month if you can think up a suitable excuse.



Mr. Albright's Double Decker.

Keeps the Sheriff Away.

Slide Down a Rope to the Front Page

Albright Is Happy Because He Made The Front Page of Butte Newspaper

GETTING on the front page of a newspaper with a top-of-column story, with two inside stories for the following days, at the cost of some nerve and $12.80 in money is the stunt which is making H. A. Albright, of the American, Butte, feel good all over.

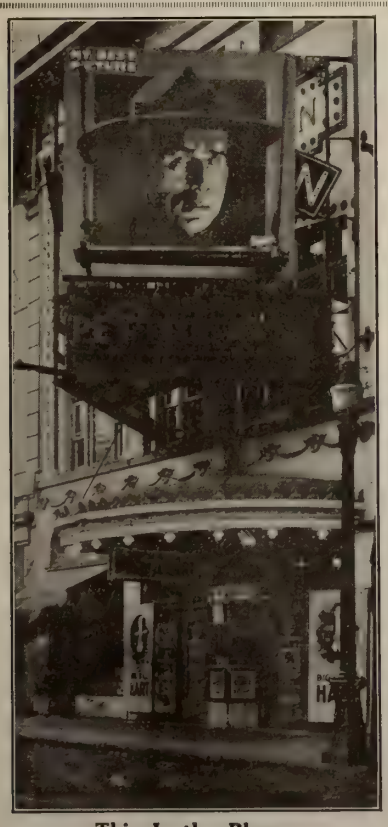
Ever since he was promoted from advertising sign man to manager, Mr. Albright has had his eye on that front page space. Ralph Ruffner made it several times, and Albright wanted to get there, too.

But the front page is not to be had for the asking. There are seven columns to the page and each of those columns is supposed to carry some real news of the day. Butte newspapers have self-respecting editors who refuse to sell that position. It must be won. It is a sort of D. S. C. of press agentry—only less common.

Because it was difficult to attain, Mr. Albright wanted it so badly that it hurt inside of him. And to make it complete he picked out the hardest boiled editor in town; the man who runs the Anaconda Standard.

The Idea Came Slowly.

He thought of a lot of good stuff, but it did not seem to measure up to the editorial standards. It got space, but it did not crowd the front page any, and it was the front page he was keen to disarrange.



This Is the Place.
Front of American Theatre, Butte, with M. Albright's painting.

He though the better part of 1919, but the coming of the new year brought a change, and he put on his best clothes and went over to interview the man with the big blue pencil. He felt none too certain, for time and again he had shoved in what he describes as "a perfectly Christian reader," only to find the accursed "Advt." stuck onto the end of the copy, with the sinister suggestion of a bill from the advertising department presently. With a man who kept that "Advt." on a rubber stamp right on his desk, Albright was making no bets even with himself, but he was game for a try.

Sitting on the edge of a chair he broke it gently to the editorial person that a veiled lady was going to slide down a rope in front of his theatre and paint a picture on a canvas just above the electric sign. Did the editor not think that this was a really nice piece of news?

The editor so far unbent as to admit that a lady upholstered in red velvet, sliding down a rope and painting a picture of Bill Hart's mug on some hitherto unblemished canvas sounded pretty fair to middling. He looked at a permit from the mayor to tie up traffic on the street for a couple of days, asked the lady's name, and looked disappointed when he was told that the lady was bashful, and then he had a hireling write a story that ran 11⅛ inches overall, including the head, on the second column of the front page, and the next day there were 13⅛ inches on page three, and 4⅞ inches on page four the third day telling that the lady had completed her stunt.

And he did not stamp "Advt." on the stuff, either.

And outside the cost of the paint the bill came to $12.80.

Here Are the Figures.

Mr. Albright did not charge the costume, because the head cashier made the "dress" for him out of an old box curtain. He did not charge for the lady's services, because he was the lady, which is the real reason why the lady was masked. It was also the reason why she climbed a rope from the roof instead of coming out of the front door and climbing a ladder. The bill runs:

3 2x4s	$1.08
3 Cornell boards	6.48
96 feet lumber	1.44
7 staple bolts	2.80
10 toy balloons	1.00
	12.80

The ballons were not for the purpose of holding Mr. Albright up. They were the common air baloons, and five were blown up and tossed to the crowd each day, carrying a pass for two. As the balloons were almost as light as air, they were difficult to capture and their chase made things interesting.

When Courage Fled.

Mr. Albright climbed into his rig each morning about 11:30, shinned down the rope and painted on the picture. He did half the first day and completed the job the second, making the story good for a three day run and the crowd good for two days. The painting was stopped at one o'clock about the time the doors were opened, and there was nothing to prevent you from going right inside if you had the price of admission.

He was an artist before he became a manager, so the painting job was easy, but Mr. Albright admits that he felt a bit shaky the first day when he looked down into the crowd and saw a well-known undertaker in the very front row of the police lines. The man looked too blame eager, and he was glad when the planter was swallowed up by the crowd. He did not mind the ambulance waiting on the far corner. That was a detail he had planned himself, but the undertaker looked positively hungry.

It made a lot of talk, and it got a big crowd in front of the house at opening time for two days in succession. It was good work, but we wish Mr. Albright had had the nerve to pose to the photographer in those red velvet bloomers. That was the one point he overlooked.

Postcards Help to Advertise

LOEW'S Garden, Kansas City, sends in some postcards sent out to advertise the personal appearance of June Caprice, 20,000 of which were mailed out with a handwritten message from the star. The same card, in two colors, is also supplied patrons who desire to postcard their friends. This is a good idea for a permanent stunt for a large house. It gets advertising to an absolutely authentic list of addresses at small cost. So well does this work that in some vaudeville theatres and many restaurants the cards will be stamped and mailed free. The back of the card shows pictures of the house, the front being reserved for address and message. Try it some time—and copy off the addresses for your own mailing list.

Another Publisher Wakes Up

BONI & LIVERWRIGHT, publishers of the Modern library, have seen the light and are going to push their film title books with the same thoroughness as the music publishers have shown. The Goldwyn Company has produced their "The Paliser Case," and the publishers are arranging to boom the book while the play is being shown in any city in which they have representation. They have obtained the list of bookings and will make a drive on the book just ahead of the play showing on the style made familiar by the song sheet men. Goldwyn will cooperate on thi spublicity with a supply of window cards and stills, and the two concerns will work together for the benefit of the exhibitor—and themselves.

Advance Stunts on "Huckleberry Finn"

Doob Jazzes Ohio Town for Premier Of "Huckleberry Finn" and Wins Out

TRYING out shows on the small town dog used to be indoor sport of the dramatic managers, but lately first runs have been granted to small town houses for big films, and recently the Paramount-Artcraft gave Chillicothe, Ohio, its chance to see a real first night even before Broadway had a showing. "Huckleberry Finn" was the film and Oscar A. Doob, the Cincinnati publicity man, went to help the Sherman put it over.

Somewhere some one leaked and the opposition house booked in a cheap vaudeville act called "Huckleberry Finn and Tom Sawyer," and the day the teaser advertising for the film came out, the other house had large displays for "Huckleberry Finn," overlooking the rest of the regular name. This looked on the face of things like clever work, but it boomeranged and the opposition listened to public opinion and quickly withdrew. The theatre did not fight back, for C. A. Smith, of the Sherman, merely announced his regret at the confusion and telling that his was the house offering the pre-release film. The attempt to steal the teasers merely gave greater publicity to the real attraction.

Schools Collaborated.

One of the most remarkable features of the campaign was the school angle. Professor W. F. Prout, superintendent of the public schools, had the story told as part of the literature class studies, induced the public library to put in extra copies of the book, and had all of the classes notified of the showing and dismissed the schools sufficiently early to permit the children to attend the second matinee showing on the opening day.

The parochial schools did even more. Father Halpin, of St. Mary's, dismissed his classes at 1.30 the day of the opening and marched them in a body to the first performance. Father Heintz, of St. Peters, released his pupils in time for the second matinee. More than a quarter of all the school children saw the film the opening day, and practically all had come in by the end of the third day; a local merchant, I. L. Bergman, had the orphans as his guests the second afternoon and others donated tickets to the children too poor to afford their own admissions.

Beating the Newspapers.

For months the newspapers and the managers had been fighting and not a line of theatrical news had appeared in the local sheets other than the display advertisements. Doob went to the editors with the story that the film was being shown in Chillicothe for the first time anywhere. He made an appeal to local pride—and got an item, the first in many months. To build up on this he persuaded the News-Advertiser to give a treat to the newsboys as a circulation scheme. This meant a story a day, and the town gasped.

That seemed to clean up the newspapers, but Doob had greater vision. The Columbus papers came to town. He got the Columbus editors interested in the fact that an Ohio town was to enjoy the premiere. The local papers reprinted the stories as a matter of civic pride. Then the more distant Cincinnati papers came in, and it worked again.

Jazz Date Strips.

One very simple stunt was to jazz the date strips, which usually are never considered as advertising matter. The addition of a block letter "Hurrah" had a wonderful effect on possible patrons and the "Hurrah" was a local catchword for days. Most of the good stands were owned by an out of town bill posting concern and were unavailable. To get around this difficulty, sixes and 24-sheets were mounted and hung from the second story windows of the vacant buildings in the business district. They were worth many times what billboard would have brought. A bill off a billboard is always worth more than a regular stand.

To back these up there were hook-up windows in the book store, and a clothing merchant had a live Huck (with iodine freckles) in his window display, and gave free tickets to all boy patrons on a designated "Huck Finn Day." A hardware store also made cutouts and stills the basis of a gin display, and Mr. Smith never shed a tear over the fact that the store was alongside the opposition house. Doob did not wet any handkerchiefs, either.

A Model Perambulator.

On the previous Saturday, the big shopping day, Huck drove a donkey cart around town, plastered with signs, and the children running after the outfit supplied the necessary noise.

A really novel stunt was replacing the traffic regulation signs with cards made to fit the frames and reading "Straight ahead for Huck Finn" or with instructions to turn back, as the case might be. The civic pride appeal made this unusual stunt possible. One of the sets of signs pointed dead away from that same opposition, at that.

Another novelty was an advertisement for a certain edition of the story, declared to have been lost by the advance man. This was one of the early editions. An attractive cash reward was issued. No one found that particular

Two Pre-release Stands for "Huckleberry Finn."

How Oscar A. Doob helped an Ohio manager put over the first showing of a Paramount-Artcraft. The big "Huck" and the perambulator.

Made Big Capital of Fake Death Report

edition, but hundreds of old copies were dug out—and read. It all helped.

A very simple hook-up was made for a cigar store by cutting out a one sheet and thrusting a corncob pipe into Huck's mouth, with a good display of cobs surrounding it.

A Letter to Farmers.

Every rural delivery route out of the town was circularized with a form letter purporting to be from Huck himself. One was sent to every box and drew a good farmer trade, backed up by a liberal display of posters along the routes with the jazzed date strip. This pleased the local merchants, for it brought the farmers to town on an off day for the country trade, and advance announcement of this intention helped with the store window displays. It was pointed out to the merchants that by hooking up with a window display they could make an especial appeal to the farmers when they came in.

The result of it all was big business, with "Broken Blossoms" for opposition. These are all simple stunts, with the possible exception of the traffic controls, and can be worked when the film is regularly released. If you have the film coming, get busy with the library and book stores at once. Get advance interest as far ahead as possible, and tell your own schools what Chillicothe did. It should interest them.

Try These Triangular Perpetual Motion Displays

PERHAPS this idea will be as new to you as to the Paramount Publicity Department, which sends it in. Certainly it is a cheap and handy way of getting a motion display from window or tack cards. Take two of the cards and place them back to back, fastening one end with McGill paper fasteners. Now fasten a third card to these two in the same manner, getting a triangular display with concave surfaces, due to the method of fastening. Hang these by three strings, one from each top centre running to a single cord and suspend in the lobby or elsewhere. The concave shape works like a fan and the tri-sided displays will sway in the slightest breeze. It is simple and effective. Try it some time. The Mark Strand in Lynn, Mass., used it to exploit "The Miracle Man" and got big results, putting them all through the house and in store windows.

Muncie Used Janis Contest

FAMILIAR, yet always new, was the "Elsie Janis Contest" recently run by the Wysor Grand Theatre, Muncie, Ind., and the Press. The house bought the prize to be given the person writing the best letter on "How would you spend $10,000 to bring the greatest degree of possible happiness and betterment in Muncie?" The paper handled the contest as a circulation feature, basing the idea on the showing of the Selznick-Janis feature, "A Regular Girl," at the theatre. The contest was limited to residents of the Muncie district and the prize was supposed to be awarded by Miss Janis herself.

Rumors of Miss Pickford's Death Used to Put Over Her "Pollyanna"

S. BARRET McCORMICK, managing director of the Circle Theatre at Indianapolis, who is constantly doing something out of the ordinary in the exploitation of pictures, put over a publicity "stunt" last week in connection with the presentation of Mary Pickford's new picture, "Pollyanna," that was productive of a big increase in box-office receipts.

For several months past there has been a persistent rumor in Indianapolis—and other cities for that matter—that Mary Pickford's body rests beneath the sod. The rumor of the favorite star's death, which started no one knows why, has been going along for some time and seemingly has improved with age.

Box office girls at the Circle had become hoarse denying the rumor. Even some of the critics on the Indianapolis newspapers became skeptical of the denial and sought at various times to get some "inside information" on the matter from Mr. McCormick. The whole affair got him so worked up that he sent a wire to Mary asking her if she really was dead. Here is the way he worded the telegram:

This Is What He Wrote.

"For several weeks there as been a persistent rumor that you are dead. At least half the population have friends or relatives who attended your funeral and not less than four thousands served as pallebarers. I fully realize how these absurd rumors start but here at least there is a sincere feeling of sorrow over your demise and I wish you would wire a message to your many unknown friends and set their minds at rest so that they may feel assured that for many, many years at least they will have the opportunity of seeing little Mary in such glorious creations as "Pollyanna," which is the Circle's attraction all this week. Thanking you in advance and with sincerest and best wishes for many more years as America's sweetheart."

Miss Pickford, anxious to let her admirers know that she is still very much alive, sent the following response:

"To quote Mark Twain the reports of my deaths are greatly exaggerated. Feeling splendidly and am starting my next production, 'Top of Myself.' I surely hope that the people of Indianapolis will be entertained by 'Pollyanna.' Many thanks for your kind wire. Cordial greetings to my friends of Indianapolis. Affectionately. MARY PICKFORD."

As soon as Mr. McCormick received the reply to his message he called up the local newspapers and gave them the story. In addition to the articles appearing in the news columns, he reprinted the two telegrams in a large three-column advertisement and as a result had the entire theatre-going public talking about it. All of this, of course, proved excellent advertising for the Circle's attraction and as a result the box office receipts showed a decided increase for the week.

Real Plans in "Imp" Press Book

The pressbook for "The Imp," the Selznick-Elsie Janis production, looks attractive in its dress of green and black, but the best thing about the book is its text matter. There is a double page of stunts of various sorts including a novel lobby dressing, and they can all be worked. They are not put in merely to look interesting. They can be used to make money with. Not all press books are put together on these lines and for this reason the "Imp" book is notable.

You don't have to say your feature is poor, but you don't have to say it is good. Know when to pull out the soft pedal.

See the Weather Man About Snow Plays

Convenient Snow Storm Saved Bill For Salt for An Artificial Effect

ANOTHER instance of the unlimited devices for the exploitation of special feature attractions is shown by a novelty introduced by the Regent Theatre, Kalamazoo, Mich., under the direction of Arthur A. Frudenfield, publicity director.

Previous to the showing of "Back To God's Country," the Curwood-Carver attraction distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, at the Regent Theatre, other houses in Michigan had specialized on the dog-tracks and the animal features of this production.

A keen insight into the chances for exploitation showed Mr. Frudenfield that it was possible to link up a local coincident with some inexpensive exploitation and inject a new line of thought in the promotion for this picture.

Had A Former Mounted

It happened that W. G. Mitchell, manager of the Majestic Gardens Theatre in Kalamazoo, had been a member of the Royal Mounted Police of Canada. The Majestic Gardens Theatre is owned by the Butterfield interests, the same company which controls the destinies of the Regent. Mr. Frudenfield sensed the chance for a newspaper feature story built around the idea of a disclosure of Mr. Mitchell's experiences while a member of the Royal Mounted Police.

The story appeared in a leading daily newspaper and considerable local interest was aroused in the subject of the Royal Mounted Police, and naturally there was a gratifying bit of mention made about "Back to God's Country," showing at the Regent.

Seizing upon the idea that with local interest aroused in the Royal Mounted Police, there was a good opportunity to play strongly upon that idea in the presentation of the feature, Mr. Frudenfield arranged for the house attendants to dress as members of this Canadian force of law-enforcers. The girl ushers were dressed as maids of the great outdoors. The effect stirred considerable local comment.

Started With Ten.

The newspaper display exploitation started eight days in advance of the first showing of the attraction when ten inches of advertising was used. The allotment of advertising was increased each day until the first showing of the picture when the ad of the Regent Theatre measured one hundred inches. All of the ads were bordered by tracks of a dog which bore the word matter, "follow the tracks of Wapi, the Killer."

The arrangement of a musical score by Don Warren, leader of the Regent orchestra was a great factor in the success of the picture, according to Mr. Frudenfield.

An attractive and inexpensive lobby arrangement was gained by collecting the branches of a number of fir trees and placing them artistically about the front of the house. It was intended that several buckets of salt would be sprinkled along the sidewalk to give the effect of snow but the night before the opening performance a heavy snow made this expense unnecessary.

In addition to the use of window cards, a number of small cards picturing the various animals seen in "Back To God's Country," were attractively designed and distributed among the school children of Kalamazoo.

The showing of "Back To God's Country," at the Regent represented a daring step for the Butterfield interests. This house is locally considered an exclusive "vodvil" house and whether the run of a motion picture could produce the profit of a "vodvil" show was a matter of doubtful interest to the management. That a motion picture did deliver the goods is shown by the fact that a return engagement of the same feature at the same house is now arranged.

Put His Teasers on His Throwaways and Won Out

TEASER campaigns suggest the use of newspapers, but Meyer Shine, of the Hippodrome, Gloversville, N. Y., used throwaways and found that this stunt worked just as well as the more expensive newspaper space. Just before New Year's the town was deluged with small bills reading:

A New Year's Suggestion.
If single
PLEASE GET MARRIED.

There was absolutely nothing else on the bill, and no quotation marks on the title. The display was so lavish that it had everyone guessing for a couple of days, then the regular advertising was begun, and the throwaway hooked up to the full campaign with excellent results. It is too late to use the New Year angle, but "It's Leap Year, please get married" will do perhaps even better.

Tried Medium to Exploit "The Thirteenth Chair"

FIGHTING fire with fire finds its complement in advertising a mystery with a mystery worker. A number of odd exploitation stunts have been worked for "The Thirteenth Chair," but none has been better planned than that worked by Manager Rosen, of the New Unique, Minneapolis, who employed a local medium, Uro Nye, to appear in person with psychic manifestations similar to those accomplished in the film.

This not only permitted double-barrelled advertising before the showing date, but it gave the personality touch to the showing of the feature, for it was advertised that what was shown in the picture would be accomplished in person by Mme. Nye.

All of the posters were supplemented by special slips telling of the remarkable performances of the medium, hooking her appearance to that of the picture, and one and one, added together, made three in the minds of most patrons.

For an attractor Mr. Rosen placed on the sidewalk a chair fifteen feet tall with the statement that this was the thirteenth chair.

Don't worry about your opposition. Worry your opposition with advertising.

Give Them Girls and Gain Their Gold

Plenty of Girls In and Out of Films Liven Things Up in Dallas

BUILDING up on the film attractions with girls put over two recent film attractions to extra big business at the Lynch-Hulsey houses in Dallas, Texas. One was a "midnight cabaret," netting something like $2,400, and the other was a fashion show used as a prologue to "The Beauty Market."

Both of these shows were based upon the fondness the average man has for girl shows and the infrequency with which decent shows of this sort reach the Texas towns. Most of the tabs and burlesque shows are of indifferent quality, and are too coarse to be attractive.

Hal C. Norfleet, of the Hippodrome, knew this, and when they played "A Midnight Romance," the idea of a midnight cabaret came to him. There was a burlesque show in town and he chartered fifteen girls at $20 a week for a twenty minute turn each night. He built runways down the aisles just like a devil-may-care New York theatre, and he turned the publicity loose.

It did not take long to teach the girls the plugger song written for this play. The rest of the show was built up of the specialties the girls knew. It was very little more than a burlesque first part without the unspeakable dialogue, brought over into a decent environment, but that and the novelty of the midnight performance drew the crowds. The stunt was used as a prologue to the film and the girls figured it as easy money for their twenty minute turn each night. The cost was well under $400 and the receipts were in excess of $2,800 for these special midnight shows, which started after the regular theatres were out.

"Velvet" with a Pile.

It was all velvet, for it did not appear to affect the usual evening business. It either brought them out again or it brought out a new crowd who were not the usual picture goers. Serpentines and confetti were freely used, the girls pranced down the runways, and the whole thing had the real New York air. It was not only a big winner on its own account, but it boomed the showing of the film at the regular performance.

Where burlesque shows are not available, there are always the dancing teachers to fall back upon, most of whom will give all the aid required in return for a credit line on the program. In some ways the use of local chorus girls would probably be an even better business bringer.

Not in Confliction.

John D. Steffano, of the Queen, a sister house, hit upon another angle to the girl stuff in a fashion show preceding "The Beauty Market," and this idea can be worked even in the small towns. "The Beauty Market" is a society play and he planned a fashion show to give the spectator an idea of how a day in the life of a society girl works out.

He hooked up with a department store making a specialty of women's wear and arranged for the use of ten models and what they needed in the way of clothes, showing a series of ten tableaus depicting the day of a society belle, under the title of "Milady's Boudoir." Starting with rising time, he took her through the day to bed time, and the pajama and nightie poses of the two ends of the day brought the most applause from men and women alike.

This had an even better publicity angle, for the store used a part of its regular space to advertising its connection with the theatre and urged its readers to see the newest styles. It also gave window room to stills and portraits of Miss MacDonald, and in every way supplemented the efforts of the house. This prologue was put on at both the afternoon and evening showings and it drew men and women alike. Any fashion show is apt to draw attention, but this show has a particular aptness because of the nature of the picture, and each helped the other. The poses were carefully arranged and the costumes were the best the store had in stock.

Both managers capitalized a local demand, and both increased the house takings at small risk. And don't think that it is only the men who go. The women like these attractions just as much as the men if they are clean and the house is of a proper sort.

Under advertise and you are disappointed. Over boom and your patrons are dissatisfied. Steer the middle course and cut out superlatives.

Persistent Evangelist Broke 28 Weeks Season

TWENTY-EIGHT weeks in one house, with one star and only one change of bill, is another record to talk about, and only an evangelist, who had a prior right to bookings, brought the run of the second play to a close at the end of the ninth week. Mary Pickford was the star, "Daddy Long Legs" and "The Hoodlum" were the attractions, the Tremont Temple, Boston, was the house, and Nathan H. Gordon, owner of the First National franchise for New England, was the wonder-worker.

Tremont Temple is a structure owned by the Baptist Church. It is a little off the theatre district, but accessible. Mr. Gordon took the first Pickford picture in for a run and for nineteen weeks he enjoyed an unbroken success.

Then he announced that he would follow with "The Hoodlum" and all of the "wise" men threw up their hands. He had gotten away with it once, they argued, but he was tempting fate to try and repeat with the same star. Mr. Gordon just smiled and started in, advertising with about two fives on Sunday and smaller spaces through the week. Things were going strong when trouble loomed in the shape of an evangelist who had a prior contract for a revival season. Mr. Gordon had bought off some other contracts, but the preacher stood firm, and with a sigh Mr. Gordon wrote his last advertisement, which read, "Ninth and positively last week." He had run more than three months, but he knew he could have bettered that record and he was not satisfied.

Put your theatre on Main Street, no matter where it is located.—M. D. Selph.

Projection Department

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Projectionist Interested in Chickens

LEO SMELTZER, old-timer in the projection game, still shoots pictures at the screen of the Kearney Theatre, San Francisco, but between shows he runs "Smeltzer's Oak Acres Rabbit and Poultry Farm" at Palo Alto, thirty miles south from San Francisco, which distance he negotiates daily in a Hudson Six Sedan in (whisper) forty-five minutes—quite well within the speed limit, as you may observe.

He expects to have five hundred bunnies by next summer and no one knows how many of the feather tribe.

Go to it, Old Boy. Success be with you! Pop Woods, by the way, has a young farm out that way too. Incidentally Woods used to let us hear from him quite occasionally, but of late years he makes a noise like a real boistrous oyster only not so loud.

One of the Best Bosses.

Concerning the Kearney brother Smeltzer says:

I have one of the best bosses alive. He wants results and does not throw fits over a little expense; also he does not rush the pictures. He does a good business.

I have two Powers Six B, with the "B" part removed, meaning the lamphouses and all the supporting frame for same. In lieu thereof we have Preddy Mazda lamp outfits, same being fastened to the machine tool table, with a distance of six inches from corrugated condenser to aperture—plenty of room once you get used to it.

Use 900-watt lamps, 30 v, 30 a, to capacity, on an eighty-foot throw, with a sixteen-foot picture—five-inch Gundlach objectives.

Getting Swell Picture.

Have my own make of non-halation screen, two-wing shutters from one wing of perforated metal as per attached sample, and take it from me I'm getting one swell picture.

Lamps last anywhere from twenty to 260 hours, but average about eighty, which fails of the 100-hour guarantee. Mine is the largest picture and greatest distance of projection of any Mazda proposition in this district.

Most of the Mazda men have not to exceed a twelve-foot picture at less than sixty feet.

Very interesting indeed but we would like friend Smeltzer's candid opinion as to whether or not he does not lose heavily in the finer picture detail through lack of brilliancy of illuminant. Beyond this we would not care to comment just now.

Kenmare, Ohio

Kenmare, Ohio, should write his street address so that it can be read. He does not need the address of a dealer selling a complete set of projectionists' tools. On page 238 of the handbook he will find a list of necessary tools, all of which may be purchased in the stores of his own city.

Important Notice

OWING to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Handbook Woke Him Up

W. Dales, Orange, Mass., orders lens charts and writes:

If the charts compare in value with the handbook they must be well worth double their price. I never did realize how very little I knew about projection until I received the handbook. One thing it did for me was to increase my screen brilliancy at least 25 per cent., without any increase in wattage consumed. In following the handbook I painted the projection room black inside and am now able to secure a sharper focus of the picture?

You Are Right.

You are right. No man can judge focus on a screen a hundred feet away with a glare of light on a light wall surrounding the observation port.

There is only one theatre here, but we nevertheless do all we can to give value received in return for our patron's money. My employer never hesitates when anything is needed. He just says: "Get it."

They pay me more than the union scale and I do my best to deserve just that sort of treatment. I did not ask for the above-the-scale part, so I consider the handbook the best four-dollar investment I ever made. (We take it from that that your employer increased your pay because of your increased ability to deliver high class service.—Ed.)

Can Always Improve.

I believe if a man is not too old or too wise to learn he can always improve his screen results.

Now please don't take this matter as an advertisement, but I want to thank you for what the handbook has done for me. I know it can do the same for others if they will come off their high shelf and invest four bucks.

Just sent my Power's Six B away for repairs after two years' faithful service, with an almost blank repair bill during that time.

The Spirit of Progress.

Don't know what you mean by "Don't take this letter for an advertisement." Evidently you intended that it should be printed.

Your determination to give the best there is in you is the spirit which makes for progress. Men who are dissatisfied with their job, but who expend all surplus energy in cursing the boss because he does not increase their pay, instead of using at least a part of it to fit themselves to be worth more pay, find advancement to rest at the summit of a wall which they cannot scale, except so far as the union supplies a ladder to mount part way up.

We grant the fact that there are employers so unintelligent that they will not reward ability by advancing pay.

That is a deplorable fact, but another fact overtops it, viz: that the man who wastes his time deploring and cursing that fact, instead of in studying and working to excel, simply renders it impossible to ever take advantage of the job which will advance him on merit. And there are many of them too—and they are increasing in number.

Yours is the right system, brother Hales. More power to you.

Embryo Projectionist

V. J. Votolato, Thornton, Long Island, orders handbook and lens charts and writes, as follows:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Pardon the form of address, but I feel I really know you, having followed your friendly advice and your various articles so long. For the past five months I've had a handbook from the public library, and as they only allow a book to be kept a month, I have made monthly pilgrimages to have it "renewed."

Became tired of that finally and here is the price. Have read the handbook through about six times, but always feel that in reading it again I may learn something more.

We run a twice-a-week show here and Splicer Closed.

I'm supposed to be the projectionist. I don't call myself an "operator," because I am willing, ready and anxious to learn. The man who is content to be classed as the mere operator of a machine has little ambition to advance. Am I right? (You are.—Ed.)

House Is Forty By Fifty.

Our little house is forty feet wide by fifty long. Have a Simplex, which has worked perfectly ever since we purchased it.

Am using .75-inch carbons, with 60 amperes at arc—A C, of course. Is this right? (Think you will do better with ⅝ inch. Get the Special A C White Light or the Alterno carbons. Both made for A C and both good.—Ed.)

Find that I get better results with jack-knife set. Maybe I'm wrong, but I don't think so.

Well, friend Votolato, you will get a higher c p with the jack-knife set, but if you get steady, even illumination you certainly are a stem-winding wonder—that is if you use the full jack-knife.

On Personal Application Only

The editor receives many communications similar to the following, which comes from Nova Scotia.

Once and for all let it be clearly understood that it is a waste of energy to go about things in that way. This friend asks for addresses of companies or unions.

I could supply them. But of what avail? He would write and, in all human probability receive no answer.

If any one did answer it would be to tell him what he might have known, that positions may only be had on personal application.

In this case the only thing to do is come on over here and go after a job in the same way every one else does. The union will not help you, Nova Scotia, unless it is actually in need of men to fill positions, which is not very often the case.

Must Do as Others Do.

You do exactly what every one else does, viz: get a position first, by your own efforts, after which you may see about joining the union, with the proviso that you are not eligible to membership until you have resided within the jurisdiction of the union for six months. Would be glad to help every deserving brother, but—. The correspondent writes:

Would like to introduce myself to the moving picture companies. Have had wide experience in projection, using all projectors (which would mean the Power's, Simplex, Baird, Master Machine, Edison and Motiograph in this country.—Ed.), and have knowledge of drawing and sketching. Am now employed in one of the largest theatres in ———, but would like to make a change.

Could you inform me where I could reach some company or give me the address of some projectionists' union in the United States? Can supply references.

An Excellent Film Splicer

The General Machine Company, New York City, has placed in our hands for examination and practical test a film splicer which seems admirably adapted to use in projection rooms of theatres. The little device, which we have tested and had tested by others, is extremely simple and, when used properly, makes a perfect splice, with perfect joint and perfect alignment of the sprocket holes and film sides.

Great damage is done by ill-made splices, the product of hand work in projection rooms. It is possible, but extremely difficult, to make a splice by hand and get perfect alignment of film sides and sprocket holes and secure a perfect weld clear across the splice. It is, in fact, seldom done. By means of this splicer all these things are quite possible, and that, too, without sacrifice of speed. But, best of all, the price is low. This places it well within the reach of all theatres and I strongly advise its purchase and use.

From Missouri

From the Linwood Theatre, Tarkio, Mo., comes the following letter, which its writer apparently forgot to sign:

In response to your invitation to attend an experience meeting on the Boylan Even Tension Reel, we have been using same for six months and find them even more than satisfactory.

On one machine we locked the tension device tight; on the other we allowed it to remain the same as for use with ordinary reel. They work equally well both ways.

The tension at one time became too strong. This we rectified by putting just one drop of oil on the tension spindle. From our experience, we should say that every exhibitor should use the Boylan unless he has already found some other infallible take-up.

House Equipment.

You might be interested in the equipment of our house, especially in consideration of the fact that Tarkio is a town of but two thousand people. But mighty good people are they—appreciative and willing to pay the bill. On a board over the walk we mount banners made of paper. A week's supply is put up at one time.

Each night, the outer one is torn off, leaving those for the next program on display. We use two large window displays, painted on compo board. On these we advertise the larger programs for a week in advance. They are lighted with globes concealed behind the dater strips.

An ample lobby lies directly behind the outer doors. Therein we have more space for the pushing of coming attractions; and, being enclosed, patrons linger there to sweeten their anticipations of feasts to come.

To make the lobby yet more inviting, we use amber globes in the cold seasons as being suggestive of warmth. In the summer we flood the lobby with green light to suggest the opposite. Beside the advertising layout at the house, we have placed in the prominent parts of the town two twenty-four sheets, two three sheets, one six sheet and numerous one sheet boards, each so situated that they are lighted by street lights and consequently work as long as people are out of bed.

We also have quarter sheet frames with removable backs in the hotel lobby, at all soda fountains and barber shops.

Projection Room Outfit.

That our projection room would meet with your approval I have no doubt. It is eight by twelve feet. Three twelve by sixteen inch observation ports, all glassed. Projection ports are four inches in diameter.

Forced ventilation with a sixteen inch exhaust fan. Electric rewind geared to eight minutes to a two thousand foot reel. Baird machines, one a shaft ratchet, drive; the other belt. (Why did they ever adopt the belt drive when they had so reliable a drive as the shaft?) A Tallberg generator supplies the arc current, and complete control board is placed directly in front of the two machines and is kept lighted.

Main switch board contains forty switches ranging from 10 to 200 amperes.

All lighting systems on dimmers—there is not a light in the auditoriuh that comes on or goes off with a bang.

And Finally.

And finally, one of the best things we have in the house. A buzzer system with a button at the organ, a button in the office, one at the doorman's position and one for the ticket seller—and a person on duty near every button who can see the screen at all times.

One buzz means: "Something wrong with the picture—look at the screen and hurry up about it." We never have poor light long; we never have misframes long; we never have a sleepy projectionist long, for there are five people to wake him up every time he tries to take a cat nap. And believe me, it works.

In conjunction with the buzzers, we have a telephone for each of the above parties, and each has his own signal to answer the phone.

Novelties in Lighting.

We have several other novelties in lighting effects which may be worth mentioning.

A color wheel is placed on the wall in front of the projectors so that its several holes coincide with those of the projection ports. Should a bit of film need coloring to make it more effective, such as night or fire scenes, the projectionist has but to whirl this wheel until aperture containing the desired color covers the projection port, and the trick is done; also, during the opening of the show and the display of advertising slides, we keep our screen flooded with a secondary light.

By putting green lights in the fly and red lights in the foots, we have a screen that is deep green at the top, deep red at the bottom and the two blend into each other in the middle. It makes one of the most fetching effects that I have ever seen.

As the title of the first offering comes on the screen, this light is dimmed off and comes on again at the end of the program, so that our screen never appears dead or vacant.

Aside from the Fact.

Aside from the fact that we run a matinee each day, during which a musical setting is lined up on the large photoplayer, and during which the projectionist marks by dropping bits of paper into the take-up reels, all misframes and bad places to be removed before the evening performance, and also gets his melding cues, and that we give special productions sympathetic stage settings and our presentations as many novelties as good taste will permit, we have nothing more to say about ourselves. But we are succeeding and we think we know the reason why.

Golly yes, man. Managers such as you DO succeed, and there is no secret about the why.

The only criticism I could make is that your projectionist should never need "waking up" or a signal to frame.

However, the signal system is good, nevertheless, but there is a special signal system, just perfected by Mr. Robin, of this city, which comes as near being perfect as anything of its sort well could be.

The mere throw of a lever moves a corresponding indicator in the projection room and as many other places as one desires to install the instruments.

For instance, the picture does not seem to be quite sharp in focus. One moves the indicator to "Sharpen Focus," whereupon every indicator in the house moves to that same thing and buzzers ring.

As I remember it, there are at least six or eight possible indications. You spoke of a photograph of front, but it was not in evidence.

Precision Company Pulls a Winner

Don't lett'um tell you nothing good but beans comes from Boston—not any more. We have ample evidence that it is untrue, false and a canard against that fair city of angle worm streets.

For one William Collinder Francke, better known as William C. Francke, still better known as Billie Francke, who now holds down an honest-to-gosh varnished desk in a sure-enough private office, with a flaxen-haired stenog to do his writeatorial bidding, hails from there.

The Precision Company, always good at making discoveries, like the witch doctors of old, smelled him out, reached into Boston with a tempting dollar bait, hooked their fish and yanked him into New York, where he is making good at fan-the-air speed.

We are not quite sure as to Billie's center name. The initial is "C," hence, from the good things which seem to leak from him, we assume it to be "Collinder."

Yea, verily, friend William is making good, and will, we hope and believe, leave a permanent mark well up in his field of the industry before he shall finally retire to live on the interest of his hard won wealth.

Pioneer Handling Sheldon Lewis Film Also Series of Marie Doro Features

ONE of the big features of the Pioneer list of attractions for the first half of the coming year will be an elaborate production of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." A large company is now being assembled by Charles J. Hayden, who will have charge of the direction of the picture.

The version, which has been prepared by Mr. Hayden, varies in several respects from the novel as written by Robert Louis Stevenson, making the story a combination of the psychological and dramatic rather than the uncanny and melodramatic.

Sheldon Lewis, who will appear in the title roles, is making a careful study of the characters of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde as played by the late Richard Mansfield, and in many respects his impersonation of the dual role will follow that of the great tragedian's conception of the part.

Several studios in the vicinity of New York are under consideration, and as soon as the preliminary arrangements are completed work will be started.

Marie Doro is the latest star to be added to the Pioneer banner, having contracted to appear in several productions for the Pioneer Film Corporation. James McKay, who has been directing Miss Doro for some time past, will be in charge of the forthcoming productions.

The first picture is already under way, but no definite title has been decided upon. The story deals with the power of hereditary influences, and probably will be in six parts.

Godfrey Tearle will play opposite to Miss Doro.

Pioneer also has options on several of the most noteworthy independent productions now nearing completion.

Sol Lesser to Make Coast His Distributing Center

SOL LESSER, well known as a state rights buyer, and more recently as a distributor as well, and who recently entered the production field with films in which Annette Kellerman and George Beban will be respectively starred, as well as those with a third star, whose name has not yet been announced, announces he is experimenting with a new policy.

"I have often figured why the picture output should be marketed in New York instead of the place where it is produced, and immediately made up my mind to have all my producing and releasing done on the Pacific Coast," says Mr. Lesser.

Mr. Lesser is also building a laboratory on the Coast, and is in the market for productions either on a percentage basis or on a flat price for negatives for world rights. His brother, Irving Lesser, is now in New York, where he will keep in touch with the European market, and will also purchase productions.

Gale Furnishes Twenty-fourth Comedy.

Gale Henry's last two-reeler of fun on her contract with Bulls Eye, which concern has been releasing her pictures, is titled "Heir-Looms" and will be shipped to New York this week. Miss Henry personally directed the cutting and sub-titling of the picture.

Lucille Lee Stewart Second Olive Tell Feature

LUCILLE LEE STEWART has been engaged by B. A. Rolfe to play a leading role in support of Olive Tell in his second production for the Jans Pictures, Inc., "Nothing a Year," an adaptation of the Charles Belmont Davis novel. The selection of Miss Stewart follows out the announcement of the producers of making their features box office attractions for the exhibitors all over the country.

Lucille Lee Stewart began her theatrical career when quite young, appearing on the legitimate stage and also in vaudeville. During the early days of the screen Miss Stewart became associated with the old Biograph and then with Vitagraph productions, appearing in "The Destroyers," "The Conflict," "His Wife's Good Name," and "The Ninety and Nine," and in "Five Thousand an Hour" and "Our Mrs. McChesney" for the Metro Company. In "Nothing a Year" Miss Stewart will present a difficult and very important role.

Only Half a Foot to Stand on.

Violet MacMillan, appearing in Supreme's "The Mystery Mind," and the six and a half inch slippers won by her at the Futurist Ball.

Evelyn Brent Ill.

Evelyn Brent, who has been appearing opposite Edgar Jones in the series of Northwood two-reel dramas being made by Edgar Jones Productions, Inc., to be distributed by Arrow Film Corporation, is confined to her bed with a severe cold and is threatened with pneumonia. As a consequence, the specialist in attendance upon her holds no hope for her being able to return to the cast for some time, and it will be necessary for Mr. Jones to appoint some one else in her place.

Miss Brent appeared in the first eight of the Northwood dramas, and contracted her illness during the filming of snow and ice scenes out on location among the Maine lumber camps, where the thermometer was hovering around zero.

"Star Series" Plan for Releasing Jans Features

THE first of the series of six features, "Love Without Question," starring Olive Tell, produced by Jans Pictures, Inc., will be ready the latter part of February.

Fast nearing completion under the personal direction of B. A. Rolfe, "Love Without Question" is said to contain big punches, many dramatic scenes, and staged in unusual sets and locations. The series is to be released on the state rights basis under the "star series" plan, the exhibitor contracting to book all six.

Jans Believes in Method.

All of the Jans pictures will be booked and contracted for in this manner, as Herman F. Jans, president of the Jans Pictures, Inc., and himself an exchange man, believes this method of booking is the kind that offers the theatre manager the best opportunities.

Upper New York Sold for Argus Film.

Messrs. L. Cohen and J. Perl, owners of Hi-Art Productions, with offices at 729 Seventh avenue, have bought the upstate New York rights to Robert McLaughlin's state rights feature, "The House Without Children," from Robert W. Priest, of the Film Market.

"Lost Battalion" Going Big.

"The Lost Battalion," released on the state right market by W. H. Productions Co., is reported to be proving a big box office success. In New York state it is booked solid to April 15.

Arrow Film Lists Territory Sold On Hank Mann Two Reel Comedies

THE Hank Mann two-reel comedies being released by the Arrow Film Corporation are being rapidly bought by state rights buyers. The first release is "Broken Bubbles" and is scheduled for early in February. One of these two-reel Hank Mann Comedies will be released every other week and there will be twenty-six in the series.

Five Sprightly Comedies Are Listed by Christie

A NEW mark for wholesome entertainment is established in the recent one-reel Christie Comedies. The fun is fast and clean, and the stories highly amusing. Three of the new single-reelers are the directorial work of William Beaudine. They are "Kids and Kidlets," "Fair But False" and "Watch Your Step—Mother." The list includes also a single-reeler by Al Christie, "Should Husbands Dance?" and "Nearly Newlyweds," by John McDermott.

"Kids and Kidlets" features Helen Darling and Jimmie Harrison and has to do with a little girl who traded her doll for a colored baby and then traded her baby sister for the doll. In "Fair, But False," Bobby Vernon and Florence Gilbert play the leading roles. Bobby's chief aim being to prevent his rivals from making love to Florence by making them believe, through various tricks, that her hair and other necessities of life were false, thereby almost losing her himself. "Watch Your Step—Mother" is another featuring Bobby Vernon, this time with Vera Steadman in the opposite role. Vera is the daughter of Bobby's new stepmother, whom he mistakes for that person, with some funny complications as a result.

A non-dancing husband, whose lack of knowledge of that art limited his wife's social activities and a determination to take secret lessons from his wife's chum is the theme of "Should Husbands Dance." Dorothy Devore and Jimmie Harrison also are featured in "Nearly Newlyweds," another matrimonial tangle with some very amusing complications.

"Lost City" Serial Sales Reported by the Warners

WORD comes from Warner Bros., who control the distribution rights of Selig's animal serial, "The Lost City," that Joe Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corp., has secured the rights for Illinois and Indiana.

Mr. Friedman stated that he sent a print to Chicago, and has received word from his representative that after a trade showing he signed up many first-run theatres that have never before offered a serial, and also that he has received many requests for bookings.

In addition to this territory, the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., has seven states in the South, while the Standard Film Service Co., of Cleveland, has Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky. The Hatch Film Company has seven Eastern states, and the Arrow Film Corporation, of Boston, controls the New England distribution rights, which make twenty-six states that have already been disposed of.

The Canadian rights were sold to Mr. Charles Stephenson, of Toronto.

Negotiations are now going on for the disposal of many Western states, and the indications are that the entire country will be disposed of before the picture is released, which is claimed to be a record for serials.

Tower Issues a Unique Press Book on "Tillie"

THE press and publicity book which is now being prepared for "Tillie's Punctured Romance," by Tower Film Corporation, who will release this production on the state rights market, contains a collection of live press matter for the local newspapers; short synopses, stories and catch phrases; one, two and three column ad cuts; reproductions of the ones, threes, sixes and twenty-four sheet posters, the hand-painted 30 by 40 and 40 by 60 lobby displays, the 8 by 10, 11 by 14 and 22 by 28 sepia lobby photographs, and complete plans for exploitation to suit the various sized theatres and localities. In addition, the exploitation service department of the Tower Film Corporation announce they will furnish any special suggestions and lay out any exploitation plans to suit local conditions upon their request. Charlie Chaplin, Marie Dressler, Mabel Normand, Chester Conklin and Mack Swain are all featured in this photoplay

More Sales on Burston Serials.

Burston Films report great interest among state rights buyers in the latest King Baggot serial, and credit the admirers of this novelty, "The Hawk's Trail." The last episode of the Baggot serial reaches Burston's New York headquarters this week. Among recent sales is recorded that of the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware and Virgania to the Reliance Film Co., of Washington, D. C. The K. & R. Film Co. of Atlanta, Ga., have just bought Burston's "The Mystery of 13" for Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee.

Chicago House Books Dooley Film.

The Johnny Dooley Comedies will make their appearance in Chicago at the State Lake Theatre. Through arrangements made with Matthias Radin, president of Tyrad Pictures, during his recent stop in that city, the management of this theatre has contracted for the entire series of twelve subjects to be released during the year at regular monthly intervals. Johnny Dooley will probably make a personal appearance at the premiere of the first release of "Some Mind Reader."

Heavy Bookings Reported on "$1,000,000 Reward"

ENTHUSIASTIC reports of business done by the serial "$1,000,000 Reward," starring Lillian Walker, are reaching the offices of Grossman Pictures from exchanges. In territories where the serial has opened, reports indicate that house records were broken, while from those sections of the country where the serial has not yet opened, the reports are that very heavy bookings are being obtained.

Aywon Film Corporation, controlling Greater New York, advises that bookings have been made on a large scale and that the serial, now being shown, is meeting with great popularity. A similar report comes from Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Film Corporation, controlling New England.

In Illinois and Indiana, booked by Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago, similar results were obtained. The opening in Canada, booked by Regal Films, Ltd., was a big success both in Toronto and Montreal.

A large portion of foreign territory has already been disposed of by Export and Import Film Corporation, foreign distributors, while negotiations are under way for the open territory.

Francis McDonald to Star in National Film Feature

FRANCIS MCDONALD, who stepped into stardom through his work with Henry Walthall in "The Confession," with the National Film Corporation of America, and who was one of the stars in the National's last 1919 production, "Hearts and Masks," will be the central figure in the first of the National's "America First" series of photoplay features, adapted from magazine stories and novelettes.

McDonald is now engaged with William Seiter in producing "The Kentucky Colonel" for the National. He will begin on the new series as soon as that production is concluded, which will be about February 20.

Arrow Gets Twelve "Tex" Features.

Since publication of article appearing on page 592 of our issue of January 24, regarding the Capital Film Company securing rights to William Steiner's twelve five-reel detective pictures entitled "Tex, Elucidator of Mysteries," we have been advised by Mr. Steiner that the negotiations with that company were not successfully concluded, and that the world rights to this series of pictures have been secured by the Arrow Film Corporation.

Film Rights for World's Championship Wrestling Match Secured by Pioneer

EXCLUSIVE motion picture rights for an unusually big sporting event and one that is attracting widespread attention have been secured by the Pioneer Film Corporation. This is the wrestling match to be held at Madison Square Garden, Friday, January 30, between Joe Stecher and Earl Caddock for the world's championship belt.

At a luncheon on Friday the twenty-third, given to the challenger, Earl Caddock, by Jack Curley, at the Hotel Claridge, which was attended by the sport writers of the big New York newspapers and representative of the motion picture trade press, Morris Rose, president of Pioneer, offered $30,000 for the picture rights.

Contracts were signed later in the day, and arrangements completed for taking the pictures. A special staff of photographers under Jack Cohn will have charge of the work, and it is expected that the pictures will be ready for showing six hours after the contest.

Pioneer will handle the pictures through its offices in New York, Buffalo, Cleveland and Detroit. Other territories will be handled on state rights and by means of direct bookings. This match is receiving a great deal of publicity, newspapers in all parts of the country devoting much space in their sporting columns.

Pioneer Will Film 'Em

Jack Sherrill Jumps from Airplane in Serial Scene

WHAT is promised to be an unusually sensational aviation feat will be shown in one of the episodes of "The Invisible Ray," the fifteen episode serial produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, in which Ruth Clifford and Jack Sherrill are co-starring.

The scenario calls for the hero, impersonated by Jack Sherrill, to jump from a speeding aeroplane and land in the water, and then to swim to a boat and rescue the heroine.

The company went to Jacksonville, Fla., to "shoot" this particular scene because the St. John's River furnished excellent atmosphere. Sherrill climbed in to the plane which was operated by an expert pilot who had been in government service, and they headed off toward the St. John River. As soon as the plane appeared the cameras began clicking and at a signal the pilot guided his machine to a lower level. Sherrill climbed out on the wing and when at a point about fifty feet up, and almost directly over the little river craft he leaped from the speeding plane into the river. The whole scene went off without a hitch and when projected on the screen should give a real thrill.

Kremer Back in New York After Completing Deals

VICTOR KREMER, president of Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., returned to New York this week, after a trip throughout the exchange centers of the United States and Canada, during which he disposed of many territories. The latest buyer is Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Company, Boston, who has purchased for New England "A Burlesque on Carmen," "The Champion," "The Jitney Elopement," "Work" and "By the Sea," and intends giving these Chaplins a wide exploitation campaign before the release of the first picture, which will be "Carmen." He will present the short length subjects as a series.

Mr. Kremer also reports the sale of the five Chaplins for Michigan to the Independent Masterfilms, Inc., of Detroit, and Ohio to Essenel Productions, De Luxe, of Cleveland, for the four short length Chaplins.

Mr. Kremer announces he has acquired "Skinner's Dress Suit," starring Bryant Washburn. An entirely new edition of advertising supplies will be issued for this picture and the marketing of same on state right basis will begin shortly.

Mr. Kremer has found the Chaplin reissues which he controls meeting with extraordinary success in the various territories. "A Burlesque on Carmen" has been playing to big audiences in Chicago at the Rialto Theatre, while elaborate preparations are being made in Detroit to present "Carmen" at one of the leading theatres in conjunction with a chorus of dancing girls and several specialties. Mr. Kremer will leave for another trip to the various exchanges within the next two weeks.

Pennsylvania Likes "Lord Helpus."

The Standard Film Exchange of Pittsburgh, Pa., who control the rights in that territory to "Lord Helpus," the one-reel Charlie Chaplin special being released now on the state rights market by Tower Film Corporation, and formerly entitled "Cruel, Cruel Love," report that this special single reeler is proving a success in that territory.

Song for "The Sacred Flame."

In addition to the other exhibitors' aids prepared to help in the exploitation of "The Sacred Flame," starring Emily Stevens, the Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., announce a song of the same title has been written by Will R. Haskins, and is being published by a prominent New York music house.

E. S. Manheimer Reports Many Sales On First Schomer-Ross Production

IF the state right territories continue to sell in the coming weeks as they have been selling on 'The Sacred Flame,' starring Emily Stevens, in the weeks just past, we won't have much to offer in the way of U. S. or Canadian rights. So far we have disposed of northern New Jersey and the state of New York, also southern New Jersey, eastern Pennsylvania, Virginia, District of Columbia, with a great many western territories now being bid for. Since we started display advertising in trade papers we have been the recipient of letters from every nook and corner of the country," says E. S. Manheimer.

"I don't know of any other line of business that is so thoroughly covered by its trade papers as the film industry and I am positive that no business men follow their trade publications with such zeal as do trade paper men, and I feel that it is my privilege to compliment the film trade publications for their circulation and power in the industry. We have recently secured letters of inquiry from foreign parts on 'The Sacred Flame,' proving that our publications are not entirely confined to the States and Canada."

In speaking of the production values of "The Sacred Flame," Abraham S. Schomer, author and director, says: "We produced 'The Sacred Flame' on a scale that matches up with any of the best productions of the year, while the main theme is of a character that enables exhibitors to play this production for a run instead of one or two days. The public is demanding better plays, better stars, better stories, stories that grip the heart and that hold more than a passing fancy in the way of entertainment. People love to be made to think while they are being entertained. That I claim," says Mr. Schomer, "is one of the biggest points in the success of 'The Sacred Flame.' We have provided one of the finest human interest vehicles brought to the screen for years, with every foot fraught with meaning and pleasure to those who behold this picture."

Cassinelli Film Is "The Hidden Light."

The title of the new Schomer-Ross feature in which Dolores Cassinelli will be starred is "The Hidden Light." However, no information has been furnished by Mr. Schomer, the producer and author, as to its theme. It is said to be a story which will require elaborate sets, big scenes and beautiful locations, as well as gorgeous costumes, and will be a spectacular production, filled with thrills and exciting situations. Ben Taggart, formerly with the stage production "Forbidden," is the leading man.

Violet Clark Writing Continuity for Jans

VIOLET TAGGART CLARK has begun work on the continuity for "Nothing a Year," by Charles Belmont Davis, which will be used to star Olive Tell in her second production for the Jans Pictures, Inc.

Miss Clark has many successful adaptations to her credit, including the continuity for "Love Without Question," Miss Tell's first picture.

Inasmuch as the story, "Nothing a Year" carries a leading character that is distinctly different, and owing to the individual character of the story, it was felt expedient to allow Miss Clark full sway in the preparation of the scenario. It is said that she has supplied real humor, pathos and general appeal in the story of "Love Without Question" that will make it stand out among film attractions.

Grossman Finishes Second Marguerite Marsh Feature

HARRY GROSSMAN announces that the feature "Face to Face" has just been completed at the studio of Grossman Pictures, Inc., at Ithaca. This is the second of a series of eight pictures being made by the company with Marguerite Marsh as the star. Coit Albertson is seen as the leading man in support of Miss Marsh.

The first picture of the series, "Wits vs. Wits," was sold to Hallmark Pictures, and by them sold to the British American Pictures Finance Corporation for American and Canadian rights.

The entire series of eight pictures will be devoted to detective stories that are said to be out of the ordinary in theme and action. Each picture will be made under the personal supervision of Mr. Grossman.

Big Exploitation Planned for Hall Room Boys Films

JACK AND HARRY COHN announce their intention of inaugurating extensive advertising and publicity campaigns throughout the United States in regional and national motion picture trade papers for the further exploitation of the 1920 series of Hall Room Boys Comedies. There have been ten releases, which have met with great success. The publicity campaigns will be operated in conjunction with the famous cartoon, "The Hall Room Boys," by H. A. MacGill, in the newspapers.

"Many persons have the idea that these comedies are animated cartoons," said Mr. Cohn. "They are not that in any sense. They bring to life the wholly mirthful and embarrassing predicaments that Percy and Ferdie Hall Room get through their mania for posing as millionaires, sportsmen, and everything else that lies beyond the powers of ribbon clerks to be. The roles of Percy and Ferdie are portrayed by two of the cleverest screen and stage entertainers it was possible to obtain."

'Ere's the 'Awk.

King Baggot in one of many roles in his Burston serial, "The Hawk's Trail."

Clever Footage in "Alma" Film.

"Alma, Where Do You Live?" has among its novelties a clever method of showing the recent war. The date of our entrance into the conflict is flashed on the screen, followed by snappy footage of bursting bombs and livid fight-action. Then with 1919 thrown on the sheet, an Angel of Peace in the person of Anna Le Boos, who liberates two white doves, is shown, and the story's action goes on. The "Alma" attraction is said to have shown a remarkable response in the way of territorial offers since its recent campaign of advertising was invogued.

Many Big Animal Scenes in "Return of Tarzan"

NUMA PICTURES CORPORATION, who are completing "The Return of Tarzan," have kept in mind the jungle atmosphere of the "Tarzan" stories.

The cast, headed by Gene Pollar and Karla Schramm, is augmented by such animal actors as the L.-K. lions, including three cubs who make their screen debut, the famous monkey Joe Martin, the big elephant Charley, fifty white horses, two camels, several apes and gorillas, and five determined old mules.

Joe Martin is seen in many dramatic and humorous scenes with Tarzan, while Charley not only has big footage in the story, but has played an important role in the producing of the feature.

"The Return of Tarzan" has a great variety of locales. The early portions transpire aboard an ocean liner. Next come Parisian adventures. Then the Algerian desert and last the return to the jungle.

Ivy Ward Injects Realism.

Little Ivy Ward, one of the screen stars engaged especially for an episode in Reeve and Grey's Supreme serial, "The Mystery Mind," recently proved J. Robert Pauline's claim that suggestion is a powerful influence when dealing with a child.

Ivy plays an emotional role in the prologue, and, under the direction of Fred W. Sittenbaum, the child became convinced that the scene was real and sobbed herself into a state bordering on hysteria.

Mr. Sittenbaum, who had tried Pauline's methods to convince his cast what they "can do" had not acquired sufficient knowledge of hypnotic suggestion to soothe the child, so Pauline had to step in. His quiet manner and softly murmured suggestions quickly diverted Ivy's mind into its normally happy mood.

Chicago News Letter

Chicagoans Believe Goldwyn Now Has Interest in the Ascher Circuit

A PERSISTENT rumor has been going the rounds in Chicago film circles for the past two weeks that Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has acquired one-half interest in all the Ascher Brothers theatres, including, in addition to the Chicago circuit, all the large modern picture theatres now being constructed by the Ascher Brothers in several large cities, in the central Middle West. The persistence of the rumor has been so marked that the majority of Chicagoans in the trade now believe that the deal has been made, although nothing definite has been issued by either party believed to be concerned in the transaction.

If made the deal will include the Roosevelt, a great, modern picture theatre, seating 2,500 persons, and costing $1,850,000, which will be built by Ascher Brothers on the west side of north State street, between Washington and Randolph streets, opposite the palatial store of Marshall Field & Co., and one of the most prominent locations within the "Loop" district.

Work in demolishing the building now occupying the site of the Roosevelt will begin May 1, this year, and the new structure will be devoted wholly to the theatre which, without doubt, will rank high among the great picture theatres of America for chaste architectural beauty, as the accompanying illustration will show.

Five Millions in New Houses.

But the Roosevelt is only one of the great enterprises in modern picture theatre building in which the Ascher Brothers are at present engaged. They have now well under way the following theatres, which, as will be noted, are not all confined to Chicago territory:

The Minneapolis Theatre, in Minneapolis, which will have the largest seating capacity of any house in the Northwest, costing $500,000; the Cincinnati Theatre, Cincinnati, seating 3,500 and costing $1,000,000; the West Englewood, at Sixty-third street and Marshfield avenue, seating 3,500, and costing $450,000; the Commercial Theatre, South Chicago, seating 3,000 and costing $350,000; the Forest Park Theatre, in Forest Park, a Chicago suburb, seating 3,000 and costing $300,000, and the Peoria Theatre, in Peoria, Ill., seating 2,500 and costing $300,000.

Eighteen Theatre Now Running.

Including the new theatre to be built on State street, the outlay on these modern houses will represent an investment of $4,750,000. Then there is to be considered the eighteen fine theatres on their present circuit in Chicago, which are all running to capacity and which will carry the total outlay to a figure somewhere between seven and eight million dollars.

The Ascher Brothers, however, are not interested only in the construction of great picture theatres. As exhibitors they have studied carefully the conditions existing in the producing and distributing departments of the moving picture business, and they have noted the great stride forward made in the quality of the moving pictures of today. As good business men they have learned that, with the greatly increased cost of making better pictures, the producers must charge higher rentals for their product and that the exhibitor, in order to meet the increased rentals and the increased salaries of employes, must ask his patrons to bear their share of the burden.

Business Holds Up Under Higher Prices.

September 1, last year, the Aschers increased the admission to all their Chicago houses from 22 cents to 25 cents. The former price included the two cents war tax and the latter includes the three cents war tax, so that the advance means only two cents for the box office on each ticket sold.

In conversation with General Manager L. P. Newhafer, of Ascher Brothers, some time ago, the writer learned that the increase in admissions had not diminished business in any of their eighteen houses. On the contrary, business had been increasing. He also referred to the fact that patrons had often expressed their astonishment, long before the raise took effect, that such excellent programs could be given for so little. He also stated that exhibitors fully realize that it is necessary to increase the prices of admission, in order to maintain the high standard of production demanded, and assured me that the presentations at all the Ascher houses had been raised to a higher plane. A strict rehearsal of appropriate accompanying music is given in advance at each house, for every change of program, and strict attention is paid to providing the necessary stage atmosphere for each picture.

Capital's New Executive Plans Increased Output

THE new year ushered in stirring times for the Capital Film Company, Inc., as it has been steadily forging ahead until it has now reached a secure place as a successful producing and distributing organization.

In keeping with the rapid growth of its business development there has been a new and important alignment of the executive heads of the corporation. At a recent meeting of the board of directors B. Herbert Milligan, of Chicago, was elected treasurer and executive head of the company and also a member of the board.

Mr. Milligan is a successful business man and president of a well known financial concern of Chicago. He has had previous acquaintance with the moving picture business, having taken over, in partnership with his brother, the well known Kalem studios. He brings to the Capital Film Company high efficiency as an organizer and the prestige and wisdom of an able business man.

Foreign Business Growing.

Mr. Milligan will apply his successful commercial principles to the rapidly expanding business of the Capital, not only in the financial end but also in extending its chain of exchanges in the United States and Canada. The demand for Capital's special features has become so insistent that Mr. Milligan intends increasing the producing force from four to six companies.

Mr. Milligan is giving special attention just now to the maintenance and extension of Capital's European business, which has grown so rapidly, in the United Kingdom especially, that immediate steps will be taken to meet the demand.

Like all successful business men, Mr. Milligan is an ardent believer in advertising of the right kind. He announces that he will support Capital's exchanges and selling agents with a strong, comprehensive publicity campaign, during which the merits of Capital's super-special features especially will be brought forward.

Sladdin to Publicize Goldwyn.

S. G. Sladdin, who is well known in the advertising and publicity film world, recently arrived in Chicago in the publicity interests of Goldwyn. He will have his office at the Chicago headquarters, with Manager I. Van Ronkel.

Mr. Sladdin was in Boston for the past four months, organizing the advertising, publicity and exploitation departments for Goldwyn, in all of the New England States. He expects to remain in Chicago for some time.

Pat Dowling on Tour of Christie Comedy Centers

PAT DOWLING, who has charge of publicity for Christie comedies, made a pleasant call at the Chicago office Monday, January 19. He was on his way from Los Angeles to New York, making a tour of all Christie exchanges, including Denver, Omaha, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Boston and New York.

From this point he went on to Canton, Ohio, where his wife and relatives live. He spent a few days there and stopped over at Cleveland on his way to the metropolis. All the cities mentioned will be visited by him before he returns to Los Angeles.

Mr. Dowling stated that Christie two-reel comedies are in great demand just now. His company makes one two-reel comedy a month and a one-reel comedy every week. Work is now being started on the first of a two-reel series, entitled "Bringing Up Father," which is being made for the International Film Company and to be released by Pathe as Pathe comedies. This series, twelve in number, will be made at the rate of one a month, and the first release will be made Monday, March 1.

Christies Strong in Chicago.

Mr. Dowling informed me that Christie comedies are going better in Chicago territory than in any other district in the country, although the demand for them is general. Four first run houses here played Christie comedies during the week of January 19; namely, the Randolph, Rose, Playhouse and Orpheum. J. L. Friedman, president of Celebrated Players, has all the rights to these comedies in ten Middle Western States.

First National handles the Christie comedies in New York City and state.

Mr. Dowling will return to Los Angeles about February 15.

Operators in Moir Houses Are Called Out on Strike

THE Rose and Alcazar theatres, on West Madison street, and the Boston Theatre, on Clark street, were closed at 6 o'clock Tuesday evening, January 20, when Thomas E. Maloy, business agent of Local 110, I. A. T. S. E., M. P. O., called out the operators. This action followed the refusal of William Hewins, secretary of Harry C. Moir, owner of the three houses, to increase the wages of the moving picture operator in the Terrace garden of the Morrison hotel, also owned by Mr. Moir.

Business Agent Maloy, in stating his side of the case, says Mr. Moir's secretary told him that they could do without moving pictures in the Terrace garden and that he could take the operator out. He replied that Mr. Moir would have to do without the operators in his three theatres also. The operators, therefore, were called out at the hour mentioned and the patrons of the theatres received their money back at the box offices.

Mr. Moir states that he had decided to dispense with moving pictures in the Terrace garden, but that Maloy told him he must hire two operators instead of one, at a cost of $60 a week each. Mr. Moir then said he would keep the three theatres closed rather than submit.

Business Agent Maloy, however, announces that Mr. Moir, on Wednesday night, agreed to employ two operators at the Terrace garden, six hours daily, and pay each of them $50 a week.

"In Old Kentucky" Given Fine Chicago Exploitation

IN OLD KENTUCKY," which made record breaking runs of two weeks at the Playhouse and the Randolph, this city, has had able exploitation work done by Leon Victor, exploitation representative for Louis B. Mayer; Walter L. Hill, in charge of publicity and exploitation for Chicago's First National exchange, and Ralph Kettering, publicity manager for the Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprises.

Excellent publicity in the daily papers, attractive window displays in State Street music houses—where the entire stock on hand of Anita Stewart's song, "In Old Kentucky," has been sold out; the striking and attractive front of the Randolph, etc., have served to catch the eyes of many thousands.

At the first night's showing in the Playhouse numerous members of the Chicago Southern Club were present on invitation, as were also many prominent persons in civic and club circles, and the house has been taxed daily to accommodate patrons. The Randolph, with its larger seating capacity, has also shown to fine business.

"Do the Dead Talk?" Has Week's Run at Ziegfeld

A UNIQUE six-reel feature produced by the Ebony Film Corporation of Chicago, "Do the Dead Talk?" was shown at the Ziegfeld during the week beginning Sunday, January 18, and created considerable interest. The Merit Film Exchange, owned by D. Padorr, is handling the picture in Chicago and tributary territory. Mr. Padorr reports quite an interest in the picture by several important Chicago exhibitors and that indications point to good business here.

It is the purpose of the Ebony Film Corporation to handle this picture on the state rights basis; but up to the present time no effort has been made to close any territory except that of Chicago and the subsidiary field.

The picture will be shown in New York within the coming two weeks.

Alice Howell Comedies Sell Well.

The Cropper Distributing Corporation, which controls the world rights to Alice Howell pictures, produced by the Emerald Motion Picture Company, of Chicago, reports that the rights for "Distilled Love" and "His Wooden Legacy," the first two of the twenty-six two-reel comedies contracted for, are selling rapidly.

D. J. Chatkin, secretary of the Consolidated Film Corporation of San Francisco and Los Angeles, has just closed a contract for the entire twenty-six pictures. He wrote a letter to Mr. Cropper congratulating him on the high standard of the first Alice Howell release, both in story and production.

Callahan Productions, Inc., Ready to Start Filming Bessie Love Pictures

THE Andrew J. Callahan Productions, Inc., the organization recently formed to make pictures with Bessie Love as a star, will begin work on its first production early in February. The Callahan company is formed of a group of Chicago capitalists, headed by James E. Callahan, prominent law-book publisher and father of Andrew J. Callahan, after whom the corporation is named.

The first film to be made with Miss Love as star will be the screen adaptation of "The Midlanders," a novel written by Charles Tinney Jackson. The book is said to have been selected for the initial release because of the appeal of the chief character, and for the fact that it tells a story happily suited for delineation by Miss Love.

Company Strong Financially.

Andrew J. Callahan, who will be in active management of the production, says that his company is well financed and able to procure the best facilities of every kind in the way of studio surroundings, directors, casts and stories; that each production will be elaborated and finished to the last detail, and that no time or money will be spared to make the Bessie Love pictures big and compelling in every way.

Joseph De Grasse and Ida May Park have been engaged as directors—not as chief and assistant—but as co-directors who will co-operate on every point in each production. Mr. Callahan says that the reason for having both a man and woman director is to instill a feminine as well as masculine viewpoint and atmosphere in the work, and that he thinks this plan will effect more pleasing and compelling results. A separate cast will be selected for each picture, and no set time for the completion of a picture will be made. Release arrangements are not yet ready to be announced.

Sol Lesser Appoints Manager.

E. A. Benjamin has been appointed general manager for the Los Angeles office of the All Star Feature Distributors, by Sol Lesser, head of that organization. In addition to his duties as manager of the Sol Lesser enterprises in Los Angeles, Mr. Benjamin will assume control of the feature buying end of the business, and will purchase productions of merit for the system of exchanges that Mr. Lesser is planning to establish throughout the country.

Stromberg Meets Press Bunch.

Thomas H. Ince introduced Hunt Stromberg, the new publicity director for the Ince corporation, to the representatives of the local press and the trade paper correspondents on the coast at a barbecue and cider party on January 21. The affair was staged at the Cider Mill, a unique restaurant and road house near the studio. Real barbecued beef formed the piece de resistance of an excellent meal, and cider, both hard and soft, was served for the liquid part of the refreshments.

Sells Interest in Pasadena Theatre.

W. H. Clune, who for the past ten years has had the active management of Clune's Pasadena Theatre, has sold his interest in the house to Henry C. Jensen, of Glendale and Los Angeles.

Jensen recently took a long time lease on the new theatre that is being erected on North Raymond avenue, Pasadena, in which he intends to present both road shows and spectacular films. Clune's Theatre, however, will be an exclusive motion picture house, and after the change of management on February 1, it will undergo extensive alterations and improvements.

New Company to Produce Comedies.

A new film company has been formed in Los Angeles with the intention of producing comedies with Allen Williams as the star, under the title of Klean-Kut Komedies. The company will be known as the Smiles Comedy Company, and with the acquirement of a director, the organization will be complete. Williams was featured as "Kewpie" in a number of two-reel comedies that were produced at the Horsley studios about a year ago.

A "Fur-River?" You Bet Not.

All we can say is this is John Bowers in Pauline Frederick's Goldwyn, "Roads of Destiny."

Boylan Joins British Firm.

Malcolm S. Boylan, a member of the Universal publicity staff, has resigned from that position to accept the post of exploitation director for G. B. Samuelson, Ltd., an English firm now producing at Universal City. Boylan's duties will take him to London and New York.

National to Increase Output.

By the middle of February seven producing units will be at work on film productions at the National Studios in Hollywood, according to an announcement made by Capt. Harry Rubey, president of National. Three of the units will produce comedies, one features, one serials, one short dramatic subjects, and the other, with Polly Moran as star, will make slapstick comedy.

Take Over Horsley Studio.

Warner Brothers, producers of the Helen Holmes serials and the Al St. John comedies, have taken over the David Horsley studio on Main and Washington, where they will move their producing forces to make future pictures. The Burston studio, former home of Warner Productions, proved to be inadequate in the matter of space. Helen Holmes has begun on her second serial for Warner Brothers, under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton; and Al St. John is making preparations to begin shooting on his fifth comedy for the Paramount program.

Art Directors Elects.

Alfred Alley, of Metro, is the new president of the Motion Picture Art Directors Association; R. E. Sibley, vice-president; Erdras C. Hartley, secretary; and Sidney Ullman, treasurer.

Schwab in Los Angeles.

D. M. Schwab, who represents the financial interests in the David Butler Film Company, arrived in town last week, and will launch the new company on its first production, which will be begun about February 15.

McGaffey with Mary Pickford.

Kenneth McGaffey has resigned from the Famous Players-Lasky editorial department and has become publicity director for the Mary Pickford company, to replace Mark Larkin, who has gone over to Mayflower.

A Grauman Theatre for Hollywood.

Sid Grauman, now operating two motion picture houses on Broadway, and one soon to be constructed at Sixth and Hill streets, is planning to erect still another amusement house, this time in Hollywood. Mr. Grauman has almost completed negotiations for a site on Hollywood Boulevard, upon which he intends to build a theatre on the Mission style of architecture to cost approximately $250,000.

MOVING PICTURES are going to play an important part in the Americanization program Secretary of the Interior Lane is undertaking—and it is verily believed that the screen can do more toward enlightening the foreigner than any other combination of factors at Secretary Lane's command. Lincoln's Birthday has been selected as the date the "drive" shall start. In every picture theatre throughout the country exhibitors will be asked to do all possible to feature Lincoln in preparing their programs.

Ralph Ince has just completed for Lewis J. Selznick the first of a series of "Americanization pictures" the screen will show to awaken the natives and instruct the foreigner in the advantages the United States offers under the republican form of government. "The Land of Opportunity" is the comprehensive title Ince has given to his photoplay, in which he will himself play the leading role.

Lieutenant Locklear, famous ace, will be exploited in a Universal photoplay entitled "The Great Air Robbery."

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, is going to law about a contract his firm has with Dorothy Phillips and her husband-director, Allan Holubar. Meanwhile Universal has ready for publication "The Gorgeous Canary" and "Ambition," two photoplays Miss Phillips will star in regardless of what the lawyers do with her future.

Henry Otto recently took a week off unwillingly. He has resumed direction of May Allison in "The Cheater," a job that calls forth this comment from Otto on the pending Dempsey-Carpentier bout:

"Don't tell me those French fighters are minus the wallop. I ran up against a guy named La Grippe and he put me in bed for ten days."

Orchestras playing while the actors "emote" for film presentations is the real thing around the Los Angeles studios. As for May Allison, of Metro's galaxy, she says: "Jazz? It matters not to me. I can take it or leave it."

Charles Ray is another popular screen star to strike out for himself. He lately organized, in Los Angeles, his own producing company, of which his father, Charles T. Ray, is president. About the first of March Ray will begin work on his first "own" picture, with Jerome Storm directing.

Annette Kellermann, star of several "mermaid" films, has been engaged by Sol Lesser to become star of a series of photoplays he will produce in California. It is understood that Miss Kellermann will not depend entirely upon her ability to swim like a seal and dive like a fish in the Lesser photoplays.

In at least one section of the country "In Old Kentucky," stage drama of nearly three decades, has been banished from the stage by its film version. Anita Stewart lately created "In Old Kentucky" for the screen, and its popularity is declared to have kept the traveling company playing the old stand-by out of Los Angeles, where the film was shown ahead of the proposed presentation upon the stage.

Now that Mary Pickford is her own boss she might be induced to reissue the first picture in which she ever appeared upon the screen—"The Violin Maker of Cremona," published June 7, 1909. She was then an ingenue of Biograph's stock company.

To prove that picture "fans" are adept at lip reading and well posted on "cuss words," news comes that Hugo Riesenfeld, director of the New York Rivoli and Rialto, carefully edits all films for "loose talk" by the actors. "If we have an aggravated case we don't run the picture," says Riesenfeld.

William Gillette's great stage successes are headed for the screen, "Secret Service" having already been done, with Robert Warwick the hero. Now comes the announcement that "Held by the Enemy" will be screened by Famous Players, with Lewis Stone playing the role of Gordon Hayne. Nothing has been heard of "Sherlock Holmes," the very greatest of the Gillette achievements.

"The Slim Princess" is another comparatively recent stage play going into pictures as fast as Goldwyn can finish the production. Elsie Janis starred in the George Ade musical comedy of that title—but she cannot be expected to appear in the screen version. She's a Selznick star of the screen.

"The Girl Patsy," staged several seasons ago, has been secured for screen revival by Metro. Viola Dana will be the star and she will begin work on "The Girl Patsy" as soon as she has finished with "Eliza Comes to Stay," which she is now screening in California.

When Mme. Hayakawa presented "The Breath of the Gods" in Brooklyn the audience was largely composed of sailors. The theatre where the film was shown was located near the Navy Yard, and investigation proved that the sign-painter had made a slight mistake in lettering. He had made it "The Breath of the Gobs," and the sailors were curious.

J. Robert Pauline, widely known in the entertainment field as an exponent of hypnotism, is about to become a film-star in a serial entitled "The Master Mind." Naturally hypnotism is involved in many of the "thrills."

"Alma, Where Do You Live?" originally exploited as a musical comedy by Adolph Philipp, its author and star, is being converted to the screen. Pretty girls and other attractive incidents of the stage version will be amplified in the photoplay.

Lucy Cotton is the star of "Blind Love," a photodrama recently completed by Oliver D. Baker, who directed both the screen and stage version of the play now presented in the movies by Gerald F. Bacon.

Marjorie Rambeau soon will come to the screen as a star in Pathe's presentation of "The Fortune Teller," a production directed by that skillful Frenchman, Albert Capellani. It's no relation to the opera.

Marcus Loew, proprietor of a chain of nearly a hundred theatres scattered throughout North America, has purchased controlling interests in Metro Pictures Corporation and will thus become producer of pictures for his own theatres—as well as others. Metro stars include Nazimova, Bert Lytell, Alice Lake, May Allison, Taylor Holmes and Viola Dana.

It is always the desire of movie magnates to first show their new productions in large cities, but in the case of "Huckleberry Finn" it was different. The "small town" verdict was wanted, and in Chillicothe, Ohio, and Riverside, Cal., the first test was made. In the Ohio town schools were dismissed in time for the matinee.

Mildred Harris, who is Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, will present on the screen "Polly of the Storm Country," a First National production promised to be "a sequence of biblical scenes in retrospection." The picture is made from a well-read novel.

The Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence, dressed in winter garb, will be an unusual feature in Eugene O'Brien's "A Fool and His Money." Usually these famous beauty spots of nature are visited or pictured in Summer, but Mr. O'Brien and his players went to Alexandria Bay in mid-winter to get the needed scenes for his forthcoming photoplay.

"Madame X," which was one of the real stage sensations of its period, when originally produced in America some years ago, will be screened by Goldwyn. The actress who will play the role originally assumed by Dorothy Donnelly is not named in the early announcements of the picture version.

What, indeed, is in a name? Fritzie Brunette, leading woman for Warren Kerrigan in Pathe's "Live Sparks," is one of the prettiest blondes in filmdom.

May Allison will play the role in "The Marriage of William Asche" which Grace George created on the stage when Metro brings the screen version of the Mrs. Humphry Ward novel into view.

"Shore Acres," made famous by the late James A. Herne, is being prepared for the screen by Metro. Alice Lake, a new and brilliant screen star, will be directed in the perennially popular drama by Rex Ingram.

Gladys Leslie has terminated her contract with Vitagraph and will become an independent star of the screen, appearing first in "A Child for Sale,' with Creighton Hale as her leading man.

Harry T. Morey's newest Vitagraph picture is titled "The Flaming Clue." Its plot should be easy to follow.

"Mr. and Mrs. Not Married" and "Some Honeymoon" are stories lately purchased by Thomas Ince for his young stars, Douglas MacLean and Doris May.

Mary MacLaren's newest Universal feature will be titled "The Girl in the Mirror." Harry Hilliard will be her leading man.

Enid Bennett, as "The Woman in the Suit Case," will be packing and unpacking while the film is being shipped from theatre to theatre.

Harrison Ford was the first leading man in the Los Angeles film colony to receive a leap year proposal. There may be girls among the "fans" who will be made happy in knowing that he didn't say "yes."

Enid Bennett has completed her new Thomas Ince production, "The Man in the Moon," under direction of her husband, Fred Niblo.

David Butler has secured the screen rights to the Saturday Evening Post story "Sitting on the World" and will star Sophie Kerr in the leading role.

"The Greatest Question" represents nothing more than a photoplay to its producer, David Wark Griffith. But with politicians it's like this: Is Hoover a Democrat or a Republican?

Sam Berman Stirs North Carolina Meeting with Talk on Advertising

THE mid-winter convention of the North Carolina Exhibitors Association closed in Charlotte, N. C., January 23, after two days of constructive work by the largest assemblage of representative theatre owners of North and South Carolina that have met in convention in years. Chief interest of the convention attached to the presence of Sam I. Berman, executive secretary of the New York State Exhibitors' League.

Mr. Berman addressed the exhibitors in behalf of the newly organized Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and later received the unanimous approval of the North Carolina League, which will become a member of the organization. He made a spirited and, at times, sensational, address before the convention Wednesday evening at their opening session.

He paid his respects to the motion picture producers, whom, he claims, are packing many of their supposedly "legitimate" films full of paid advertising, reciting specific instances where this had been done. He charged certain magazine and educational releases with being "paid advertisements, pure and simple," for which the producers were receiving big money to produce and distribute. Mr. Berman even named a certain five-reel "feature" put out by one of the large producing organizations, in which he stated a package of "Bull Durham" smoking tobacco appeared on every sub-title.

Berman Makes Some Statements.

"One of your own North Carolina industries paid thousands of dollars for this advertisement, and you suckers in turn paid your good money for the privilege of running it on your screens," Mr. Berman exclaimed.

He mentioned the trade controversy being waged between the organization he represents and the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, challenging the latter organization to show eighty bona fide members. He added that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America had over 1,100 members in New York State alone, with about thirty other states strongly entrenched.

Through the system adopted by the North Carolina Association, 50 per cent. of the income from the organization will go into the treasury of the Association. The remaining 50 per cent is to be distributed pro rata, every six months, to the exhibitor-members.

Matters pertaining to legislation were discussed and committees appointed. It was decided to hold the annual convention in Wilmington the last week in June—just prior to the meeting of the special session of the state legislature.

The convention was in charge of President Percy W Wells, Wilmington, and Henry B. Varner, Lexington, secretary-treasurer. Through invitation, President George C. Warner, of the South Carolina Exhibitors Association, attended and entered actively into the work before the convention.

Convention Side-Lights.

R. D. Craver, owner of the Broadway, Charlotte, and six other theatres throughout the Carolinas, held open house to the exhibitors during the convention. Craver is owner of the First National franchise, and gave pre-release screenings of the serial "The Lost City" and other productions being distributed by the First National in this territory.

As an extra treat to the exhibitors Graver showed 'em how to put over a picture for a solid week in a small city, the first time it has been done in North Carolina. He was playing Mary Pickford's initial United release, "Pollyanna," the entire week of the convention, having opened with the picture upon its release date.

The convention had as an honored guest a woman exchange manager—Mrs. A. H. Sessions, of the Republic Distributing Corporation's Atlanta office. Mrs. Sessions, it was conceded by all the film salesmen here, signed more contracts than anyone at the convention.

George V. Atkison, special feature manager of the local Pathe office, moved over to the Selwyn Hotel so he could be on hand to answer the slightest wish of his exhibitor friends—and George numbers them by the hundreds, having been in this territory longer than any salesman here.

Charlotte is quite an exchange center, thank you. We have Paramount, Pathe, Universal, also three flourishing states rights exchanges—the Eltabran Film Company, the Hyart Pictures Corporation and the Premier Pictures Corporation.

Briton N. Busch Declares for Independent Service

PREDICTING that the next five years will be the biggest ever experienced in the motion picture industry, Briton N. Busch, president of Republic Distributing Corporation, has expressed his satisfaction at the start already made. Furthermore he says:

"The company confining itself to the physical distribution of pictures and not combining with its labors the arduous task of producing at the same time, affords the independent producer the medium whereby his merchandise can be sold with the maximum of results. Such distributing companies are not influenced in neglecting the other man's product in order to get the greatest returns on such pictures as he makes himself.

"Bearcat" Proves Contention.

"The Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director with me, has had an experience in the distribution of 'When Bearcat Went Dry.' The gross takings on this release are as large as those obtained by a feature made and distributed through the most important companies in the industry.

"This shows that the organization specializing on distribution and not producing can give to the independent producer results that he cannot hope to obtain by putting his pictures with organizations which have their own list of stars, whose features must be sold regardless of contracts made by the man who turns out one or two, or even a half dozen pictures a year."

Frank Keenan Becomes an Ace of Hoboes in His Newest Pathe, "Smouldering Embers."
The embers, no doubt, refer to the little hobo camp fire and to the drama that leaps into flame in the picture.

Shirley Mason, Newest Fox Star, Makes Hit in "Her Elephant Man"

By Edward Weitzel

THE circus atmosphere in "Her Elephant Man" is the real article. There have been tales of the sawdust ring without number on the stage and on the screen, but the first Fox release starring Shirley Mason, makes good its boast of having the biggest show evere used in pictures. The story is not wildly melodramatic, but depends upon its heart interest and the engaging character of its heroine for its greatest appeal. The men and women of the circus are shown in their every day relations with one another, and the romance of the little "Queen of the Arena" and her Elephant Man is just as fresh and fragrant as one laid among more conventional scenes of life. There is a villain, of course, but he gets only a small share of the center of the ring. The kindly, human side of the hard working, straight living folk that make up the major portion of the ensemble of a big three-ring circus is the one emphasized in "Her Elephant Man."

The Meeting in the Jungle.

Pearl Doles Bell, author of the story, evidently found herself on familiar and well loved ground when she chose the tented field for the scenes of her work. She must have known and associated with the entire personnel of more than one "Greatest Show on Earth." The day the writer saw the picture, Bird Millman, the wire walker, sat next to Mrs. Bell, and her professionally critical eyes glowed with enthuiastic approval of the circus scenes.

The incidents leading up to the time when the heroine becomes a star performer in the "big top" are sufficiently novel to deserve a word of commendation: After Philip Warner has allowed a designing young woman to marry him for his money and has discovered the truth, he changes his name to Dorset and wanders about the world in an aimless way until he joins a party of animal men that are going into the African jungle in search of elephants. Here he meets Joan. She is only a child at the time. Her father, a missionary, has just died of the fever, and the head man of the native village has a letter written by him, requesting the first white man to arrive to take Joan to the United States and put her in the care of the bishop who was a close friend of her parents.

Joan Joins the Circus.

The dead man's wishes are accepted as a sacred trust by the animal hunters. Joan is brought to America, kindly old Jerimy, head of the party, becoming a second father to the orphan. A misunderstanding prevents Joan from reaching the bishop, and Jeremy takes her on to the circus with him, Dorset sharing in the little girl's care. He is now one of the trainers with the circus, and Joan calls him her Elephant Man.

Five years pass and little Joan has become a beautiful young girl and the star woman rider of the circus. She still worships her Elephant Man and Dorset is deeply in love with her, although he has a legal wife living. Blake, the ring master, knows of this and has also heard that, believing her husband dead, Mrs. Philip has married again and is now in New York. The ringmaster is himself infatuated with Joan, but she has eyes for no one but Philip. Realizing that he has no right to Joan's love, the Elephant Man quits the circus without bidding her goodbye and the girl is heart-broken.

The Wreck of the "Big Top."

Jerimy finds Dorset, tries to get him back but fails. He next hunts up the bishop and learns all about Joan's parents. Blake also busies himself with Joan's affairs. He finds out where Philip's wife is living, and learns that she was already married when she became his wife. Philip discovers this later, and returns to the circus the day

Very, Oh Very Kittenish
Also very pretty. Also very good in her circus role in "Her Elephant Man."

a terrific storm wrecks the main tent and the elephants are about to stampede. Joan has been helping to keep the big brutes quiet, and has only time to embrace her Elephant Man when a messenger rushes into the animal tent. Blake has been struck by the falling center pole and is fatally injured and wants to make his peace with the star rider.

Still clad in her tights and spangled skirts, now sadly soaked and stained from the driving storm, Joan hurries to the dying man. Kneeling at his side she forgives him freely when he confesses how he tried to separate her and the elephant trainer. Joan then dashes back to Dorset. He is busy with his charges, but Joan seizes him by the hand and drags him out on the lot. The rain is still pouring down but she heads straight for the biggest band wagon. When old Jerimy comes upon them some time later the pair are sitting up on the driver's seat, their arms about each other and blissfully unconscious that they are being soaked to the skin.

A Clean and Wholesome Story.

With a plot of such a nature it is easily seen that "Her Elephant Man" does not depend upon highly spiced melodrama or broadly accentuated comedy to put it over with the film public. It is a love story of the clean wholesome sort and has been produced with the care and thoroughness claimed for it by the William Fox organization. All of the scenes and incidents of circus life have that feeling of conviction which comes from the "know how" of the chap who has been raised on the lot and has filled every position from candy butcher to boss canvasman. The size of the "tops" and the extent of the trappings and of the number of people employed to give realism to the circus episodes are in keeping with the standard of the best Fox productions.

Scott Dunlap, who directed the picture, has stuck close to the theme and not yielded to the temptation to pad in any irrelevant comedy, with the aid of the funny men of the swadust ring. The scenes of Philip's marriage and of his parting from his wife, also those in the African jungle, are excellently handled.

Shirley Mason's Fine Impersonation.

To Shirley Mason has fallen the difficult task of impersonating a child of twelve and of following up this impersonation with a portrayal of the same little girl when she has grown into womanhood. Not by a look or an action does she suggest anything but the child she is supposed to be, and the transitions of the character are as skillfully accomplished. More than all this is the beautiful nature and personal charm she gives to Joan. The unexpected ease with which she takes to her riding act in the ring entitles her to further merit marks. Albert Roscoe as Philip Dorset and Harry Todd as Jerimy are capital selections.

Village Street Built for Metro's "Shore Acres"

A NEW ENGLAND village street built on the old Universal ranch is being used for scenes of James A. Herne's "Shore Acres," Alice Lake's new Metro-Screen Classic picture. The street was constructed by the Metro technical department under the direction of John Holden.

Many scenes in the early part of "Shore Acres" center about the rural bank. This building, a country store, a post-office and many other village places of business have been built on the street.

Miss Lake is supported by Edward Connelly, Joseph Kilgour, Robert Walker, Frank Brownlee, Burwell Hamrick, Margaret McWade and Franklyn Garland.

Arthur J. Zellner wrote the continuity from the Herne drama. Rex Ingram is directing.

Films Encourage Trade Relations Between the Americas, Says Day

THE old adage, "commerce follows the flag," no longer holds good in the opinion of film men. Business these days, with all dreams of colonial expansion banished, is showing a tendency to follow other ideals. Nowadays it is the motion picture industry that has taken the lead, and other business is showing an increasing tendency to follow this leadership, according to John L. Day, South American representative for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has just returned from a five month's trip through that territory.

"American business men are just beginning to reap the benefits of the tremendous hold American motion pictures have obtained upon the people of the South American countries," said Mr. Day. "The war enabled American pictures to wrest the leadership away from the French and Italian manufacturers of films, and so solidly entrenched are our pictures that it will be impossible for European exporters to regain their lost leadership as long as America continues to develop and improve the art of the screen.

Arouse Interest in Our Customs.

"When the South American saw French fashions and French ideals as reflected in the photoplays from that country, his business inquiries were generally forwarded in that direction. French and Italian pictures were shown almost exclusively in the larger theatres, with the result that the public had little opportunity to become acquainted with American standards of living. The war brought about this much desired change, however, and motion pictures from this country are serving a highly important purpose as propaganda for American merchandise as well as for American films.

"Thanks to the movies, South Americans are becoming better acquainted with the people of the United States. The visualization of American scenery, fashions, business conditions and standards of living is the object of the keenest interest on the part of the men and women of South America.

"Our pictures are shown today in practically every high class theatre in South America and the demand for these films is increasing enormously. Leading exhibitors have told me that it will be impossible for European film exporters to supplant American pictures in the estimation of the public.

Exhibitors Prosperous.

"South American exhibitors are prosperous these days, conditions in Chile, Argentina and Brazil being unusually good insofar as American pictures are concerned. The demand for Paramount Artcraft pictures has increased tremendously in the last year and our various offices and agents are reporting record-breaking business. In Buenos Aires, for instance, eighty-five of the largest theatres in the metropolitan district are showing Paramount Artcraft pictures regularly. In Rio, the Cinema Avenida, the first run house for Paramount Artcraft productions, is being remodeled and will have double its present seating capacity.

Hutchinson, Back from Trip, Speaks of American's New Picture, "The Honey Bee"

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, had just reached Chicago headquarters after several weeks spent at the American's Santa Barbara studios, where he has been advising in the production of the latest "Flying A" super-drama, "The Honey Bee." On his way back Mr. Hutchinson stopped off at the American exchanges in San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Spokane, Salt Lake and Denver, where he discussed with exchange men and exhibitors the present success and the future prospects of American's big Specials, "Six Feet Four," "The Hellion," "Eve in Exile" and "The Valley of Tomorrow."

He found exhibitors vitally interested in what he had to say about the latest photonovel, now in the making, in which the Belgian prima donna, Mme. Marguerita Sylva, makes her initial appearance upon the American screen. The novel, "The Honey Bee," by Samuel Merwin, from which the drama is adapted, was one of the seven best sellers during the year of its appearance, and was chosen as admirably suited to the diva.

Based on Natural History Facts.

"'The Honey Bee,'" explains Mr. Hutchinson, "is based upon some of the most fascinating facts in natural history, the never-ending toil of the unsexed females—the workers of the honey bee family. The fact that they work and work until they die, and if, for any reason, there isn't work enough, become demoralized, taste the honey, get honey-drunk, and take to robbing the hives.

"In his novel," continued Mr. Hutchinson, "Samuel Merwin has developed a most interesting analogy, using this sexless little creature as typical of woman, the worker—the woman who is forced by circumstances to be self-supporting and, as the title explains, is 'cheated out of love and home and babies.'

Sub-Titles Minimized.

"Speaking of titles, we are putting this picture through with a minimum of reading matter. It is going to be a picture interspersed with a few necessary titles, and not a lot of titles, probably less than a hundred for six reels. Considering the fact that the grip of the story is in the subtle mental and emotional metamorphosis of the woman who yields her cramping conventions for a more human elbowing with humanity, considering the nature of the drama, the paucity of titles is a tribute to Mme. Sylvia's histrionic ability.

"The scenes of the play are laid in New York and Paris. In the novel environment of that gay metropolis the heroine, Hilda Wilson, (Mme. Sylva in the screen adaptation) during a respite from her work falls in love with an American pugilist whom she knew only as a clean, high type of manhood. Later she sees him in action under the terrible stress of a prize fight, and while feeling is tense under the suspense of who shall win, Hilda does the unexpected. She is so affected by the brutal spectacle that she turns from hero with revulsion."

Leah Baird Back from Florida.

Leah Baird and her company of players engaged in filming "Cynthia-of-the-Minute," the Louis Joseph Vance novel, for W. W. Hodkinson release, has returned from Tampa, Jacksonville and Miami, Fla., where they had been for three weeks enacting outdoor scenes.

Ritchey Increasing Facilities.

James V. Ritchey declares that distributors are increasingly using more and more lithographic work to advertise their product to the public. Picture showmen are likewise increasing their orders for printing, as further indication that lithographing and billposting is taking the same place in advertising photoplays that the art has long held in promoting regular theatrical attractions. Ten additional presses have just been installed by the Ritchey Litho Corporation to meet increased trade.

Chicagoans Buy Milwaukee House.

The Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, has passed to the ownership of Handelsman, Hershberg & Gumbiner, of Chicago, at a sum stated to be $500,000. There is an unexpired lease-hold in the transaction with ninety-four years yet to go.

Handelsman, Hershberg & Gumbiner heretofore have been operating separately in theatrical affairs. This deal brings them together in a business transaction for the first time.

J. Handelsman has been associated with the W. W. Kimball company, organ builders, for twenty-five years. His theatrical holdings have been many and varied.

William Hershberg, who was the prime mover in swinging the Milwaukee deal, is a member of Metro's Chicago organization. He is a veteran picture man.

Abe Gumbiner is a Chicago theatrical man with considerable holdings. He is operating a circuit of ten theatres in Chicago.

Alice Brady Says: The Life of Riley Is Not for Any Screen-Stage Star

By Edward Weitzel

NO one is going to believe this story, but it happened just as it is set down here. I arrived at the door of Alice Brady's dressing room to find her colored maid gazing steadfastly at some object on the floor, a look of absolute terror in her eyes.

"I had an appointment with Miss Brady," I began.

The maid turned her gaze in my direction for an instant, then her eyes went back to the glittering heap on the rug in front of the dressing room shelf.

"Mis' Crane's gone out to dinnah with her husband," the woman said solenmly and heaved a sigh. "Do you see that?" she asked, the fright in her voice echoing the fear in her face, as she pointed to the dread object on the rug.

I took one apprehensive glance and ceased to wonder at the woman's terror. On the floor lay a hand mirror, smashed into a thousand pieces.

"She dun it!"

The words came slowly from the lips of the maid and she breathed hard, as one in pain.

"And she can calmly go out to dinner after breaking a mirror?" I almost gasped.

"Shuah she can!"

"But she's an actress!" I exclaimed.

"That don't make no dif'rence with Mis' Crane. She's alus smashin' mirrors, but it don't spile her appetite nun. An' it jes' about skeers me half to death," added the maid. "Take a chair, please. Soon's I git ovah mah misery I'm goin' to sweep up the pieces."

The hand-maiden was in the middle of this task when Alice Brady returned. Referring to the unlucky omen, after her serving maid had left the room with the pieces of broken glass, the star of "Forever After" laughed a carefree laugh before she said: "I've done nothing but smash mirrors since I opened with this piece, and the last two years have been the most successful of my life."

A remarkable young woman in more ways than one is Miss Alice Brady, stage star and screen queen at one and the same time; but in no way more remarkable than in her calm superiority to one of the sacred superstitions of a somewhat over-credulous profession.

An Alice Brady Vacation.

"Well," I began, "I've come to ask you the usual question when one is a leading light in the movies and also on the stage: How do you manage it?"

"To find time for both?"

"Time—and strength."

"Why, I don't seem to mind."

"But it's hard work, isn't it?"

"Oh, yes! but I'm used to that. I've worked hard ever since I first started to act. You must, you know, if you're going to amount to anything. I haven't had a vacation in two years. Last summer I rested by going to Nantucket and making pictures."

"Being the daughter of a prominent manager doesn't mean 'living the life of Riley'—if said daughter has ambitions—I take it?"

"No; it means living the life of Brady —and that means precious little time to idle away."

Doubling in Screen and Stage Drama.

"It seems to be quite the thing this season for star actresses to double in the silent and the spoken drama." This remark brought Miss Brady back to the topic of conversation that had drawn me to the Borough of Brooklyn on a recent matinee day.

"Oh, yes," she agreed; "they're all doing it in our set. There's Elsie Ferguson making pictures and rehearsing in 'Sacred and Profane Love'; Constance Binney in Chicago appearing in 'Erstwhile Susan' and acting for the screen, and Dorothy Dalton playing 'Aphrodite' up at the Century Theatre when she isn't putting in the rest of her time movie acting for Paramount. Miss Dalton came to me when she was offered the Century engagement and asked my advice about earning two salaries at once."

"What did you tell her?

"That she wouldn't find it easy, but to go ahead if she loved work and didn't mind a short allowance of sleep."

To Make Three Pictures This Season.

"How about your own plans for this season?"

"I expect to make three pictures while filling my 'Forever After' dates. One will be completed during the Chicago run, another while we are in Philadelphia, and the last one will be made here in New York."

"You have also rehearsed and tried out a new play for next season, I hear."

"Yes. We put it on at a Wednesday matinee during our recent engagement in Boston. The piece is a melodrama by Henry Chapman Ford and is called 'Anna Ascenda.' I play the part of a Syrian girl who comes to this country."

"Were you satisfied with the tryout?"

"I expect to use the piece next season. I like my part and the audience seemed to like the play. I had to study the Syrian language while getting up in the part of Anna."

"More work for the industrious Miss Brady!"

"Oh, I enjoyed it! Realart wants me to give all of my time to the screen, but I am too fond of the personal contact between actor and audience which makes the stage so fascinating."

"But there is a fascination about screen acting also?"

"Yes, indeed! For one thing, you can sit out in front and watch yourself act after a picture is finished. It doesn't seem to be you, so you don't mind what you say about yourself."

Living the Life of Brady.

Coming out of the theatre I was conscious of what a large part temperament plays in the success of an actress who ventures to divide her waking hours between the stage and the screen. Alice Brady had given a matinee that afternoon and would repeat the performance that night, and, during an interview lasting over an hour she had sat composedly in her chair, talked animatedly on every topic which arose and given no indication of mental or physical strain. Living the life of Brady evidently means, for one thing, practicing the art of self-control.

Bray Has a New Theory of Getting to the Moon

MAX FLEISCHER of the Bray Studios, in conjunction with the Popular Science Monthly has staged an imaginary trip to the moon aboard a newly completed sky rocket. The Bray press agent tells us that to avoid being pulled back by the earth's attraction, it will be necessary, when our little car gets under way, to employ 414,000 horse power. For this terrific blast we must use radium, a mystery of science which gives off only one-half of its energy in two thousand years. No other form of energy will give us this power.

Flash! We are off with a roar! When we look back we see the earth growing smaller and smaller as we speed off into space. We experience no jar or vibration, for in one end of the rocket a gyroscope is operating at terrific speed.

In less than three days we find it necessary to prepare ourselves for a landing. The problem now is to keep from smashing the rocket. For once having broken away from the earth's gravity, the rocket will fall on the moon, unless we succeed in avoiding such a catastrophe by reversing our power. As we do this the rocket glides gracefully downward, slowly diminishing in speed, until we land in one of the vast craters of the moon.

This remarkable illustration of a trip to the moon is made possible by a series of animated drawings. Golwyn has it.

Zoology and Science in Current Pathe Review

THE Dance of Ancient Egypt" is the latest of the series "The Spirit of the Dance," which is presented in Pathe Review No. 37, released February 8. The different dances are all taken from drawings made by Julian Ollendorf and demonstrated by well-known terpsichorean celebrities. Madame Desiree Lubovska interprets this particular dance, which was constructed from ancient depictions on temple walls, approximately as it must have been done in 1200 B. C.

The pathecolor process is effective in "On the Trail of the Iron Duke—The Forest of Bussaco-Portugal." In the heavily wooded hills the Duke of Wellington won a famous victory over Massena in 1810. Today the place is modernized to a great degree and the picturesque old monastery is now a hotel, the center of a much visited health resort.

"Another Worry for Fritz" is shown in views taken at the Bureau of Standards, Washington, D. C. The wartime needs gave government experts opportunity to develop the science of lens making which was monopolized by Germany before the war. The work done by the experts is most fascinating, showing the manner in which the rough blocks of glass are ground out and polished.

In "Melting Steel with Snow," it is shown how French engineers have found an inexhaustible source of heat and power in the mountain storehouses of Nature. The first step, that of melting snow and shipping it down, is attended to by Nature. The sizable stream which results, is harnessed between concrete walls and passed through the power house, where the power and heat is "drained."

Big Educational Deals

ELSEWHERE in this issue are two big stories with large bearing on the educational field. One is that Goldwyn has acquired a controlling interest in the Bray Pictures Corporation whose releases it has been distributing since last September.

The other story is that Educational Films Corporation has sent Joe Lee on a tour of distributing depots east of the Mississippi for the purpose of establishing exchanges for Educational itself.

Special attention is called to these developments because they appear outside of this department and because it is the belief of Moving Picture World that the educational and non-theatrical field is one to which close attention must be paid. And Moving Picture World is going to give it all the attention it deserves.

Churches Organize to Make Scriptural Dramas

A FEW years ago the mere mention of placing a motion picture projector in one of the Kansas City churches, or any other church for that matter, would have caused a large portion of its members to throw up their hands in horror. It was considered a sin to go inside a motion picture theatre, let alone make a theatre of the church, and picture shows were scorned by many people as immoral and undesirable.

This strong opposition of ministers and church-going people to the moving pictures is fast becoming a thing of the past. A good indication of the place they have won in the hearts of the American people of every class and religious belief was the recent announcement in Kansas City of a nationwide church organization, known as the International Church Film Corporation, which proposes to turn the vast educational possibilities of the film to religious ends.

This changed attitude of the church and its people is considered by Kansas City exhibitors as a big victory for the exhibitor and the producer of motion pictures.

Capt. G. Charles Gray, formerly chaplain attached to the base hospital at Fort Riley during the war, is in Kansas City in the interest of this big interdenominational movement which hopes to make the church a social as well as a religious "community center." Capt. Gray will open offices in Kansas City, which is to be one of the distributing centers for the films made by the corporation. There will be 16 such centers in the United States.

"We are going to edit and film the great thrilling dramatic stories of the Bible," said Captain Gray. "The screen will be made to preach sermons, not by any melodramatic appeal, but by the setting forth of the great virile modern-day truths of the Scriptures. The films will be edited by competent Bible scholars, always with a careful regard to historical accuracies, customs and the implied truth of the narrative represented.

"We are proposing to operate the camera in foreign fields, under the direction of the various foreign missionary boards, and bring this film back to the home churches to be used in missionary educational work, especially in the Sunday schools. The moving picture is certain to bring a new day of enlightenment and inspiration for foreign missions.

"The vast resources of the motion picture in the constructive teaching of Americanism to foreign-speaking peoples in the United States, for example, has yet scarcely been conceived. The day has come for the patriotic and religious adaptation of this most fascinating invention of the age. The churches can delay its universal use only at the expense of losing their place as the historic pioneer in matters educational."

Celebrated Players Buy Educationals.

J. L. Friedman, president of the Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago's hustling state rights exchange, announces the publication of an interesting series purchased from the Educational Films Corporation. The series comprises a reel a week of extremely timely and instructive matter.

On February 2 a reel combining views of historic Monterey, situated in the fruit belt of California, and a short, cryptic picture talk on "The Chemistry of Combustion" will be published, to be followed on February 9 with "Sheep of Chelan" and on February 16 with views of a "Modern Mexican Hacienda."

An interesting point in this latter release is that it brings to the screen the "Mexican Douglas Fairbanks," a cowboy whose pranks and cavortings have brought him much fame.

Manufacture of Tungsten Wire in Film.

In pursuance of the policy to show a cross section of American industry, the Ford Educational Weekly has made a screen study of the manufacture of tungsten wire used in electric globes. This new educational subject will be released through the Goldwyn company on February 8. The picture shows the reduction of tungsten to the wire stage; then the drawing of the wire to extreme thinness, and its mounting for use as a filament in an electric light globe. The factory in which these various processes are carried on also manufactures the vacuum globes in which the tungsten filament is used. And in the course of the pictorial exposition, the blowing of the bulb is shown. In this connection, it may be mentioned that bulb-blowing is one of the most precarious of industrial occupations. It requires great skill, which is acquired only through long practice. The picture shows all the processes from the drawing of the tungsten wire to the careful packing of the finished electric bulb.

Prizma's "Magic Clay."

One of Prizma's best is being released this week in a carefully detailed illustration of the making of pottery. The Rookwood Potteries, at Cincinnati, Ohio, have been chosen as a fitting place from which to demonstrate the modern workings of an ancient industry.

The picture, directed and photographed by Captain George E. Stone, is a delightful presentation of its kind, and the home of the Rookwod pottery, with its beautiful flower-strewn entrance, is first noted, after which we visit the interior of the shops and are permitted to watch at close range an article of pottery shape itself under the hand of one of the most skilled workers. When the vase leaves his hand, it is turned over to the decorative artist for further beautifying, glazing and firing.

Samples of the shop's most beautiful masterpies are shown, and, lastly, an allegory posed gracefully by a member of the Rookwood firm.

The Moving Picture Art as Siam Practised It

WHAT a thrill the natives of Siam some few hundreds of years ago, must have undergone when the moving picture art in embryo flashed its wonders upon them. And we are even more astonished than they to find that the nineteenth-century invention was several hundred years behind in the propagation of an idea.

The evidence stands for itself and was presented to this country by the king of Siam in 1875, but has remained hidden away in boxes at the National Museum ever since. Finally it soaked through somebody's cranium that these little figures, conceived by some ancient Griffith or DeMille, might make good copy for a movie scribe.

So here we have them just as they looked in the days when they were mounted on rods and manipulated by a careful operator behind a screen of white cloth. Just how thrilling the dramas outlined by them were, we do not know; or just how Chaplinian the comedy. At any rate we can feel well assured that the very novelty of the thing proved immensely entertaining to the ancients of that period in Siam.

A perusal of these figures reveals grace and ingeniousness of outline: and one can even sense a shade of the romantic amid the tragedy, however grotesque it may appear, that permeates the central composite picture. Give a thought to these moving figures of the dusky ages.

Some Things Worth Knowing

That one of the most important features of the current issue of the Pathe News is a demonstration of the merits of a new invention in aeroplanes. This plane rises vertically, without the usual "take-off," by means of rapidly revolving horizontal propellers. In the same issue Bobby McLean, champion ice skater, gives a final exhibition before setting out for Norway to race Oscar Mathieson.

That the Newton Catholic Club of West Newton, Mass., is one of several non-profit making social organizations that have contracted for Realart Pictures recently. The indorsement has also been signed by R. H. Clark, manager of the Town Hall, Weston, a community center supported by one of the wealthy men of the town. The pictures which won this distinction for Realart are "Erstwhile Susan" and "Anne of Green Gables."

That Don Carlos Ellis, head of the school book division of the Educational Department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has been in Washington for the past week in consultation with Dr. Philander P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education, and other educational authorities, in regard to the production of a series of pedagogical films to be exhibited at the February session of the National Educational Association at Cleveland, Ohio.

That one of the Judge Brown series of moving pictures, entitled "Thief or Angel," was used in illustrating a sermon preached by Rev. Dr. Leslie Willis Sprague in the Judson Memorial Church, at Washington Square, New York City, on Sunday night. The sermon was on "Good Motives and Evil Deeds." Dr. Sprague, former pastor of a Brooklyn church, is now head of the industrial and religious sections of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, New York City.

That one of the subjects of a recent Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph discloses the shocking criminality of a feminine hunting wasp. The cameraman has the inside track on all the details of her crime.

That twenty-six public schools in Kansas City are running moving pictures six afternoons and nights in the week with such great success from an educational standpoint, that the school board has heartily indorsed the movement which has been carried on under the direction of C. H. Mills, community center director. More schools in this city are planning to run pictures immediately, following the realization that they can be run on a paying basis. "The Bluebird" was shown to 16,000 persons. It was run at twenty-one schools to a box office total of $1,431, making a profit of $800. Half of the surplus reverted to the community centers to be used in improving schools and communities. The other half went to the school board to be used in buying educational films.

Movie Fans in Siam Laughed and Cried at Moving Pictures Hundred of Years Before American Audiences Did

These ancient figures, mounted on rods, and projected by an "operator" on the "screen," a white cloth hung between the light and the audience proves it. Left to right above are: A "tense situation" between hero and heroine; Huniman, the monkey god, with his warriors in a big battle set; the Siamese Charlie Chaplin; and the Sun God in a "sensational production."

Schenck Engages Halliday.

John Halliday, who has just finished playing the role of Daniel Garford, the artist, opposite Norma Talmadge, in her second First National picture, "The Woman Gives," has now been engaged by Joseph M. Schenck to play Jim Winthrop, the lead, in support of Constance Talmadge in "The Love Expert." "The Love Expert" is an original story by John Emerson and Anita Loos, and will be the fifth of Constance Talmadge's First National releases.

"The Dangerous Talent" Is Strong Drama of Today

THE DANGEROUS TALENT," the latest "Flying A" super-drama, is a "human" sort of story, which Margarita Fisher vitalizes and brings close to the experience of the spectator —that is not to say that the screen spectators have all, like "Lelia Mead," sat on a park bench, hungry, scanning the newspaper for a job, nor have they necessarily been born with a talent that seemed a curse and a blessing by turns; nor is it taken for granted that they have brilliantly exposed a couple of crooks and then proceeded to fall in love with a wealthy employer—but it does mean that Margarita Fisher and a strong supporting cast have made the experiences of the heroine so natural and convincing that they touch a sympathetic chord in every heart.

Harry Hilliard, playing opposite the star, handles the role of the wealthy young bachelor and philanthropist with understanding and finesse. Harvey Clark is the tricky butler. Other roles of importance are interpreted by Neil Hardin, as a good for nothing "sponge" lazily enjoying a sinecure as secretary to the philanthropist; George Periolat, a crusty and suspicious lawyer, and Mary Talbot, a park bench derelict, whose hardened outlook on life has worked out a philosophy which was the source of Lelia Mead's inspiration in getting a job, and the cause of her fall from grace later.

All the way through the picture is crowded with vivid, suspenseful drama, youthful romance and interesting character sketches. Daniel Whitcomb wrote the story, which was adapted to the screen by Lois Zellner. George L. Cox directed the production.

Universal Awards Prizes in Big Business Drive Contest

WITH an average of over 20 per cent. increase in bookings for a three months' period, Universal has just announced the results of its recent big business drive. The salesmen and the office force of the Universal's Cleveland exchange have been mailed a check for $2,500 as an award for winning first place in a three months' sales contest which closed on the first of the year. The Cleveland exchange increased its film sales by 55.57 per cent. over the sales made during the three months immediately preceding the contest.

Detroit was second with an increase of 54.61 per cent. Detroit's check was for $1,300. The third Universal exchange to come in the money was the Buffalo branch, which captured third place with an increase of 44.7 per cent. and won a check for $700.

Besides the main awards in the lively sales contest the most efficient salesman in each of twenty-five exchanges received a check for $100. J. A. Daly, publicity manager of the Charlotte (N. C.) Exchange, received $50 as an award for the best and most consistent publicity during the contest A second publicity prize, $25, was given to Dean Collins, of the Portland, Oregon, Universal branch. These prizes are in addition to the provisions made for publicty men in the big contest.

Netted Over 25 Per Cent. Increase.

So spirited was the drive that the Universal sales machine as a whole averaged an increase of over 25 per cent. during the months of October, November and December, as compared to the months of July, August and September of last year.

The contest was known as the $6,000 Prize Contest, that amount of money being set aside to be divided among three leading exchanges and among the twenty-five top salesmen. Other prizes were added during the competition, until the total amount awarded as a result of the drive was more than $7,000.

The increase gained by the various exchanges is all the more unusual due to the fact that the results were compared with months in which a previous sales contest was running at full steam—the Universal anniversary contest, which lasted for two months last summer. The winners in that contest were Pittsburgh, San Francisco and Cleveland, with percentage increases of 24, 22 and 20 per cent., respectively. In the previous contest Detroit was fourth with 18 per cent. and Buffalo was almost at the bottom of the list, showing a loss.

Business Increase at Branches.

The percentage of increase in business of the leading exchanges for the three months of the contest follows: Cleveland 55.57 per cent.; Detroit, 54.51; Buffalo, 44.7; Chicago, 43.88; Milwaukee, 38.02; Pittsburgh, 35.96; New York, 32; Des Moines, 30.34; San Francisco, 27; Seattle, 25.06; Sioux Falls, 24.96; Los Angeles, 20.25.

To spur salesmen on to greater individual efforts prizes of $100 were offered for the top salesmen of each branch exchange In this way every exchange had at least one man who benefited directly by the contest. In Chicago and New York, because of the size of the exchanges, two $100 prizes were offered. An interesting angle of the drive is that at Sioux Falls Universal's only woman sales representative topped the list.

Picking Cast for New Duncan Serial.

Vitagraph has assembled an unusually strong supporting cast for William Duncan, who now has his new Vitagraph serial by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and his new collaborator, Cleveland Moffett, well under way. Edith Johnson is again Mr. Duncan's leading woman. Virginia Nightingale, a graduate of Vitagraph comedies, appears as the feminine "heavy," while Jack Richardson, formerly "heavy" for J. Warren Kerrigan and W. S. Hart, occupies the same position with Mr. Duncan, succeeding Joe Ryan, who is being starred with Jean Paige in his own serial.

Change Title of Ince Picture.

Enid Bennett's latest Thomas H. Ince production, announced previously under the title of "The Man in the Moon," has been changed to "The False Road."

"The Woman God Sent," "Blind Youth" and "The Woman Game" Given Our Own Presentation.

Four Big Productions Scheduled By Pathe for Release in February

WITH four big special productions ready for release it is expected that February will be a banner month for Pathe. In the judgment of officials of the company nothing finer in the way of productions has ever been released than the four pictures which have been completed and will be released in the coming month. Crauford Kent will be seen in "Other Men's Shoes," an Edgar Lewis production; June Caprice appears in "In Walked Mary"; Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are the stars of "Respectable by Proxy," a J. Stuart Blackton production; and Frank Keenan will be seen in "Smouldering Embers."

"Other Men's Shoes" is from the pen of the well known war correspondent, Andrew Soutar, but it is not a war play. It is the story of a "Fighting Parson" and of his brother of a much gentler character. Crauford Kent plays the dual role of the brothers. Irene Boyle makes her return to the screen as the pastor's sweetheart. John P. Wade, Stephen Grattan, Edna May Spurl, Phil Sanford, Jean Armour, Stephen Radmun and Jack Shankey are others in the cast.

Big Scenes in Production.

Throughout the picture a high dramatic suspense prevails, but Harold Forshay and Bobby Connelly, who both have achieved reputations in light comedy roles, put much humor into the side action. Some big scenes are staged in the production, 4,000 extras being used. Of these 3,000 are children. There is a big scene representing a demonstration at the town hall in which 800 persons took part, and in another scene at Shady Side, New Jersey, about 1,000 factory workers were used in the picture.

In her production "In Walked Mary," June Caprice has a part well suited to her talents. It is a story of a romance in the South.

The J. Stuart Blackton production, "Respectable by Proxy," is one of the best of the Blackton pictures. The story stands out in its original twists and Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon effectively interpret the leads.

In "Smouldering Embers" Frank Keenan is seen in some of the best work of his career. He plays the part of a wandering tramp, deserted years before by his wife who also stole his son.

Pathe Lists Another Blackton Film.

The latest J. Stuart Blackton production, "Respectable by Proxy," released through Pathe, has for a background the life of a chorus girl, and the opportunity afforded for striking character delineation has not been overlooked by Mr. Blackton. It is described as a fine blending of comedy and drama.

Mr. Blackton has chosen a well balanced cast to support Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon. Others in the cast are Eulalie Jensen, Margaret Barry, William R. Dunn, Bessie Stinson and Morgan Thorpe.

A big campaign of advertising and exploitation will support the distribution of the feature by Pathe. It is believed that the title lends itself to unusual exploitation and the campaign book on the production is full of live suggestions in that direction.

Story Book Line: "And the Pine Tree Whimpered Lonesomely. All Because—"

Because of Hope Hampton, in the foreground of said pine, as she appears in "A Modern Salome," Jules Brulatour's production for Metro.

Brentwood Picture Going Big.

"The Third Generation," a Brentwood picture, is meeting with success in first run houses throughout the country. Betty Blythe has the feminine lead in this Robertson-Cole Superior Picture and is supported by Mahlon Hamilton, Betty Brice, Jack Pratt, Joseph Swickard and Edward Cecil.

Republic Lists Releases for January and February

WHAT are announced as some particularly good productions were released during January and are scheduled for release by the Republic Distributing Corporation during February. In fact, a glance over the list is deemed sufficient to warrant a careful consideration of each.

During January, Republic released the Lloyd Carleton production, "The Amazing Woman," starring Ruth Clifford. "The Blue Pearl," featuring the stage star, Edith Hallor, will be given its first showing, and last but not least is the famous "Trilby" drama. This production has an all-star cast including Clara Kimball Young, Wilton Lackaye and Chester Barnett.

In February the Edward Jose production, "Mothers of Men," will be given its initial showing. Claire Whitney is the star of this production. One of the Williamson sub-sea dramas, "The Girl of the Sea," is listed for release. It features Betty Hilburn and Chester Barnett. Edythe Sterling, a versatile screen player, is starred in "The One Way Trail," which is also scheduled for release in February.

The first of the two-reel screen dramas telling of the experience of ex-Chief William J. Flynn of the United States Secret Service will be released in February. These short detective dramas feature Herbert Rawlinson. Jackie Saunders, star of the stage and screen, is the star of the production, "Dad's Girl," which will be released in February.

Republic to Distribute C. R. McCauley Pictures

ONE of the interesting announcements of the week emanating from the Republic offices is that the special production, "The Girl Supreme," will be released through Republic. It is a C. R. McCauley Photoplays presentation with an all-star cast. O. L. Sellers directed the picture.

In order to obtain some idea of the quality of the picture, the cast is now announced as including Melbourne MacDowell, famous stage and screen star, who will be remembered by the older generation as the star in the famous Sardou repertoire with his wife, Fanny Davenport, and who recently has played in "The Boomerang," "Eve in Exile" and "Soldiers of Fortune" on the screen; Bernard Durning, director and player; Seena Owen, who has been starred and had leading parts ever since her first appearance on the screen five years ago; Lon Chaney, character actor who scored a personal triumph in "The Miracle Man;" Eugenie Besserer, famous for her dual role portrayals; Scott McKee, Jack Curtis, Anna Hernandez, Harry Lonsdale, Claire McDowell and Tully Marshall.

"Woman God Sent" Nears Completion.

According to a report from the Selznick offices "The Woman God Sent" is nearing completion, and it will probably be sent to the cutting room next week.

According to Larry Trimble, the director, the principal players, Sena Keefe, and Joe King, are doing some excellent work in this picture.

To Rebuild and Enlarge Baltimore's Wilson Theatre

THE WILSON THEATRE, Baltimore, which has been under the management of Guy L. Wonders since it opened, is to be rebuilt and enlarged to have a seating capacity of 2,500, and approximately $750,000 will be spent on the construction. The designs are being prepared by architect E. G. Blanke.

The plot of ground which will be used for the enlarging of the New Wilson is now occupied by the Church of the Messiah, which was built at the corner of Gay and Fayette streets over 80 years ago. It is estimated that the area of the new theatre, when completed, will be approximately 20,000 square feet.

For many months negotiations for purchasing the church property have been going on and the transaction delayed due to some of the older members of the Church of the Messiah being against the abandonment of church activities at that location. Also the approval of Bishop John Gardner Murray, bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Maryland, and the consent of the vestries of Christ and Grace Churches had to be gained.

The cost of the property is said to have been about $2,500 per front foot. The church property will be taken over on April 12.

Builders who wish to bid on the work will be given detailed plans for estimates about March 1. It is thought probable that the theatre will be completed about September 15.

Original Title Restored on Priscilla Dean Film

UNIVERSAL officials have decided to title Priscilla Dean's latest production, "The Virgin of Stamboul." This Jewel production was five months in the making, under the direction of Tod Browning. The story by H. H. Van Loan was entitled "The Virgin of Stamboul," but owing to the story centering about a beggar girl of Constantinople, the title "The Beautiful Beggar" was decided on. Mr. Van Loan, remonstrated against this, wiring as follows:

"Consensus opinion big majority producers is that real title for Priscilla Dean picture should be "The Virgin of Stamboul." Sennett, Ince, Lesser, and others told me this is one of best titles ever heard. Asked me why you changed. They say this title suggests big picture and also interests curiosity. Others outside industry have told me it is a shame to chance such a good title. "Virgin of Stamboul" is best title. You can't beat it."

To which Carl Laemmle replied: "It is one of our best pictures. Tod Browning and Priscilla Dean and yourself are a combination which cannot be beat. It's a fine story with a great plot. You wrote it. You ought to know. You title it. Carl Laemmle."

Edwin Carewe Finishes "Rio Grande" Based on Play by Augustus Thomas

WORD has just reached the Pathe executive offices that Edwin Carewe has finished the picturization of the Augustus Thomas stage play "Rio Grande," and the film is now on the way to the East. It is said to be a remarkable revelation of present-day conditions in Mexico, particularly in the border states, and to have many dramatic and picturesque moments.

As a stage play, the piece was a big success and met with popular approval throughout the country.

The film version is a much amplified and a more picturesque revelation of Mexican conditions and of the influences that make for trouble along the border.

There are many big spectacular scenes in the production, notably a dance in the Hacienda of a wealthy Mexican and a raid by Mexican bandits on American territory. In the dance scene one hundred Spanish dancers were brought from Mexico City to participate.. Their colorful costumes and their grace have created a scene of striking interest. One of the important dramatic moments of the production develops in this setting.

The raid scene was filmed last of all, and the greatest care was taken to get the emphasis of reality. Five hundred cowboys and Mexicans and many Texas rangers were employed. The attack of the Mexican bandits occurs about dawn when they ride swiftly in upon an American ranch, shooting down the caretakers, and riding away with the cattle. The actual battle is said to be one of the most thrilling scenes ever put upon the screen.

The cast is headed by Rosemary Theby, as the half Spanish, half Mexican heroine and Allan Sears plays the part of the Irishman, who finally wins her. Many others well known to devotees of the screen were engaged.

Allen Opens Another Theatre.

The seventh picture theatre in the Allen Toronto chain opened January 12. Mayor Church, of Toronto, and other prominent officials officiated, giving brief addresses while telegrams from prominent moving picture people were read.

The new house, which is called Allen's St. Clair is a community theatre at St. Clair avenue and Duffering street, seats 1,800 persons on two floors. There is a pipe organ and an orchestra of eight. Luigi Romanelli, general musical director of the Allen Enterprises, rendered a special violin solo. The director of the St. Clair orchestra is Carl Sturm while the manager is W. H. W. Edward, who formerly had charge of Allen's Bloor Theatre The policy of the theatre is to change programs twice weekly.

The Allens have two more new theatres under construction in Toronto, one being for the College street district and the other for the West End or Parkdale section. With these theatres in operation, the Allens will have practically a new theatre in every section of the Ontario capital.

Marguerite Marsh, Grossman Star.

Marguerite will appear in two big features under the Grossman banner —"Wits vs. Wits" and "Face to Face."

Republic Reports Changes in Its Branch Offices

THREE important branch office changes and promotions in the Republic Pictures Corporation have just been announced. The three promotions were made because of the excellent services of the three men.

George R. Meeker, sales director of the Republic organization, has announced the appointment of Paul Bush as manager of the Chicago office of Republic. Mr. Bush has been connected with the National Pictures Theatres, Inc., and his promotion to the important post of Chicago manager came as a result of efficient and result-getting work during the short time that he has been associated with National.

Fred Salinger, former manager of the Pittsburgh branch of Republic, has been made manager of the New York exchange. E. J. McCurty, formerly a salesman at the Pittsburgh office, has been appointed manager of that office, succeeding Mr. Salinger.

The three men are rated exceptional film men and have been associated with the industry for a number of years. Mr. Salinger was with the World organization for a number of years as manager, and remained in that position after the Republic organization took over the World interests. Mr. McCurty has gained the reputation of being one of the best salesmen in the Republic organization.

Ince Announces First of a Series of Specials

THOMAS H. INCE announces a series of big special productions, the first of which went into production this week with Lloyd Hughes, recently placed under a long-term contract, as the star.

Following closely on the heels of "Behind the Door," the super-drama which is now setting a new artistic standard throughout the country, and "Below the Surface," the latest Ince special, the forthcoming attraction carries added significance in that it is based on a theme and plot in striking contrast to anything hitherto made in the Ince studios.

John Wray has been assigned the direction of the first Lloyd Hughes starring special.

The new special, announced under the title of "Wheelbarrow Webster," deals with an unsophisticated son of the rural west who, in quest of the supreme happiness, traverses to the calcimined paths of a great city and there beholds and battles the whims and fallacies of life as they really exist.

Julian Josephson contributed the original script and also adapted the story to the screen. Gladys George is cast in the leading feminine role.

Mrs. Albert Smith Dies.

The sudden death of Mrs. Albert E. Smith, wife of the president of Vitagraph, occurred on Saturday, January 24. Mrs. Smith was sick only two or three days, with what appeared to be a severe cold, which developed into pneumonia. Mrs. Smith, whose maiden name was Hazel Neason, married Mr. Smith about six years ago, to whom she bore three children. Mr. Smith has received many letters and telegrams expressing sympathy.

Yes, All the Lakewoods Are Named After Her

This, gentle readers, as you know, is Alice Lake, who rose to stellar heights in "Should a Woman Tell?" and who will be starred by Metro in "Shore Acres" in response to a big demand.

A Breezy Typhoon Party? Well, That's Not So Bad

SURE, we know it. You bet there's a swell chance to dig up a lot of puns on that party Typhoon Fan Company gave—all about "breezy entertainment," "jazz fans," "hot stuff" and all that air line. But since we don't believe in puns we'll have to pass them up and get down to business.

So we'll list Ernst Glanzberg, president of Typhoon, mine host; the place, his Lexington Avenue home; the punch—somebody called it a knockout; and the guests—well, we're afraid to print them all on account of this newsprint paper agitation.

We have it on the authority of none other men than "Jim" Milligen, sales and advertising manager of Typhoon, that it was quite a nifty party. It must have been for Doraldina danced and the Memphis Five Jazzery untwisted all the melody out of the musical alphabet and Ted Lewis and Franklin Farnum put on "A Prohibitionist Fleeing from the Snakes." And then there was an art tour through the Glanzberg home, ending abruptly when Donald Kerr paused to describe a heavily clothed lady as "Aphrodite."

Some say the party took place Saturday evening, January 24. Then again some say Sunday morning, January 25. If you say nobody's looking we'll try to dodge these newsprint sleuths on the list of guests besides those above mentioned, to wit:

Pearl Regay, Juanita Hansen, Pearl White, Rita Gould, Jeanne Voltaire, Dolores Cassinelli, Nancy Fair, Helen Shipman, Claire Whitney, Cecile Marvin, Gladys Miller, Lucy Monroe, Edna French, Babe Dakin, Annette Hoffman, Herbert Rawlinson, Wallace McCutcheon, Walter Kingsley, B. S. Boss, Winfield Scheehan, N. T. Granlund, Fred Cassinelli, S. Jay Kaufman, Lee La Blanc, Maitland Rice, Henry Reichman, J. B. Saunders and Charles Moskowitz.

Owens and Oliver Form a New Publicity Enterprise

A NEW publicity office has been established under the title of the Owens-Oliver Enterprises, and will devote its activities chiefly to motion pictures and theatricals, handling plays and scenarios, as well as publicity. The principals in the new enterprise are well known in motion picture and theatrical circles.

They are Ray Owens, formerly general manager of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation and the Keeney theatrical enterprises, and Arthur Oliver, formerly Mr. Keeney's director of publicity. Recently Mr. Owens has been connected with theatricals in a managerial capacity and Mr. Oliver has been handling general publicity.

Initial Neilan Film in February.

Marshall Neilan's initial independent production, following the formation of his own producing organization, will be released to the public in the leading photoplay theatres throughout the country the latter part of February.

Reviews printed in Moving Picture World are based upon the production exactly as it will be shown upon your screen. And they are dependable, fair and honest in their expressions.

Paul H. Sloane of Fox Pens Plays for Walsh

UPON the completion of "A Manhattan Knight," the William Fox screen version of Gelett Burgess' novel, "Find the Woman," in which George Walsh is being directed by George Beranger, the star will begin work at once on his next vehicle, just selected and entitled "The Dead Line."

"The Dead Line" is a virile drama laid below the Mason-Dixie line and is an original story from the versatile pen of Paul H. Sloane. The cast is being selected and is understood that Mr. Walsh again will be directed by Del Henderson, who made such a noteworthy offering recently of "The Shark," which also starred Walsh.

Mr. Sloane, the author, is a young man, still in his twenties, but has crowded a deal of experience into his years with various picture producing companies of the East. He has contributed much original work to the screen and has always introduced a novel touch which makes his stories stand out as distinctive. Recently he became a member of the Fox scenario staff.

Mr. Sloane's career has been unusual. He never has done anything in any field save that of motion pictures. Here he has educated himself, has studied every branch of the industry and knows the game from the synopsis to the finished titled print. He now is engaged upon another original story for one of the Fox stars located in the East.

Three Selznick Films Run Full Week in Philadelphia

LAST week was Selznick week on Market street, Philadelphia. It may be called so because Selznick attractions monopolized the three largest Market Street houses.

The Philadelphia exchange for Select has been busy and the productions showing at the three theatres acquitted themselves in very good style. The telegram received from L. A. Young, Selznick representative there, stated that "A Regular Girl" opened there on Monday, January 12, to a capacity house. During the week this was maintained and the S. R. O. sign was put up.

"The Broken Melody," in which Eugene O'Brien stars, was showing at the Stanley and the management reported capacity business for the entire week.

Olive Thomas upheld her reputation as a drawing card in "The Glorious Lady" which, through the entire week, caused a line-up in front of the Regent Theatre.

Fitzgerald on Metro Staff.

Dallas M. Fitzgerald has been engaged as an addition to the Metro staff of directors and will be located at the company's studios in Hollywood. Herbert Blache, John Ince, Henry Otto, Ray C. Smallwood, Arthur D. Ripley, Rex Ingram and W. A. Howell, comprising the present Metro staff, are all busy on new productions, and in consequence Mr. Fitzgerald's first assignment has not been made. But he leaves New York this week for the west coast and expects to arrive there in time to take an active part in Metro's spring production drive.

Universally Speaking—

We have from above to below: Dorothy Phillips in "The Gorgeous Canary"; Priscilla Dean in "The Beautiful Beggar"; Monroe Salisbury in "The Phantom Melody," and Tsuru Aoki in "Locked Lips," all Big-U winners.

"The Westerners" Plays to S. R. O. in the Black Hills

IN the Benjamin B. Hampton production of Stewart Edward White's novel, "The Westerners," the little town of Rapid City has a role of considerable interest. Rapid City is in the main scene of the White story. When, after years of fame as a novel, the time came to make "The Westerners," Rapid City awaited the coming of the picture actors to take the local scenes on the spot. Once the production of the picture got under way in California last spring it was found that it would not be possible to make a fifteen hundred mile trip to Rapid City for the filming of the scenes, and more especially since the Dakotas were under a mantle of snow which the story did not call for.

Therefore the scenes were made in California and portions of the Dakotas were reported as sulking because they were ignored.

Week before last Mr. Hampton's production reached Rapid City, being booked through the Hodkinson Denver office and here is the message of E. W. Derthick, the manager of the Rapid City Auditorium, to the home office:

"I had to stop a S. R. O. run on 'The Westerners' because of my following booking which could not be displaced. People came from everywhere. The book, as you know, was written here. The critics and old timers here all say the characters depicted are perfect and not at all overdrawn. We are going to book 'The Westerners' here for a repeat engagement."

Metro Buys Screen Rights to "The Kiss Burglar"

METRO has purchased the screen rights to "The Kiss Burglar," a musical romance in two acts, with book and lyrics by Glen McDonough and music by Raymond Hubbel. Fay Bainter was starred in the original stage production at the Cohan Theatre in May, 1918, when it had a long and successful run on Broadway and later through the country.

"The Kiss Burglar" has a novel and original plot which makes its production for the screen highly desirable. The story is concerned with a fleeing American in Trieste who dashes in disguise into the bedroom of a Grand Duchess, is mistaken for a burglar and takes a kiss instead of diamonds. Later he returns to the United States and opens a divorce, alimony and breach of promise parlor.

It has not been decided whether the play will be used as a starring vehicle for May Allison or Viola Dana, but the former will probably be the choice.

Opens Theatre and Treats His Town.

When Santo Bonaventura opened his New Grand, Nashwauk, Minn., he hit upon the happy idea of treating the whole town. His house seats 500 and he gave free shows all the afternoon and evening.

Our fellow-worker, Senor Obregon, of Cine Mundial, Spanish edition of Moving Picture World, informs us that "Bonaventura" means, in Spanish, "good venture," "good luck" and all the things we'll bet Nashwaukans wished Showman Santo as they flocked in and out of his New Grand.

Universal Starts Big Sales Drive on Jewel Pictures Beginning February 1

CLOSE on the heels of Carl Laemmle's hint to "Watch Universal" comes the announcement of a concentrated sales drive, scheduled for February 1, on Jewel pictures. It has been frankly admitted by Universal officials that their company is out after a three million dollar increase in business for 1920. For a long time exchange managers were aware that something was in the wind and were momentarily awaiting its breaking.

The word has just gone forth to concentrate fire with Universal's big guns—Jewel pictures—for a period of two weeks. The sales offensive will be backed up by a simultaneous advertising and publicity campaign, also concentrating on Jewel productions.

Jewel will be the only word heard around Universal offices for the two week period beginning February 1. Jewel productions are Universal's superpictures. Expense is not taken into consideration as will be evidenced by the costly settings predominating these pictures. Time does not figure at all, it having taken five months to complete "The Virgin of Stamboul" Priscilla Dean's latest vehicle.

All Departments Aid.

In the two weeks of the Jewel drive every department of the Universal organization will be straining its power to push these pictures. The drive will include everything under the Jewel name, the most recent releases, future productions and the older pictures.

The advertising department will prepare copy exclusively Jewel for the drive. Every line of advertising that appears in any trade paper during this time will be exclusively Jewel. Efforts will be made to have as many Jewel pictures featured in newspaper advertising as is possible by concentration.

The publicity department will work hand in hand with the rest of the Universal organization in helping along the movement. The numerous press agents scattered about the country will all pay particular attention to getting Jewel pictures extra prominence while the home office will conduct a general campaign.

Burden Falls on Salesmen.

As this is primarily a sales drive the burden of work will fall on the salesmen. All other pictures will be pushed to the background for the fortnight while the salesmen are concentrating their efforts on Jewel bookings. They have been instructed to pay no attention to any other pictures whatsoever for the period. They are to talk and sell Jewel and nothing else.

This does not mean that if a customer asks particularly for any one of the Universal pictures other than a Jewel, that the request will be ignored. It does mean that the salesmen will not mention any other Universal picture of their own accord.

Anticipates Biggest Business.

Harry Berman, Universal's general manager of exchanges, is enthusiastic over the outcome of the drive. "We expect in this period," he said, "to secure the biggest volume of Jewel business since the inception of our company because we are going to back up our salesmen with a wide and strong campaign. Every page of trade paper advertising for these two weeks; every page in the Universal Weekly and every bit of publicity that emanates from this office will be on Jewel pictures. You can imagine for yourself what a smash this will be."

Selznick Pictures in Cutting Room.

The Selznick cutting rooms at the Fort Lee and Bronx studios are scenes of unusual activity in that five productions are now being worked on. Practically every one of the productions is scheduled for an early release.

Pictures being cut at Fort Lee are the Ralph Ince production, "His Wife's Money" in which Eugene O'Brien is starred, the Olive Thomas production, "Footlights and Shadows," and Elaine Hammerstein's next feature, "Greater Than Fame."

The Bronx cutting room contains the Owen Moore production "Sooner or Later" and the two-reel subject, "The Land of Opportunitq," in which Ralph Ince has the leading role. This Americanization picture will be ready for release during Lincoln Birthday week, February 8.

No, Agnes, This Isn't a News Reel Trip Through a Shad Factory.
It's a little real color from "The Silver Horde," Rex Beach's story for Goldwyn. And the horde, Agnes, is the salmon horde. Pretty good, eh?

Realart Pictures Given Week Runs in Providence

FOUR Realart pictures were run in six-day competition last week by four of the principal theatres in Providence, R. I.

"We believe this is the first time in the history of the motion picture business that one concern's products have held possession for a week of the leading houses of a city as large as Providence," says J. S. Woody, Realart's general manager.

First-run houses in Providence which featured Realart pictures during the same week were the Rialto, managed by William J. Mahoney; the Strand, Charles Williams, manager, and the Modern, of which Sol Braunig is manager. The Rialto showed "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production. "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," an Emile Chautard production, was shown at the Strand, and at the Modern the feature was Alice Brady in "The Fear Market." The Emery Theatre brought back "Ernstwhile Susan," Constance Binney's first Realart picture, to Providence.

"The Realart achievement in Providence," said J. C. Ragland, general sales manager for Realart, "does very nicely for a concern that is just making its first bow. We have released only five productions and we showed four of the five in one week. It really beats our Broadway record. But the principal point is that we have demonstrated Realart is making productions big enough to occupy the amusement centers of large cities along for a whole week."

Has South African Locale.

The South African veldt should be an ideal location for a photodramatic offering, inasmuch as the country offers wide expanses of scenic beauty, which, however, may be wonderfully duplicated in Southern California. For example, in "Thou Art the Man!" Robert Warwick's newest Paramount-Artcraft vehicle, the scenes are laid in South Africa and the incidents have to do with the illicit trade in diamonds.

The story is from the book by F. E. Mills Young, and the original title was "Myles Calthorope, I. D. B." These initials stand for "Illicit Diamond Buyer." Margaret Turnbull did the continuity and Thomas Heffron was specially engaged to direct. Lois Wilson is leading woman and Victor Ackland did the camera work.

Change in Release Dates.

Announcement is made from the Selznick offices of the change in the release dates of the two productions "Sooner or Later" and "His Wife's Money" starring Owen Moore.

"Sooner or Later" will be released on February 16 instead of February 9 as we announced, and "His Wife's Money," starring Eugene O'Brien, has been set back from February 16 to February 9.

Ruth Langston Has Big Role in Dempsey Serial

RUTH LANGSTON, who has an important role in "Daredevil Jack," the Pathe serial starring Jack Dempsey, has a record for hard work to thank for her present status in the film world. Miss Langston is a daughter of the Golden West. She began her career on the speaking stage, one of her engagements being in the New York production of "Sweet Kitty Bellairs."

She entered the films via the comedy reels, playing parts in Keystone comedies for the Triangle program. Then Miss Langston wanted to do serious roles and she met with success. She had a part in "Todd of the Times" and "The Green Van." In "Brothers Divided," a Frank Keenan production, Miss Langston played the leading feminine role. In this part she was so successful, that she was signed for the role of Mollie in "Daredevil Jack."

Begin Work on First of Selznick Bigger Pictures

THE wheels started to turn January 22 on the first of the new stories which Lewis J. Selznick, of Selznick Enterprises, purchased for production during 1920, and which brings to the screen the works of several well known authors. These subjects are produced under the supervision of Myron Selznick, head of the Selznick production work.

"The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes" is the name of the first of the stories to be started. With Elaine Hammerstein as star, this piece went into actual production at the Fort Lee studios, with George Archainbaud directing. It is possible, an announcement states, that the picture will be released under another title than that which it now has.

The author is Grace Sartwell Mason, and the continuity is by R. Cecil Smith. Elaine Hammerstein's latest Selznick picture is "The Woman Game," announced for release on February 23.

Kid McCoy in Cast.

Kid McCoy, the celebrated middleweight, handles the role of the French champion, who, by a strange coincidence, is Carpentier in Samuel Merwin's novel. Nigel Barrie plays the part of the American pugilist, Blink Moran, who pays court to Hilda.

"'The Honey Bee' is a photonovel that can be run before any audience of any class," adds Mr. Hutchinson. There is nothing depressing nor brutal in it, and comedy is delightfully interspersed with pathos. The picture is six reels in length. Rupert Julian is the director.

Many Prominent Players in Cast of Arthur Guy Empey's Special, "Oil"

THE complete cast assembled by Arthur Guy Empey and Director Wilfred North for the forthcoming Empey special production, "Oil," includes a dozen or more prominent film players who are acting in support of Mr. Empey and his co-star, Florence Evelyn Martin.

"Oil," which is both a drama of American business life and a comedy with very legitimate merriment throughout its length, has its scenes laid chiefly in the oil regions of the Southwest. The numerous characters portrayed represent the personnel which naturally would revolve about the operations which culminate in a fortune made in oil. It is by contrasting the well-known traits of American character and by depicting their natural reaction to the circumstances and incidents of the drama that Mr. Empey, who wrote the story from which William Addison Lathrop formed the continuity, has created his envelope of comedy through which the whole action of the piece is viewed.

Those in the Last.

Guy Empey plays the role of Bobby Walters, a young American son of fortune, who, when the story opens, is seen as a taxicab driver. Miss Martin plays opposite as a girl of good breeding who, nevertheless, through circumstances is serving as attendant at a cigar and news counter in a hotel.

The role of a newly rich women of the West is portrayed by Emily Fitzroy, while Louise Best takes the part of her daughter. Of importance are the roles of Mason and Slivers, two crooked oil promoters which are portrayed by Templer Saxe and William Eville respectively. Harry Burkhardt is the expert oil engineer and Denton Vane a get-rich-quick imitation of the same. Harry Lee, besides being Mr. Empey's studio manager, has a role of foreman at the site where an oil well is being filled. Louis Grizel and Victor Stewart are real estate agents. Chester Bishop is a Wall Street financier and Al Davis is his secretary. Maggie Weston and Edith Sherman have effective bits respectively as Bobby's housekeeper and Dorothy's mother.

Company to Go to Oil Fields

The last of the interior sets in the Empey production has been filmed and the company is preparing for an immediate trip to the southwestern oil fields where the shots on location will be made. Thomas F. Molloy, the first cameraman with "Oil," has obtained a number of unusual and beautiful effects during the last five weeks' work at the Paragon studio

Ask Early Hearing on Manners Suit.

A joint petition to advance the case for an early hearing has been filed with the United States Supreme Court by J. Hartley Manners and Oliver Morosco, in the case involving the picture rights of "Peg o' My Heart." Both parties have joined in this petition.

Early decision in this case is deemed important, because of the many questions arising in the courts out of disputes between authors of plays and producing managers of stage plays and producers of motion picture photoplays. The case is said to be one which will not require extended argument.

Eugene O'Brien Back from North.

Eugene O'Brien, film star in Selznick Pictures, who went with his company to the Thousand Islands recently to get exteriors for "A Fool and His Money," his next release, returned January 21 to New York.

"Manager Wanted" is an advertisement frequently appearing in The World's Classified department. Give it a try and better your position.

Big Ballroom Scene in Metro Film.

A "long shot" of 110 feet on an indoor setting was made in filming the military ball in "The Hope," the Drury Lane melodrama at the Metro studios in Hollywood. The action of the long shot really takes place in the camera's foreground, an alcove shut off from the dance floor by a hand-carved screen of East Indian hardwood. Through the screen's fantastic tracery the camera eyes a long vista where dancers whirl and jazz past and beyond a sparkling, slender column of water. The set takes up a floor space 90 by 60 feet, more than one-third of one of Metro's enclosed stages. It was designed by A. W. Alley and built under the direction of Alley and M. P. Staulcup, interior art supervisor.

Two Pictures Establish Nazimova in New England

THAT Nazimova in a surprisingly brief time has established herself as one of the most popular motion picture stars in New Zealand is evidenced by an unsolicited letter just received at the home office of Metro, from the motion picture editor of the Christchurch, N. Z. Sun. The writer, Isabel Basham, states that, although Nazimova thus far is known in New Zealand by but two productions, the merit of these is so great as instantly to win public recognition for her as a star of the first magnitude.

This contention is borne out, it is said, by the overwhelming popularity of the Russian actress that followed her appearance in two of her best known productions, namely "Revelation" and "Eye for Eye." The people of New Zealand were instantly captivated by Nazimova's art in the former of these, which tells the story of Joline, the French artist's model who finds her soul. This production was more than enough, the photoplay editor of the Sun stated, to proclaim Nazimova a "very great artist."

Nazimova's triumph in New Zealand was no less noteworthy upon the showing of her second picture, "Eye for Eye," in which she played the part of Hassouna, a Bedouin girl of the desert. This production confirmed the verdict passed on "Revelation," said the motion picture editor of the Sun.

Replica of Martin Johnson Scene Wins Prize in Philadelphia Parade

THE Martin Johnson series, "Cannibals of the South Seas," received additional exploitation in Philadelphia recently at a municipal parade and street demonstration. Contestants were forbidden to use any direct means of display, and prizes were offered for beauty of attraction and originality. Robertson-Cole salesmen in Philadelphia equipped this float with a scene from the South Sea Islands as portrayed in the Martin Johnson films. Characters to represent the men of the South Seas adorned the float.

The New Richmond Theatre at Richmond, Indiana, was opened with the Maurice Tourneur special "The Broken Butterfly," a Robertson-Cole release. This picture was selected after F. E. Mills, manager, had screened for him twenty-five of the best pictures released during the past year.

"Said Mr. Miller: "The weather was very stormy and we opened against several of the best first-run pictures of the year. Much to my surprise, we drew capacity houses and I wish to state that the production is one of the best box office attractions I have ever booked."

W. L. Whitehead, manager of the Republic Theatre at Jacksonville, Fla., has written to Robertson-Cole officials praising the manner in which "Beckoning Roads," starring Bessie Barriscale, attracted crowds to the Republic Theatre.

"It is a pleasure to stand by and hear the comments of the many people who witnessed the artistic work of Bessie Barriscale. It is wonderful picture—a real knockout."

In New York state last week four prints of "The Tong Man," starring Sessue Hayakawa, were used. In addition to the regular lobby display and of advertising and publicity, a tie-up was arranged between Chinese restaurant keepers and the exhibitors. This means of exploitation proved to be very effective.

Schenck Poses for "Victory" Statue.

A sculptor, a sculptor's model and a cartoonist—that's Earl Schenck, one of the screen's most prominent leading men, after the motion picture director calls it a day. Schenck, who is one of the principals in Augustus Thomas' "The Harvest Moon," a Deitrich-Beck production for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, starring Doris Kenyon, which, under the direction of J. Searle Dawley, is rapidly nearing completion at the Leah Baird studios, is devoting his evenings to posing for a statue of "Victory," by the French sculptor, Louis St. Lanne, which is to grace the front of Victory Hall in Pershing Square, New York. The actor came under the notice of the noted sculptor while appearing in the diverse roles of the Christ, Lafayette and the Crown Prince in "The Spirit of Lafayette."

Ruth Roland Begins Work on Second Pathe Serial

IMMEDIATELY upon the completion of her current Pathe serial, "The Adventures of Ruth," Ruth Roland, producer and star, started work on the second offering of Ruth Roland Serials, Inc., which has the title, "Broadway Bab."

Like "The Adventures of Ruth," "Broadway Bab" will see Miss Roland in the capacities of producer, star and supervising director. The first named serial was written by Gilson Willets, from a story by the star herself. "Broadway Bab" also is being put into continuity by Mr. Willets, but the story is by Johnston McCulley, author of "The Brute Breaker," a recent Frank Mayo picture, and also of a number of magazine stories.

"Broadway Bab" is a thrilling adventure story which gives Miss Roland every opportunity to display the daring and speed for which her serials are so popular. The complete cast will be announced shortly.

Two St. Louis Theatres Sold.

The Cella-Tate interests in the St. Louis Grand Opera House and Rialto have been acquired by a Delaware corporation, of concealed identity. It is reported that the purchasing corporation will go further into theatre purchases in the Middle West.

"What'llyuh Have—Strawb'ry or Vanilly?"

A line, fragrant with memory, that comes back in "The Fortune Hunter," in which Earle Williams stars for Vitagraph.

"Six Feet Four" Strong in Buffalo.

Everybody in Buffalo, N. Y., will see "Six Feet Four," and if they don't it won't be the fault of the exhibitors of that city nor of the "Flying A" salesmen. Manager E. D. Weinberg has contracted for this latest American western for a four-day run at the Strand, beginning January 11, and is expecting turnaway crowds. Following the Strand come the Regent, Elmwood, Plaza, Lincoln, Broadway, Filmore and Columbia.

Kathleen Norris Praises Screen Version of Story

KATHLEEN NORRIS, one of the best known American writers of novels of international interest, has given the filmed version of her story, "The Luck of Geraldine Laird," produced by B. B. Features with Bessie Barriscale as the star, some of the most flattering praise ever given a star by a writer. Mrs. Norris was one of the most reluctant novelists to get in screen work. Now she is one of the most enthusiastic.

In praise of the work which was done by Director Edward Sloman, Miss Barriscale and the large cast which supports her, Mrs. Norris said: "Of all my stories which have been put on the screen, this is the best. There was a time when I have felt that some stories suffered by adaption to the screen. In fact, for a long time I would not give permission for my novels to be picturized. But this picture, based on 'The Luck of Geraldine Laird,' forever converts me.

"To see it on the screen with such capable actors as have been chosen for the various parts moved me to cry and to laugh. Deeper emotions filled me than those which are induced by the printed page. If any of my stories of the past did not make such pictures as I had expected, all my regrets are wiped out by the fine artistry which is evident all through "The Luck of Geraldine Laird."

Will Soon Start Work on S-L Pictures for Metro

ARTHUR SAWYER and Herbert Lubin announce that the first of the five S-L productions with all-star casts to be made during 1920 for distribution through the Metro system of exchanges, will be started within the next two months. The plans of S-L Pictures, Inc., are being completed rapidly with the object of getting this first picture under way at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Meanwhile the S-L officials have opened negotiations for photoplay material. They state that they have two big Broadway stage successes under consideration. Selection of one or both of these vehicles will be made after Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have consulted with Richard A. Rowland. president of Metro. They expect to be able to announce the titles of the two plays under consideration in a few days.

Only successful stage plays or widely read novels by eminent auththors will be used in making the S-L Specials. This is the policy of Metro with regard to its own "fewer and better" pictures produced by Screen Classics, Inc.

Men Patrons Now Outnumber Women, Declares Herman Stern of Pittsburgh

A GREAT change has taken place in the matter of attendance at motion picture theatres," notes Herman Stern, manager of the Universal exchange in Pittsburgh, "men now having become the dominating element in the composition of audiences. This was forcibly brought home to me in visiting quite a number of towns recently in the Pittsburgh district. Where formerly there were two women to every man, there now are more masculines than feminines. This condition has undoubtedly been in process of formation for months, but has become more apparent within the past few weeks.

"Having noted this condition in every town I visited, the thought came to me that a change in the manner and matter of picture production would necessarily result. In other years the producer and director in making their selection of plays and in their treatment of them had focused in their minds the character of the audience that would view the finished article. This, it was known, was far more of a feminine than masculine persuasion. Those who had 'male' written after birth certificates, being greatly in the minority, were considered a negligible factor. Their tastes will now have to be considered, with their sex a larger box office factor than the opposite one."

"It will all react to the betterment of the industry, for it will make for better pictures. These will have to be strongly constructed and contain real stories. The ones of a makeshift nature will largely pass out of existence. As men have become of exceptional importance from a box-office viewpoint, so they ought to be viewed by the producers. Naturally, men are more familiar with many phases of life than are women; accordingly they are the more ready to detect anything which does not ring true. It will, therefore, come to pass that life will be the better and with more fidelity reflected on the screen."

Capitol Books Flynn Series.

The William J. Flynn series of two-reel motion pictures, from incidents in the career of the detective, will be shown at the Captitol Theatre, New York.

This announcement was made from the offices of Republic Distributing Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is advisory director, and which organization is distributing the series of eight pictures.

Although the play dates for the Flynn series have not been announced it is thought they will be given an early release in New York.

"Pollyanna" Booked by Loew for Three Weeks

ADDING to the impetus that "Pollyanna," Mary Pickford's first United Artists5 release, has received in the Middle West, comes the interesting announcement that the Euclid Theatre, the largest of the Marcus Loew theatres, in Cleveland, has booked the production for a run of three weeks.

All through the Middle West "Pollyanna" has been making a tremendous hit. In Chicago, Toledo, Columbus, Omaha and all the other large communities in that section, the critics, exhibitors and fans have been one hundred per cent. for the picture.

The Toledo Blade said of the picture that "Schools should be dismissed afternoons this week to permit youngsters to see this play. It'll do them more good than three hours of the three dry R's. 'Pollyanna' is the best 'kid' show yet produced," while the Toledo Times said, "Unquestionably Mary Pickford's best picture. 'Pollyanna' is one of the most delightful pictures we have seen in a long time"; while the Toledo News-Bee said, "Mary Pickford is thoroughly enjoyable in her role of 'Pollyanna.' We know of no one who could portray the part of 'Pollyanna' quite as well as Mary—she is admirably adequate to the part."

Rochester Showman Boosts Only Best of First-Runs

AS a means of raising the general standard of the productions to be included on the program of the Gordon Theatre at Rochester, N. Y., Manager William Shannon has announced that he will no longer be governed absolutely by the "first run" policy which heretofore has been rigidly adhered to at the Gordon.

"If the best productions came along regularly, one produced each week and one released each week," says Mr. Shannon in discussing the change in policy, "the best standard could be attained by only using first runs. The truth of the matter is, however, that a bunch of releases, every one of them top-notch, come at the same time, and unless a manager is able to book two or three of them for the same time they are no longer first run when he can arrange to have them on his program. Again a manager is not infallible. He may pass up a first class production, and then when he realizes his error in judgment the first run fetish prevents him from remedying his mistake.

"I have been one of the guilty ones," continued Mr. Shannon. "I have put on pictures which I have known to be inferior to others I could have booked merely because the inferior one was a first run. But no more. I am going to run first runs as fast as I can squeeze them in, if they are first class, and I intend to run every first class picture produced, whether it is first, second, third, fourth or sixth run, when I can make room on the program for it."

The premiere Constance Talmadge production for the First National Exhibitors Circuit, which has been booked for early in February, will inaugurate the new policy at the Gordon.

Lewis Stone Returns to Screen.

Lewis Stone, well-known stage and screen star, returns to the silent drama in Marshall Neilan's first independent release, "The River's End," by James Oliver Curwood. Mr. Stone has been appearing on the stage with considerable success and this will mark his first appearance on the screen in many months. In this production, Stone plays a dual role and some big double exposure photography is employed in order to get the correct interpretation.

Universal Program for February 9 Is Headed by "Rouge and Riches"

"ROUGE AND RICHES" tops the Universal release program for the week of February 9 as a special attraction. It is a five-reel production featuring Mary MacLaren under the direction of Harry Franklin. It is from the story "Myself, Becky" by W. Carey Wonderly which originally appeared in Live Stories Magazine.

"Rouge and Riches" is a satire on love and gives most intimate views of back stage life, that space behind the footlights which is always a source of mystery and interest to the uninitiated. A strong supporting cast is provided, including Marguerite Snow, Wallace MacDonald, Robert Walker, Lloyd Whitlock, Syn de Condo, Alberta Lee, Dorothy Abril, Harry Dunkinson and Helen Sullivan.

This week is an unusual one for the serials as it marks the final episode of one and the premiere of another. "The Great Radium Mystery" is solved in the eighteenth and last episode entitled "Liquid Flames."

"Doomed," the seventh instalment of "The Lion Man," featuring Kathleen O'Connor and Jack Perrin, is an unusually gripping release for the week.

Lincoln in New Serial.

Elmo Lincoln makes his opening appearance in the new Universal serial, "Elmo the Fearless," the episode being entitled "The Wreck of the Santiam."

Mrs. Joe Martin is implicated in another Universal release, this time being aided and abetted by one Jimmie Adams in a two-reel draught, "Over the Transom."

Broadway never retires without a Lyons and Moran puncture. This time Eddie and Lee give us a one-reel blowout of "Non-Skid Love."

"Kaintuck's Ward" is the title of the western picture offering of the week. Bob Burns and Pegg O'Dare add zest to this breezy, entertaining production.

The four Universal News releases, International, Hearst, Current Events and New Screen Magazine are not resting on past laurels but are continuing to improve each week and offer unusual picture news from every corner of the globe.

A Century comedy rounds out a well-balanced program, the wonder dog appearing in a two-reel film, "Good Little Brownie."

Washington and Baltimore Strong for Realart Films

POLITICS is just one of the big things stiring in Washington; the other being motion pictures, according to W. H. Rippard, Realart manager in the Capital, who paid a visit to the home offices January 28. With recent theatre construction, the National Capital now boasts some of the finest picture palaces in the country, and Washington's amusement sources are being taxed to their capacity to entertain.

Mr. Rippard states that there is a definite demand for the higher class of films and that Washington is developing into a highly sensitized barometer of picture conditions, drawing as it does audiences of an essentially cosmopolitan type. The appearance of Alice Brady in her first Realart production, "The Fear Market," was greeted enthusiastically by Washingtonians, according to Mr. Rippard, when the drama was presented at Tom Moore's Rialto Theatre.

"Soldiers of Fortune" Returned.

Such was the business done with "Soldiers of Fortune" when the film ran for three weeks at the Garden Theatre, that it has been re-engaged for the Crandall circuit of houses. The Mayflower picture had extensive exploitation during its premiere in Washington and that advertising was deemed sufficing to warrant a repeat.

In Baltimore, Mr. Rippard reports, "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" will have its opening at the Victoria Theatre. In that city, too, "Soldiers of Fortune" has found favor. The film is being brought back for a week's run after having played for two weeks at the Wizard Theatre.

Big "U" Begins Work on "Girl in the Mirror"

WORK on the latest Universal production, "The Girl in the Mirrir," has just been begun. This will be an elaborate production, with one of the finest casts Universal has ever assembled for a feature photodrama. Frank Mayo will take the leading role.

Jack Ford will have charge of the picture. The cast will include Harry Hilliard, Claire Anderson, Elinor Fair, Ray Ripley, Ruth Royce, Robert Bolder, Arthur Hoyt and Bull Montana.

"The Girl in the Mirror" is based on the popular novel of that name by Elizabeth Jordan, the scenario having been prepared by Philip Hurn. It is a story of fashionable New York, bordering on the artistic, literary and dramatic circles. The high plane in which the characters move does not detract in the least from the air of romance, mystery and tense situations with which the story abounds.

Ritchey Posters for Miss Minter.

The poster display for the latest Mary Miles Minter film are being made by the Ritchey Litho Corporation. The complete set will include a twenty-four sheet stand, the design for which is now finished. Those who have seen it and are competent to judge say that it will make one of the finest posters that ever advertised a photoploy.

Small Theatres Continue to Place Heavy Bookings for Pathe Subjects

WITHIN the last fortnight several hundred additional exhibitors have increased their bookings on Pathe subjects. During the first four weeks of the new year Pathe bookings and collections have touched a new record. This has been brought about in no small measure by heavy bookings from exhibitors who have taken the Pathe offerings for months in advance.

Pathe is particularly proud of its popularity among the smaller exhibitors.

"The Birth of a Soul" Is Latest Morey Release

HARRY T. MOREY'S latest feature, "The Birth of a Soul," is being released by Vitagraph. It is typically Moreyesque—one of those big out-door subjects in which Morey's robust figure and strong personality fits admirably. It's a story of the Cumberland mountains, far removed from modern civilization, where moonshine whiskey is considered legitimate and feuds still exist. The characters are all mountaineers.

Mr. Morey and his director, Edward L. Hollywood, and the supporting company went down to the moutains of North Carolina and made all the scenes of the picture there.

Mr. Morey had a strong supporting company. Jean Paige, who has gone to Vitagraph's West Coast studio to star in a new serial, is his leading woman. Others in the cast include Charles Eldridge, George Cooper, Charles Kent, Robert Gaillard, Walter Lewis and Bernard Siegel. Arthur Edwin Krows made the scenario, using the plot of a well known novel for his theme.

"Broken Melody" Breaks Record.

The Omaha, Seattle and Philadelphia branch offices of Selznick report a prosperous season and one marked with unusual activity. From Omaha comes the report that "The Broken Melody" established a record at the Garrick Theatre in Burlington, Iowa. All Selznick productions shown there are billed as specials and the Selznick trademark is used in all the local advertising.

Our Own Stories Best for Americanism, Says Kohn

MORRIS KOHN, president of Realart, has come out for picturization of national literature as the most effective way in which the industry can make permanent the work of the Americanization campaign launched by Secretary Lane.

"There is a real opportunity for the producers," says Mr. Kohn, "to dedicate motion pictures to the hightest type of patriotic and educational work without converting them into mere propaganda. In the libraries of the nation is a wealth of national literature which waits for adaptation to the screen. These books and plays hold the most convincing arguments for America, and portray in the most easily understood manner the true American character. This is the message which we American should be trying to get across to thousands of people among us, but not yet of us. 'The Birth of a Nation' was such a picture. So was 'The Crisis,' there are others such as 'Evangeline.'

"Realart is fortunate in having among its releases 'Soldiers of Fortune,' by Richard Harding Davis, adapted to the screen by Allan Dwan.

Effect of Such Pictures.

"Proof of the effectiveness of this type of American story was given recently at South Bethlehem, Pa., in the heart of the steel district, which is famous for its alien population and its industrial unrest. Charles R. Black, manager of the Palace Theatre, showed the picture, and such was the psychological effect upon his audience that he wrote to us about it and stressed particularly what he considered 'its moral effect as a patriotic picture of highest standard.'"

"Ye Editor" Becomes Exhibitor.

Out in Vollmer, Idaho, his duties as editor of the Lewis County Register fails to keep C. H. Martin busy enough to suit him. Hence his recent purchase from Mac Shoefield, of the Film Theatre.

Idaho news also includes the purchase of the Troy moving picture theatre by Eph Otterbein.

Hallor Production in Weber Series.

"Children of Destiny" is to be one of the first of the series of twelve Edith Hallor productions being made by the Weber Productions for Republic releases, according to a recent announcement. Edward J. Montague wrote the scenario.

Charles L. Fletcher to Edit "Topical Editor"

ANNOUNCEMENT is made of the formation of the Topical Humor Film Company to produce "The Topical Editor," a half reel made up of the humor of the day compiled from many sources, to which is added original comments. Charles Leonard Fletcher is at the head of the new company and will edit the newest thing in this field.

That the new laugh-maker will be far different from any previous efforts in this line is made clear at the outset by Mr. Fletcher, who will show a few feet of motion pictures to further enhance the feature on the screen.

Associated with Mr. Fletcher in the new company is Lawrence Alvin Urbach, who for several years was a member of the advertising staff of Exhibitor's Trade Review, and prior to that was on the staff of Motion Picture News.

Definite announcement of a plan for release of the "Topical Editor" will be made shortly.

When Mr. Fletcher was a young man he was a reporter on the Boston Globe for seven years. He then went on the stage, playing with the popular actors and actresses of the day in Shakespearean repertoire. After six years he went into vaudeville, in which field he remained twenty-one years as a headliner, billed as a monologue comedian. He played the Keith time, and made two world tours.

In 1916 Mr. Fletcher presented as an original idea in vaudeville an act called 'Silent Comments on Timely Topics." In 1917-1918 Mr. Fletcher plunged into war work with the Y. M. C. A. Late in 1918 he revived his screen topics, and from May, 1919, to January, 1920, he edited the Literary Digest's "Topics of the Day" for Timely Films, Inc. Mr. Fletcher resigned from Timely Films, Inc., on January 17, last, and at once formed his new company.

Goldwyn Signs Popular Comedian.

"Scratch My Back," a comedy by Rupert Hughes, which Goldwyn is producing at its Culver City studios, has had an addition to its cast. T. Roy Barnes, vaudeville and musical comedy star, will be numbered in the company, which already, includes Cullen Landis, who distinguished himself in "The Girl from the Outside," a gripping Rex Beach drama of the frozen North.

T. Roy Barnes is one of the best known variety entertainers in the country. His act, in which he played the part of a book-agent of the most insistent kind, one who wouldn't take "no" for an answer, is among the most popular of vaudeville turns.

To Start Work Soon on Half Dozen Productions at the Lasky Studios

WITH six new productions, including the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "Held by the Enemy" and Cecil B. De Mille's new special which will follow "Why Change Your Wife?" in immediate contemplation, activity at the Lasky studio promises no abatement for some time to come.

Following the completion of "Mrs. Temple's Telegram," on which he is now working, Bryant Washburn will begin "The Sins of St. Anthony," a Saturday Evening Post story, for which Elmer Harris is writing the scenario. James Cruze will direct.

Wallace Reid has completed his new Paramount-Artcraft Picture, "The Dancin' Fool" under Sam Wood's direction, and will shortly begin work with the same director in the farce comedy, "Sick-Abed," scenario for which is by Clara G. Kennedy. Bebe Danlies will again appear as leading woman for the star, and the roles afforded both Mr. Reid and Miss Danlies will undoubtedly prove highly pleasing. "Sick-ABed" was one of the most popular of the metropolitan plays of a season or two ago.

Crisp to Start on New Play.

The much heralded production of the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "Held by the Enemy," under the direction of Donald Crisp, will be started soon at the Lasky Studio. Among those who will appear in the leading parts are Jack Holt, Wanda Hawley, Lewis Stone, Agnes Ayres, Robert Cain and Walter Hiers. The production is to be elaborate in the extreme, with scenic backgrounds of great effectiveness and with the greatest attention to detail and historical accuracy. Beulah Marie Dix wrote the scenario.

Melford Goes to the Sierras.

George Melford has taken his producing company, headed by Roscoe Arbuckle, the star, to a distant location in the Sierras for exterior scenes of "The Round-Up." The company expects to be gone for at least three weeks and during that time will secure important cattle ranch scenes and the fight situations in which Apache Indians and cow punchers, as well as U. S. Cavalry are concerned. Tom Forman is author of the scenario and also plays an important role.

De Mille Working on "Prince Chap."

William De Mille is in the midst of his artistic production "The Prince Chap," with Thomas Meighan and a strong cast interpreting the roles. This play by Edward Peple, promises to be a delightful entertainment. The scenario was written by Olga Printzlau, who being an artist, found herself at home in the depiction of scenes dealing with the artists' quarter of Soho, London. Among others in the cast are Lila Lee, Kathlyn Williams, Theodore Kosloff, Ann Forest, Casson Ferguson, May Giracci, and Peaches Jackson.

Thomas Heffron has finished "Thou Are the Man!" with Robert Warwick as the star, and will shortly begin work with the same star on another picture for Paramount-Artcraft, entitled, "The City of Masks," scenario for which is by Walter Woods. Lois Wilson, it is understood, will be leading woman for Warwick in this new production.

Charles Maigne is progressing with "The Fighting Chance," a Paramount-Artcraft Special from Robert W. Chambers' story, with scenario by Will M. Ritchey.

Walter Edwards is still at work on Ethel Clayton's Paramount-Artcraft picture, "A Lady in Love," scenario for which is by Alice Eyton. Upon its completion he will make another picture with Ethel Clayton as the star, entitled, "The Ladder," Edith Kennedy being the author of the scenario.

A book store tie-up is also under way with Andrew Soutar's novel, "Other Men's Shoes," from which the picturization was made. The author is widely known both here and abroad through his literary work and his epics of the Great War which were written by Mr. Soutar when he was on the Russian front.

Pathe announces the following advertising aids for the production: one sheet; special one sheet; two styles three-sheet; six-sheet; twenty-four sheet; set of colored lobby displays; two styles 22x28 colored scene; one, two and three col. ad cuts and mats; one-col. and two-col. star cuts and mats; scene cut; title slub; set of black and whites; campaign book; press sheet; announcement slide; window card.

Enter Drop-Ins, Exit Fans

From the Kansas City Post.

WITH the passing of the saloon all over the country men are taking to the movies more than ever before and women shoppers long ago discovered that the movie manager caters to the "drop-in" spirit.

Summed up: In the semi-darkness of the movie house is balm for the soul weary as well as for the leg weary, a safe retreat where one may think and for the hour forget there is such thing as trouble. Even astute millionaires, engrossed in sordid "go-after-the-dollar-and-grab-it" chase, have been known to slide into a movie house for an hour or so of peaceful reflection. Wholly without regard to the merit of the picture, and come out dyed in the wool fans.

Yes, the world moves. So does the picture game.

Corinne Griffith Resting.

Corinne Griffith, one of the most indefatigable workers at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio, is taking a brief but enforced rest while the cast is being assembled for her next feature, "The Memento," based on one of O. Henry's short stories. Two men provided the scenario, Lucien Hubbard writing the "small town" scenes and Graham Baker arranging the action, which takes place in a large city. Their work has been completed, and great care is being taken in selecting the cast. Miss Griffith, however, has a feature awaiting release. This is "Deadline at Eleven," a newspaper story by Ruth Byers.

McCormick Hires Zimmerer as Art Director of Circle

ANOTHER notable advance in the world of showmanship has just been made by S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, by the engagement of Frank J. Zimmerer, one of the most distinguished of the new school of stage decorative artists, as art director for the theatre.

In music, pictures and stage embellishments, the Circle has been regarded as the leading theatre in the Middle West, and in order that even more serious consideration can be given to the artistic presentation of elaborate prologues and stage settings, the engagement of Mr. Zimmerer was made. The new art director will execute the stage settings and decorative effects and, with Mr. McCormick, will produce the various tableaux, ballets and stage features in the future.

The work of Mr. Zimmerer is already well known to Indianapolis theatregoers, a few of his stage decorations having been presented at the Circle at different times during the last year. His work first came to the attention of the Indianapolis public during his engagement with the Stuart Walker Company during the company's first season in the Hoosier capital.

Mr. Zimmerer just recently returned from Europe, where he went to observe the methods of the new theatre movement in Paris and Glasgow and also to confer with Lord Dunsany. Mr. Zimmerer was the first decorative artist to create the settings for the Dunsany plays in America. The famous Irish dramatist had never seen any of the productions and Mr. Zimmerer's sketches of settings and costumes so appealed to him that they are now framed and hang in the Dunsany castle in County Meath, Ireland.

Rothacker Leaves for The Coast.

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, left for Los Angeles on January 27 to get construction started on the Los Angeles laboratory, the site for which has already been purchased. Full announcements in regard to the location of the site will be made to the trade later.

While on the coast Mr. Rothacker will make tentative arrangements for the production of a six-reel feature, which he will personally present to the trade. He has already secured the story for the picture, having purchased the motion picture rights to a popular novel.

Omaha Showman Induces Pershing To Attend "Soldiers of Fortune"

GENERAL JOHN J. PERSHING occupied a box in the Sun Theatre, Omaha, last week to witness "Soldiers of Fortune," the Allan Dwan production. The famous soldier's visit came in response to the invitation of Harry Goldberg, live wire showman, who learned that his home town was next on General Pershing's itinerary and who decided that the visit would be incomplete without a view of the American adventure story.

A telegram was dispatched to headquarters of the Pershing party in Lincoln, Neb. Here is the message:

"General John J. Pershing, the Greatest Soldier of Fortune.

"We herewith extend to you a most cordial invitation to visit the Sun Theatre when you are in Omaha on January 8 for we earnestly desire that you see the picturization of the Richard Harding Davis immortal classic, 'Soldiers of Fortune.' We feel quite sure that this epic of the screen will appeal to you not only because it has made history in the annals of literature and the stage, but also because it typifies the principles of clean two-fisted Americanism and chivalry for which you stand."

Persuaded City Fathers.

Through one of General Pershing's aides came a response which was not over-encouraging, but which spurred Mr. Goldberg on to put through his ambitious plans. Acceptance of the invitation depended upon consequent arrangements to be made by the city authorities when the Pershing entourage appeared in Omaha, according to the telegram.

Did Mr. Goldberg come to the conclusion that it was a rather impossibly big stunt to get one of the most famous soldiers of the world to come to his theatre and witness the current attraction? If he felt that way, he didn't show it in his activities with the city authorities, persuading them that the general really ought to see the picturization of Davis' great novel.

General Pershing came to the theatre, accompanied by a formidable staff. Crowds gathered. Photographers got busy. And the newspapers quite naturally gave the Sun Theatre liberal publicity.

"It is fine entertainment," General Pershing told Mr. Goldberg, "and the battle scenes are excellent."

After the picture had been shown Mr. Goldberg had no trouble in inducing General Pershing to stand in front of a welcoming, home-made three-sheet to be photographed. The general was very busy and there were no gaps in his schedule, but "Soldiers of Fortune" had compensated in advance for the delay.

Sidney Olcott Signed to Direct for Goldwyn

SYDNEY OLCOTT, who started directing at the very beginning of motion pictures, and has come to be recognized as one of the foremost experts at his craft, has been placed under contract by Goldwyn. He will be assigned immediately to the making of one of Goldwyn's big feature productions.

Mr. Olcott has enjoyed a long and successful career as a director of motion pictures, starting with the Kalem Company after he had profited by considerable stage experience in this country and Canada. "From the Manger to the Cross," a multiple-reel production that still remains a classic of its type, was made by Director Olcott with a company of player that he took to the Holy Land in order to secure the proper settings. This was the first pretentious production of a serious nature to be made by an American director.

National Picture Theatres Loses Suit to Enjoin Foundation Film

THE application made by the National Picture Theatres, Inc., to enjoin the Foundation Film Corporation from distributing a screen dramatization of "The Torrent," under the title of "The Blindness of Youth," was denied by Judge Knox in the United States District Court, New York, on January 26.

Judge Knox ruled that in view of the fact that Lou Tellegen, co-author and star in the spoken drama entitled "Blind Youth," is in no way associated with the proposed cinema dramatization of that play by the National Picture Theatres, Inc., the latter company is not entitled to a preliminary injunction restraining the Foundation Film Corporation from using the title adopted.

The National Picture Theatres, Inc., contended that the exhibition of the cinema dramatization of "The Torrent" under the title of "The Blindness of Youth" would mislead the public and persons would attend the performances of the photoplay under the misapprehension that it was a screen version of "Blind Youth."

Text of Opinion.

The opinion of Judge Knox is in part as follows:

"In the first place it must be borne in mind that the picture which the defendant is about to produce is entitled 'The Blindness of Youth,' whilst the rights of the complainant are those which attach to the title of a play known as 'Blind Youth.'

"The latter, in the spoken drama, acquired whatever reputation it enjoys, in whole, or certainly in large part, by reason of the fact that one Lou Tellegen, said to be an actor of great and worldwide reputation and exceptional ability, played the leading role.

"There is no allegation that this actor is to participate in the picture to be produced by the complainant under the name of 'Blind Youth'; nor is there suggestion that the defendant's picture, 'The Blindness of Youth,' will in any particular, attempt to pirate plot, theme, action or motif of the play which Tellegen helped to write, and in which he acted. If this were true an entirely different case would be presented.

Actor Rather Than Play.

"As the litigation stands, I am unable to find that, disassociated from the name of Lou Tellegen, there is in the production of a moving picture drama named 'The Blindness of Youth' such a degree of unfair competition as would justify my interposition by way of injunction.

"The names of plays, in the absence of the names of the actors who vitalized them, are, I think, for the most part tenuous, and with few exceptions we remember the actor rather than the names of vehicles in which they rode to fame.

"There will be attached to this somewhat different name none of the reflected reputation or creative genius of Lou Tellegen, nor of his histrionic ability and effort, and I cannot but feel that the persons who will be deceived as to the play and its origin through the similarity of name will be so few as to be negligible."

Judge Knox held further that there is no property right in the use of the title, "Blind Youth," which entitles the owners of the motion picture rights to the drama to injunctive relief preventing rival film companies from using similar titles.

Refused Further Modification.

The Foundation Film Corporation originally adopted the title of "The Blind Youth," but changed the title at the request of the National Picture Theatres, Inc., to avoid and confusion which might arise from the use of a title so similar to that of the Willard Mack-Tellegen drama.

The modification of the title did not satisfy the National Picture Theatres, Inc., and the court action was resorted to when the Foundation Film Corporation refused to make any further concessions in the matter, contending that the photoplay is being released and widely advertised as an adaptation of the French drama entitled "The Torrent," by M. C. Herber, and could not be confused with "Blind Youth."

Harry Bugie Leaves Atlanta.

Harry A. Bugie, manager of Pathe's Atlanta exchange for two years, has resigned to become sales manager for Dwyer Brothers' Company of Cincinnati. His resignation took effect on February 1. Mr. Bugie was one of the most popular managers in the territory. He is a charter member of the Film Exchange Managers' Association of Atlanta and has been one of its most active members. A host of friends regret his departure from Atlanta and wish him success in his new position.

If Hotels Are Crowded, Why Buy a $200,000 Home

IF you cannot obtain a room in a hotel, buy a $200,000 home. That's what William Farnum did in Hollywood. Advices recently received at the home offices of Fox Film Corporation announced that the star, disgusted at the crowded condition of Los Angeles hotels, had bought a twenty-room mansion atop Santa Monica mountains, overlooking Los Angeles, Hollywood, Tacalina and the Pacific Ocean. Not only did the estate cost the figure quoted above, but the purchase price was paid in cash.

Included with the house are seven acres of orchard and garden, which will enable the star to raise all his own oranges, pecans and vegetables. An inveterate outdoor man, Mr. Farnum now may be seen each evening, after work in the studios, wielding the hoe on the grounds of his new home.

Mr. Farnum recently completed "The Adventurer" in the East and went to the Pacific Coast with his company to begin work on "The Orphan," adapted from Clarence E. Mulford's novel of western life. He found Los Angeles suffering from a shortage of hotel rooms just as is New York. The star himself obtained comfortable quarters, but several of the executive members of his company were not so fortunate.

Some kind soul called Mr. Farnum's attention to the fact that the big mansion he had passed many times in his automobile and had so often admired could be purchased. The price did not feaze Mr. Farnum. He announced to his executives that they could have rooms with him and they moved into their new quarters with great glee.

New Circle, Ottumwa, Iowa, Opens.

On January 19, Ottumwa gave to the southern section of Iowa the finest moving picture theatre it has ever possessed. The Circle, costing around $100,000, was opened on that date with highly gratifying results forcasting a splendid future for house and management.

Brief News Paragraph About Equity Players

A NUMBER of new personalities on the Equity roster are now located at the Garson studio, Edendale, Cal. Adele Rowland is visiting her husband, Conway Tearle, who is being starred in "Michael and His Lost Angel," which Equity will release early in March.

Jack Boland, for years associated with various of the big producing concerns, is assisting Director John Voshell on the Tearle picture, while Helene Sullivan, last seen in "The Brat" and "The Bird of Paradise," is engaged for the role of Angela Bryton in "The Soul of Rafael" in support of Miss Young.

Rosemary Theby is at the plant, appearing opposite Tearle, and Hal Wilson is permanently located with Garson as one of the character men.

Sam Sothern and Milla Davenport are also stationed at the studio. Sarah Ellis Ryan is a daily visitor, assisting the technical staff on its atmospheric work in preparation for the production of her story, "The Soul of Rafael."

"Fortune Hunter" in Seven Parts.

"The Fortune Hunter," the next Earle Williams Vitagraph feature to be released, will be shown in seven reels. Graham Baker, who made the scenario from the comedy by Winchell Smith, found such a wealth of good material, fine points and humorous situations the limitations of the spoken stage would not permit of showing, that he did not limit himself in making the working script.

Tom Terriss, who directed the picture in a masterly way, found all the action indicated by the scenario writer pertinent to the picture and attempted no cuts.

Order That New Front and the Pipe Organ; Here Comes Dr. Shallenberger

TAKING the exhibitor of America out of the slavery and shackles has become almost as popular with big producers as the floating of a weekly million dollar corporation. This liberation usually takes place in the New York home offices after the return from a cross-continent trip, but according to Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, the exhibitor of America wants to know when this liberating business is coming to an end, so that he may have the town contractor come around and fix up his theatre with a new front.

Don't Know Where They Stand.

Dr. Shallenberger has just returned from one of those famous cross-country tours himself, and although not wishing to rush in with a rescue act, he nevertheless states that there are thousands of exhibitors in this country who cannot tell the town contractor to come around with a barrel or so of plaster and paint because they do not know where they stand.

"The exhibitor wants to 'get things fixed up' and progress, but with million dollar organizations being talked of every day like mere trifles, the cost of which he knows he must stand, and with faction after faction entering the field to gobble him up, it's no wonder he's sitting as tight as possible."

Such was the introductory line given the Moving Picture World representative by Mr. Shallenberger in the "home office."

Want Pictures—Not Money.

"This industry doesn't need capital," continued Dr. Shallenberger. "It needs pictures. I grant that it takes capital to produce pictures, but I can't see by the average quality of pictures that these great wagonloads of capital are going into production.

"On my trip I found the independent exchanges in the healthiest financial condition possible. These exchages do not want money: they want pictures. And, as you might guess, Arrow Film Corporation is going to do its best to supply that need. Just this morning I concluded a contract for twelve five-reel productions to be delivered to exhibitors one a month—these to be added to our already strong list.

"But looking at the independent field in a general way, I'm firm in the conviction that it will be the safety valve for both producer and exhibitor. The independent market will save the producer because the big producer who is now fighting for theatres will look to independent picture makers to supply his houses rather than book films from a rival theatre grabber.

"And the independent field will save the exhibitor because it will be the only source of supply outside of the big monopolists, all trying to drive him out of the business by financial discouragement.

"The big producers are afraid of the independent market. They try their best not to let a good picture be distributed by independents. It is their object to disable the independents by buying all pictures of worth. But as far as this organization is concerned, they cannot succeed.

"Arrow Film Corporation doesn't need a headline reorganization or a tremendous new capitalization. It has all the money it needs.

"It is my opinion that the independent market man is the saviour of the exhibitor. And while I decry all this 'saving' business, I nevertheless intend touring this country again, starting within the next few weeks. And I'm going to do my best to get the exhibitor to believe that the really independent service is the service for him."

Looks like there were going to be a lot of new fronts and pipe organs ordered in the near future. REILLY.

Arthur S. Kane Signs Charles Ray; First National to Release Pictures

CHARLES RAY is the first big asset which the newly formed Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation presents to the motion picture industry. The news of the tie-up between this prominent figure in the producing business and one of the most popular stars of the screen follows closely the announcement last week of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation at 452 Fifth avenue, New York.

By arrangements with Mr. Kane all the pictures of Ray will be released through First National under the terms of a deal made a year ago..

The Kane corporation will handle Mr. Ray's business with the releasing concern and will supervise every New York activity of the star. Books, plays and other screen material to be purchased for Mr. Ray's use will be contracted for through the Kane offices.

The news of the union of Charles Ray and Arthur S. Kane received distinctly favorable comment from observers of the picture business. Great things were freely predicted from this combination of talent, and the coincidence was pointed out that the lovable character which Charles Ray has established on the American screen is typified in the industry by the character and record of the producer who will henceforth sponsor his work.

The new affiliation of Charles Ray has brought to attention the remarkable position which this star has created for himself in the industry. Mr. Ray is commonly accredited as being one of the very biggest actors on the screen, and indications are that his growth as a box office attraction will establish him more and more in the front rank of motion picture players.

In aligning his interests with this fast moving box office asset it was considered that Mr. Kane had accomplished a masterstroke at the outset of his enterprise.

It is learned that negotiations to bring the former president of Realart and the First National star together were started weeks ago. It was expected to close arrangements in New York about December 1 last. It was finally considered best to settle matters in personal conference, and this was the principal reason for Mr. Kane's recent five weeks' trip to the Coast.

"I am more happy than I can tell," said Mr. Ray in a statement given by him in Los Angeles. "For years I have watched Mr. Kane's career. I look forward to most pleasant years in the associations now beginning."

"There is not a person in motion pictures whose association I would prize more than Mr. Ray's," said Mr. Kane. "He is a wonderful artist, a top man among stars and a power at the box office. His appeal is universal. Some stars are highly popular in certain sections, but not in such great demand in others. A few are liked everywhere. Charles Ray is one of the universal kind. The appeal of his humanness is as wide as humanity itself. And he's going up."

"Desert Gold" Does Big Business in Jackson, Mich.

W. S. McLAREN, proprietor of the Majestic Theatre, Jackson, Mich., had every reason last week for pronouncing Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold," "the picture sensation of the year," a term he used in all his newspaper advertising and publicity notices, for, according to Mr. McLaren, never in all his long career as a showman has a production equaled the attendance mark set by the Hodkinson release at the Majestic. Holding crowds by the hundreds in lines stretching to the curb was the Herculean task that confronted the McLaren staff at almost every performance of "Desert Gold."

For two weeks before the opening of the performance the Majestic management, through newspaper and billboard teaser ads, set picture lovers of Jackson and its environs agog for a sight of the production. Three days before the first presentation Mr. McLaren had half page ads in the local daily.

Mr. McLaren took advantage of the bookshop link-up, with the result that the four big Jackson bookshops gave up show windows for the entire run of "Desert Gold" to effective advertising displays that assisted materially in drawing crowds to the Majestic. In addition two of the big music stores on the main streets co-operated by running a special sale of the ballad, "Desert Gold."

Goldwyn Pictures Boost Lyric's Matinee Business

W. S. CROSBIE, manager of the Lyrice Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., is reputed to be one of the most astute showmen in the state, but for some unaccountable reason he found that his matinee business was falling off. The Keith vaudeville presented at the Lyric was as good as ever, but the manager decided that he must introduce something new to revive interest in the afternoon shows. Such was the condition last December when Mr. Crosbie concluded to try out Goldwyn pictures as a special matinee attraction.

He selected four productions for the test, "The Girl from Outside," "Jinx," "Strictly Confidential" and "Almost a Husband," and then proceeded to let his patrons know that in addition to vaudeville they were going to see high-class photoplays. Receipts took such a jump that Mr. Crosbie did not stop with the fourth picture. He went on to the fifth and sixth, and indications are that Goldwyn pictures are going to be a permanent feature of the matinee program at the Lyric.

Houses Shelve Other Films to Present "Desert Gold"

ANOTHER group of first run exhibitors is reported by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to have signed contracts for Benjamin B. Hampton's Zane Grey production, "Desert Gold," within the past few days. These include Frank L. Newman's Royal, Newman and Regent theatres in Kansas City; G. A. Bush's Superba and a chain of subsidiary houses in San Diego, Cal.; James Beatt's house in San Jose and C. W. Midgely's American in Oakland.

"Desert Gold," now in its twelfth week of national release, is said to be doing a larger business now than at any time since its release, the volume of contracts now coming in being larger than for any previous period. Following its successful engagements at the New York and Brooklyn Strand theatres, "Desert Gold" has been booked in the United Booking Office chain of theatres in New York and Brooklyn, in the Poli Pennsylvania houses, and a group of fifty Texas exhibitors this week signed contracts for immediate playing dates throughout the southwest.

"The Beloved Cheater" Is Booked by the Loew Circuit

GASNIER'S "The Beloved Cheater," starring Lew Cody, released as a Robertson-Cole special, has been booked for the entire Loew's Circuit of theatres in Greater New York.

The Lyric Theatre, Hoboken, N. J., and the New Rochelle Theatre, New Rochelle, will also play "The Beloved Cheater" the week of March 8.

In signing this contract, Robertson-Cole officials were assured by the Loew management that this attraction would be widely advertised in Greater New York. An extensive billboard display, in addition to one and three sheets in and about the subway, together with magazine and newspaper advertising, will be used in obtaining for "The Beloved Cheater" a 100 per cent. run in the Loew houses.

Sweet Pictures Breaking Records.

Although "Fighting Cressy" was released several weeks after "A Woman of Pleasure," the two Blanche Sweet productions are running each other a close race each week both in the volume of business and the record prices being offered for the films. The most optimistic expectations of the Pathe Exchange have been exceeded and the demand for the two pictures is taken as an indication of the remarkable popularity of the return of Blanche Sweet.

Megargee to Paint "Round-Up" Titles.

Lon Megargee, known as the "cowboy artist," who has himself punched cattle and ridden with the herd in Arizona, Colorado, Nevada and elsewhere, and who specializes on paintings on the order of Remington, Borein, etc., but whose work has a quality all its own, has been engaged to paint special illustrated titles for "The Round-Up," George Melford's production for Paramount Artcraft, starring Roscoe Arbuckle. Power of Visualization as Outlined by Galton

FRANCIS HOLLEY, director of the Bureau of Commercial Economics, in the Department of Public Instruction, Washington, sends to the Moving Picture World a quotation from Sir Francis Galton, which statement the director uncovered during one of his periodical excursions among the books of the Congressional Library. The excerpt is entitled "The Power of Visualization," and is herewith reprinted. We are sure our readers will agree with Mr. Holley it is worth it:

"The free action of a vivid visualizing faculty is of much importance in connection with the higher processes of generalized thought. A visual image is the most perfect form of mental representation wherever the shape, position and relations of objects in space are concerned. The best workmen are those who visualize the whole of what they propose to do before they take a tool in their hands. Strategists, artists of all denominations, physicists who contrive new experiments, and, in short, all who do not follow routine, have need of it. The pleasure its use can afford is immense.

"I have many correspondents who say that the delight of recalling beautiful scenery and great works of art is the highest that they know; they carry whole picture galleries in their minds. Our bookish and wordy education tends to repress this valuable gift of nature. A faculty that is of importance in all technical and artistic occupations, that gives accuracy to our perceptions, and justice to our generalizations, is starved by lazy disuse, instead of being cultivated judiciously in such a way as will, on the whole, bring the best return. I believe that a serious study of the best means of developing and utilizing this faculty, without prejudice to the practice of abstract thought in symbols, is one of the many pressing desiderata in the yet unformed science of education."

Spanish Noblemen Visit Studio.

Two Spanish noblemen of note, Marquis de Pons and his uncle, Marquis de Villavieja, visited the West Coast studio of Famous Players-Lasky recently and spent an entire afternoon watching production work. The two distinguished visitors have extensive interests in Mexico and are making a tour of the United States en route home.

The filming of a big lawn fete scene for "A Lady in Love," Ethel Clayton's newest Paramount Artcraft picture, was especially interesting to the visitors.

Neilan's "The River's End" Will Be Released on Publicity Wave

MARSHALL NEILAN'S initial independent production, "The River's End," is an adaptation of one of the most widely advertised novels during the past two months. The book by James Oliver Curwood is now getting wide exploitation in newspapers and magazines throughout the country and the film will be released when the crest of this publicity has been reached.

The Marshall Neilan publicity department has effected a tie-up with the publishers whereby the latter will include in all advertising copy concerning the book a prominent mention of Mr. Neilan's film. In addition to this an initial order of 100,000 book marks is now in work. These book marks present a cut of Mr. Neilan with an advertisement on the photoplay and will be included in the daily shipments of different books. These book marks will also be supplied gratis to exhibitors who can imprint them on the back and use them as souvenirs or in connection with local book dealers, public libraries, etc.

Recent advertising placed by the publishers include full page advertisements in seventeen of the largest newspapers in the country, quarter page advertisements in a half dozen important papers and full page advertisement in the largest national magazines.

Pearson Succeeds Quimby As Pathe's Exchange Head

STILL another fulfillment of the Pathe policy to promote efficient men from the ranks to vacancies "higher up" comes to light in the appointment of Elmer R. Pearson to the position of director of exchanges, made vacant by the resignation of Fred C. Quimby. Mr. Pearson is advanced to the position from his former station as feature sales manager, an office he has held since last June.

When Fred C. Quimby resigned to become general manager of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., a move that takes effect January 31, Paul Brunet immediately designated Mr. Pearson to fill the vacancy. Mr. Brunet simultaneously promoted to the position of features sales manager Phil Ryan, who has been Mr. Pearson's assistant in the department of sales.

E. R. Pearson

Mr. Pearson told a representative of Moving Picture World that there would be no further changes in the Pathe exchange or sales organization. "Mr. Ryan takes my place and I take Mr. Quimby's place," said he. "The Pathe sales organization registers so high in general efficiency that there could be no changes made for any sufficient reason."

Pearson Has Fine Record.

"We all know what is to be done and will go ahead and do it," may be taken as a digest of Mr. Pearson's enthusiastic comments as he steps higher up and into greater responsibilities. His record in film distribution and salesmanship is long and creditable, beginning with General Film.

He was with Pathe in Omaha, as branch manager, in 1914, transferring variously to management for George Kleine, Essanay, V. L. S. E., and First National in cities that include Kansas City, St. Louis and Chicago. With Kleine and Esanay he was general sales manager and his acquaintance embraces showmen throughout the country, as his travels have taken him practically everywhere.

Mr. Pearson came with Pathe last June from Minneapolis and St. Paul, where he was manager of First National's branch interests. He immediately assumed the position of Pathe's feature sales manager, which he now vacates to become director of exchanges.

"Cinema Murder" Smashing Records.

The record-breaking pace which Cosmopolitan Productions, "The Cinema Murder," set for itself when it smashed all attendance records of the Rialto and the Rivoli theatres, New York, during its engagement the week before last at the former house, continued with its engagement last week at B. S. Moss' Broadway. On Sunday, January 25, the opening day, it drew over 9,000 paid admissions and hundreds were turned away for lack of accommodation. The business held up throughout the week.

"Cosmopolitan Productions are to be congratulated," said B. S. Moss, "upon having turned out a photoplay of such entraordinary interest and appeal. Because of the exceptional combination of star, author, and director—Marion Davies, E. Phillips Oppenheim, and George D. Baker—we had anticipated big business at the Broadway. But our expectations were far exceeded."

Vitagraph to Release "Juggernaut."

"The Juggernaut" will be the first of a series of five Anita Stewart features to be released by Vitagraph during the first six months of the present year. It is a stirring play, with a realistic railroad wreck as the big thrill, and has been edited by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester. It will be shown next month.

Capitol Begins Choral School and Forty-Five-Minute Opera in English

EDWARD BOWES, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, New York, clarifies the atmosphere in relation to the approaching expansion of policy at "the largest theatre in the world" in a statement just issued that sets at rest numerous rumors.

There will be no radical change of policy and no deviation from the fundamental principal that the motion picture is the basic unit of all programs presented at the Capitol. On the other hand, a development and expansion of its original idea of presenting motion pictures with elaborate stage features is to go into effect, with operatic novelties as the complement to photoplays.

Instead of according these productions "runs" of several weeks or extending into months, as has been done in the past, each will be limited to a single week and there will be a complete change of bill every Sunday. The acquisition of adjoining property for studios, workships and stage purposes has made possible the immediate realization of plans that were entertained for the future when the big theatre opened.

Opera in English.

Managing Director Bowes' statement follows:

"Commencing Sunday, February 1, the Capitol will enter upon an elaboration of its producing policy that will place it in an institutional class in which it will stand alone, without a rival in the world. Taking a step forward from the musical revue with which we have been feeling our way, we shall present musical features of a higher type as the complement to motion pictures, leaning heavily toward operatic works.

"It is not meant by the latter that we will encroach upon the field now occupied by the opera companies giving a full evening's entertainment by presenting condensed versions of the works they stage. Complete works that may be presented within forty-five minutes or an hour at most, new operatic works and musical novelties in the field of ballet, and pantomime and undertakings of harmonious character offer a field that is at present neglected.

"Insofar as is possible, these works will be sung in English. It is felt that aside from the interest that such a course commands, it will have a great educational value and in addition will afford both an outlet and an inspiration for native composers and librettists.

Big Singing Ensemble.

"A singing ensemble of seventy-six voices, every individual a carefully trained soloist, has been organized and is in rehearsal for our first production. The first work selected is 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' which will be presented for the first time in operatic form. S. Coleridge Taylor's beautiful musical setting for Longfellow's immortal poem has been staged al fresco with splendid choral organizations, but there is no record of it having been done in any theatre as we shall present it. A splendid cast of principals, a huge singing ensemble, pantomime and a spectacular scenic investitute and a symphony orchestra of eighty pieces will combine to lend charm to the work.

"Nathaniel Finston, conductor of the Capitol symphony orchestra, has been gladdened by the addition of ten musicians to his already large organization as the first step in approaching the work we have in hand. William G. Stewart, our new stage director, and a practical, experienced operatic singer, coach and director, has been given carte blanche in the preparation of the production. John Wenger, the impressionistic painter and our art director, has been accorded the widest latitude in expressing himself in the stage decorations.

To Train Promising Voices.

"Following 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' we will present 'The Enchanted Crystal,' a very elaborate ballet with pantomime and the singing ensemble, and we have in preparation a one-act opera by Tschaikowsky that has never hitherto been presented on any stage.

"In order to bring out and encourage undeveloped native talent, the Capitol is establishing a choral training society and will invite to membership young men and women possessing voices of promise. Auditions will be held every Tuesday in the auditorium of the theatre. Auditions can be secured by candidates by communicating with me by mail setting forth their qualifications."

Newspaper Folk Eat with Fox's "Her Elephant Man"

SHIRLEY MASON'S first screen production for Fox Film Corporation received its formal intrdouction to the press on the afternoon of January 23, in the East Ball Room of the Hotel Commodore, New York, before a gathering of reviewers from all trade papers, New York dailies, fan magazines and special service writers. Mingling with the motion picture folk were many members of the Barnum & Bailey circus, Ringling Brothers shows, several members of the United States Navy, Marine Corps and Naval Aviation Service.

The setting for the introductory showing of "Her Elephant Man" was indeed a novel one, and was arranged by Wells Hawks, veteran publicity man, of the Fox staff. Mr. Hawks knows the circus, circus life and circus atmosphere, and the stage setting—for such it really was—inspired the guests with the circus spirit.

The table was set to resemble a ring in the big top, with one end open to allow room for a little toy circus surrounded by palms—this lending a fitting effect to the whole picture. The floor of the hotel ballroom was covered with sawdust; and there was pink lemonade, and peanuts galore. Unique favors lined the table in the form of animal cut-outs fixed to blocks of wood for stands. By the time the luncheon was started every diner in the big room had surrended himself or herself to the spirit of the occasion.

As added attraction to the "big show," Lew Graham, dean of circus announcers, who was master of ceremonies, introduced Harry Clemings, circus clown; Captain George Auger, the Cardiff giant, and Zip, the "What Is It?" Zip's speech was received with resounding applause.

The guest of honor was Mrs. Pearl Doles Bell, author of several successful novels, among which is "Her Elephant Man," the book from which the Fox production was made. Mrs. Bell, in turn, introduced Bird Millman, queen of the high wire, as the inspiration for her novel.

The luncheon ended, the ballroom was darkened, the picture was flashed on the screen and the result is reviewed elsewhere in this issue. The circus scenes were especially effective and correct in detail.

Charles Bass in Chicago Hospital.

News comes from Chicago that Charles Bass, president of the Bass Camera Company, is a patient in Grant Hospital. Mr. Bass was stricken with appendicitis and is now recovering from what promises to be an entirely successful operation.

"Facts and Follies" Force Doubled.

Because of the success of the "Facts and Follies" series of one-reel comedies, Bernard Macfaden and Pioneer have concluded to double the personnel and production organization.

Dale Henshaw will direct company No. 1 and Ralph Whiteing will have company No. 2. Both, with their companies, left New York for Jacksonville a few days ago and are now in the first stages of their initial productions.

John S. Reilly has been appointed personal representative of Mr. Macfaden. Mr. Reilly, with headquarters in New York, will be in charge of "Facts and Follies."

Kremer Film Features, Inc., Moves to Larger Quarters

VICTOR KREMER Film Features, Inc., will during the current week move to the Leavitt Building, at 130 West Forty-sixth street, where it will occupy 2,500 square feet of space, or half a floor. In addition to large offices for Victor Kremer, J. Shenfield, secretary, and Bert Ennis, director of advertising and publicity, arrangements have been made to equip a large projection room, which will be used to screen for buyers of the various productions which Kremer controls, among which are five Chaplin comedies and several features starring Henry Walthal, Bryant Washburn, Jack Gardner, Broncho Billy, etc.

Among other features of the new Kremer offices will be film vaults, shipping department and a reception room. A stenographer will be available at all times to serve the out-of-town state right man.

The moving of the Kremer organization to these large quarters marks a big growth in a short time, as Mr. Kremer only entered the New York field during the past year. The Chaplin pictures have been already distributed for more than fifty per cent. of this country and Canada, and with the additional features which Kremer will exploit and market during the next twelve months, he bids fair to become one of the leading independent distributors.

Scenic Splendor Promised for "The Harvest Moon"

AN eye-feast of scenic splendor is promised in connection with Dietrich Beck's "The Harvest Moon," starring Doris Kenyon, a forthcoming W. W. Hodkinson release, nearing completion, under the management of J. Searle Dawley.

Beautiful exteriors taken in the frost covered country of the Adirondacks are said to be dwarfed by the gorgeous interior settings.

The studio was recently transformed into a home of wealth, seven rooms and a gorgeous ballroom with a heavily carpeted staircase. A striking feature of the dining room was two rare andirons and a bronze fern centre dish, valued at $30,000, which formerly graced George J. Gould's palace at Lakewood, N. J. Supporting Miss Kenyon, besides George Lessey and Marie Shotwell, are Wilfred Lytell, Stuart Robson, Earl Schenck, Peter Lang and Grace Barton, forming an efficient company.

Hypnotism Not Mysterious Power, Says Scientist and Picture Star

WHAT do you mean—the evils of hypnotism?" repeated J. Robert Pauline, the hypnotist and star of the new Reeve and Grey serial, "The Mystery Mind," which deals with hypnotism and its power for the good of humanity. "You might as well ask me about the evils of modern surgery or any science of which our forefathers knew little or nothing."

Dr. Pauline is one of the leading scientists giving public demonstrations of hypnosis and for the past six months he has been busily engaged in the making of "The Mystery Mind" at the Supreme Pictures studio in Flushing, L. I. He has made hypnosis a life study, as did his father before him, and barring a few scientists there is no one better able to demonstrate hypnosis.

"Twenty-five years ago the lay world shrieked about the evils of surgery," Dr. Pauline continued, "but surgery went on improving. Today, when research and practice have proved the value of hypnotism in disease, the layman still howls, this time about the evils of hypnotism. Why don't they investigate the good it does?

"To one who knows the history of hypnotism, the theory that hypnotism is a mysterious power possessed by a chosen few is irritating. There is nothing mysterious about hypnotism. It is a science, as capable of being reduced to basic principles as anesthesia. The statement that physiology and therapeutics have nothing in common with hypnosis is made either through ignorance or a deliberate intent to mislead the public.

"I am not a pupil of the great Charcot's methods and of Bernheim's, two men who were bitterly opposed in their beliefs regarding hypnotism, yet both used it for good, not for evil. And both men strongly insisted that animal magnetism, mesmeric clairvoyance, electrobiology, etc., were all ungrounded, save insofar as they covered the facts of hypnosis proper.

"No one can be hypnotized against his will. The first and sole essential condition of the hypnotist is exclusive, passive attention to him or to the subject he indicates. Witness the difficulty of hypnotizing the weak-minded and insane. That they can be taught to concentrate is proved by the fact that some of our best hospitals now have psychopathic wards where hypnotism is used continuously in treating cases of mental derangement.

"Every college now has its chair of psychology and a course of psychotherapeutics which, in plain English, means hypnotism. And any sane, open-minded investigator will find that hypnosis does more good and is used more for good than for evil in the world."

Exchange Managers Form F.I.L.M. Club in New Haven

Vitagraph's New Exchange Building in Dallas Represents $250,000 Outlay

THE contract for the Vitagraph Building in Dallas was let and construction has already been started. The cost of this new block in the business section of Dallas will approximate $250,000. The structure will be of brick and marble, two stories in height and will cover a space of 50 by 100 feet.

Big increase in Vitagraph's business has made necessary either new quarters or greatly enlarged old quarters in nearly every one of their exchange cities. Vitagraph's business of today in several of its branch offices is more than three times what it was a year ago. Reports compiled for the week ending January 3 showed that Vitagraph pictures were exhibited in 9,740 theatres in the country during that week and 672 theatres in the Dominion of Canada.

The exchange is expected to be ready for occupancy in March. The building will be located on Commerce street, between St. Paul and Bryan streets, almost directly across the street from the exchange's present quarters. The main structure will be of reinforced concrete throughout.

The ground floor front will present a decorative exterior of plate glass and ornamental marble. The second story and side walls are to be of pressed brick.

Has Big Projection Room.

The structure will have hot water heating system and a sprinkler system. Several spacious fireproof vaults are to be built on each floor. On the second floor there will be a projection room, 15 by 30 feet in size.

The new quarters in Seattle also make up a part of the chapter of broad expansion in the company's distributing affairs. The new Seattle quarters will take the place of a structure which was itself a specially built film exchange. The old quarters were long regarded as among the most modern used in the West for film exchange purposes.

The last six-month period has been an unusually intensive one in Vitagraph's construction and enlarging era. During this period Vitagraph opened new branches at many points and greatly enlarged several of its old exchanges. New branches were established at Albany and Buffalo. Moves to larger quarters were made in Philadelphia. At Washington an extensive enlargement was made of the old structure on Eleventh street.

A notable feature of Vitagraph's elaborate branch at Denver is the projection room for the use of exhibitors.

New Orleans Branch Expands.

Vitagraph's New Orleans branch recently moved from the old building on Carondelet street to a newer and larger three-story building at 420 Camp street.

Vitagraph's Kansas City force moves to i's new office this week. Its new space is more than three times that of the old Vitagraph exchange building in that city.

Vitagraph's progress has been speedier than the discovery of new buildings to house all of its new branches, and negotiations are now under way for new buildings in Chicago, Cleveland, Omaha and a few smaller exchange centers.

Fawcett Directs Dorothy Gish.

George Fawcett, one of the most popular actors of the stage and screen, and for a number of years chief character actor in D. W. Griffith productions, has been loaned by Mr. Griffith to Dorothy Gish to direct "Her Majesty," a forthcoming Paramount Artcraft production, starring Miss Gish. Among those engaged for principal parts are William Riley Hatch, Ralph Graves, George A. Siegmann and Marie Burke.

Manager Praises American Film.

John G. Gregory, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Springfield, Ohio, echoes the story which the "Flying A" managers have become well accustomed to hearing of late, when he writes:

"'Six Feet Four' is the best western picture we have shown for a long time, and the comments of the people who have seen it strengthen this opinion. Speaking from the box office standpoint, we did an exceptional business, it being just a question of a few dollars to begin a record breaking run."

Charles Watson Recovers from Serious Injuries

THE many friends of Charles Watson, president and general manager of the Novograph Film Corporation, will be relieved to hear that he is recovering rapidly from injuries received on January 6 when, while preparing to take "Analysis of Motion" pictures in Staten Island, he slipped on the icy ground and fell.

It was about thirty minutes later that Mr. Watson recovered consciousness. He insisted that the work proceed, despite the urging of H. G. Mason, director of production, that he be taken to a hospital. He was taken to a shack, where a fire was built. There he remained from 11:30 a. m. to 4 p. m., unable to maintain other than a standing position because of pain.

Mr. Watson was taken by automobile to his home. An examination revealed three broken ribs, a dislocated shoulder and sprained ligaments in his back. A few days later pleuro-pneumonia developed. Mr. Watson has now shown marked improvement and it is hoped that he will be up and about within ten days. His pluck in remaining on location to direct the work, although severely injured, is but one of the many examples of the determination of motion picture men to get what they go after.

Schomer-Ross to Make "Non-Censorable" Films

IT is announced as the policy of Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., to make and offer state right buyers and exhibitors, clean, strongly dramatic pictures which, according to Agnes Egan Cobb, state rights sales representative of the company, will be "non-censorable"—that is, "so carefully and cleverly made that there will be nothing for the censor to object to." Well-known stars and good box-office types will be selected, and the utmost care used to suit the exhibitor whose aim is to attract to his theatre a class of people who love clean pictures with human heart-interest stories, well acted.

The first release is "The Sacred Flame," starring Emily Stevens, and it is announced that the paper prepared for this production is striking without being sensational. A nation-wide publicity plan will be promoted, and Mrs. Cobb will shortly tour the country in the interest of the production.

Ministers Base Theme for Sermons on Mary Pickford's "Pollyanna"

THREE different ministers here yesterday took 'Pollyanna' as their text for sermons. Ran first reel of picture in one church. Picture breaking all records at Clune's Auditorium." This was the message received by Hiram Abrams, of United Artists Corporation, this week from one of the company's representatives in Los Angeles.

When "Pollyanna" was first published in book form, persons of all trades and professions gave it exceptional popularity, for it became the theme of continual discussions. At that time the publishers report there were over 1,000 ministers in as many pulpits who delivered "Pollyanna" sermons. Afterward, when in play form, the story again attracted public attention; editorial writers and critics enthused over its philosophy, and now again, with the advent of this story in motion pictures, with Mary Pickford in the title role, the same unusual interest is being manifested.

Prescribes "Pollyanna" Treatment.

Probably one of the most enthusiastic believers in the philosophy of the "glad girl," and one who has heralded his belief broadcast from his pulpit and also in printed form, is Rabbi Joseph Krauskopf, D. D., of the Temple Keneseth Israel, of Philadelphia. In a discussion on "The Pollyanna Treatment" in his church, Rabbi Krauskopf said, among other things: "In every church there are people who are in need of treatment. There are people who are drugging themselves with all sorts of medicine, who need nothing but a new viewpoint of life, a new comprehension of the power of happiness that is within themselves and in others, a new knowledge of how to find the bright side even under the darkest trial, of how to effect regeneration through words of cheer and encouragement, of how to generate a spirit of resignation, even of gladness, through the thought that, sore as the affliction is, hard as is the deprivation, it could have been much worse.

"What they need is the Pollyanna treatment.

"Let them take that treatment, and, no matter how deep-rooted their real or fancied troubles, no matter how many the attempted cures that have failed, no matter how joyless or hopeless or helpless their outlook seems, their dark horizon will gradually brighten, and, in time, it will standt out resplendent in all the colors of the rainbow.

"I prescribe the Polyanna treatment because of a firm conviction that, were it generally taken, it would cure society of a thousand ills by which it is afflicted, and that were the treatment to be consistently kept up, it could come nearer than any other agency has thus far succeeded in making our earth a paradise."

Other "Pollyanna" Sermons.

Other ministers who have delivered sermons on "Pollyanna" are the Rev. Joseph Herson, of the Scott Methodist Episcopal Church, of Philadelphia; the Rev. H. W. Block, of Fox Chase, Philadelphia; the Rev. Rutger Dox, of the Tioga Baptist Church, of Philadelphia; the Rev. John A. Goodfeller, of Philadelphia; the Rev. T. E. Bierbauer, of St. Andrew's Lutheran Church, of Philadelphia; the Rev. Howard Preston McHenry, of Philadelphia; the Rev. Cole, of the Knoxville Christian Church of Pittsburgh; the Rev. Ferguson, of the Bellevue Christian Church of Pittsburgh, and the Rev. Fulton, of the Swiss Vale United Presbyterian Church of Pittsburgh.

Kaufman Given Desk Set on Leaving Famous Players

IN appreciation of his long and loyal service to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the officers and directors of the corporation Tuesday afternoon, January 20, presented a beautiful silver desk set to Albert A. Kaufman, who recently resigned his connection with the corporation to enter the field of independent producers. Mr. Kaufman was one of the original officers and organizers of the Famous Players Film Company and a director in the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The desk set consisted of thirteen pieces, each piece bearing Mr. Kaufman's monogram, and on the tray was this inscription:

"To Albert A. Kaufman from the Officers and Directors of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in appreciation of his long and loyal service. January 20, 1920."

Following the presentation by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the corporation in charge of producing, Mr. Kaufman made a few remarks in which he expressed his gratitude for the gift and also for the many kindnesses which he had received from the officers and directors of the company.

"Behind the gift of silver," he said, "I know is a thought of gold. I want to thank you all very, very much—and especially Mr. Lasky, for what he did for me last week. There was conference after conference, and through it all Mr. Lasky was very patient and made me many offers to stay—some of them more than reasonable. But although I appreciate everything he did, and the rest of you did for me, I could not accept those offers, because I want to go out and see what I can do for myself."

Those at the presentation of the gift, besides Mr. Kaufman and Mr. Lasky, were Adolph Zukor, president of the corporation; Arthur S. Friend, treasurer; Elek J. Rudwigh, general counsel; H. D. H. Connick, chairman of the finance committee; Emil E. Shauer, general manager of the foreign department, Frank Meyer and Ralph Kohn.

Million Dollar Firm in List of Incorporations

SIX concerns, one of which is capitalized at a million dollars, filed papers of incorporation in New York during the past week, for the purpose of entering into the motion picture business. Wentworth, Beulah Livingston and Edward S. Brophy, all of New York. Other concerns incorporating are Photolife, $25,000, D. P. and B. F. Howells and H. T. Clark, New York; Howells Cine Equipment, $50,000, with J P. and B. F. Howells and Joseph C. Hornstein; Arthur S. Kane Pictures, $5,000, A. S. Kane, F. Lipnick and D. Fitzmaurice's "On With the Dance," Given Big Exploitation in Dayton

ONE of the most remarkable exploitation campaigns ever conducted in advance of the showing of a motion picture roused Dayton, O., last week for the world premiere of "On with the Dance," the first George Fitzmaurice production for Paramount Artcraft, with Mae Murray and David Powell in the leading roles. The picture opened Sunday, January 25, at the Columbia Theatre, for a week's engagement, to crowds which Manager Charles Gross reports greatly exceeded those which attended the openings of Cecil B. De Mille's "Male and Female" and "Everywoman," two Paramount Artcraft specials which have established the previous records for the house.

The week before the opening an exploitation man from the home office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation went to Dayton and placed himself at the disposal of Mr. Gross. Then the exploitation man and Mr. Gross sat down and mapped out a campaign of publicity which would carry the message of "On with the Dance" to everybody in Dayton and its suburbs.

It was decided to make the biggest play through the medium of newspaper publicity, so the exploitation man immediately got in touch with W. K. Mathews, Sunday editor of the Dayton Journal. They decided to publish, as the feature of the Sunday Journal, a three-color ten-page section entirely devoted to the production and its various features.

The front page of the "On with the Dance" section carried an artistic layout of scenes from the picture, combined with three-color art work. The back page was devoted to a three-color full-page advertisement of the theatre and picture.

Carried Ads of Local Firms.

The inside pages carried advertisements of local firms, each advertisement featuring the title of the picture and carrying one or more pictures of Mae Murray. Only page and half-page advertisements were admitted.

In addition to the regular billboard paper, yellow and black "snipes" carrying the words "On with the Dance" and a solhouette figure of Mae Murray as the dancing girl were used freely. A phonograph company showed an "On with the Dance" window featuring the song "Patches" which was used as the musical setting for one of the dance episodes in the picture. The banjo orchestra in the grill of the leading hotel also featured this tune, using a card tie it up with the picture. Another hotel displayed a frame with stills from the picture.

A large piano store arranged one of its windows as a stage and for twenty minutes each afternoon and evening a dancing girl did several special numbers.

Large cutouts of Mae Murray and David Powell and a banner announcing the picture were displayed on the front of the theatre.

The luncheon was planned by Charles Rosenzweig, sales manager for Universal feature subjects, and had as its guest of honor E. H. Goldstein of the executive sales staff of Universal.

The film business for 1919 was reviewed and the expected increase for 1920 dwelt on by the speakers, among whom were George Uffner, W. C. Herrman, Phil Hodes; Fred E. Baer, Nat Goldberg, L. I. Kutinsky and J. Weinstein.

Among the other guests were E. DeCosta, Dave Brill, J. W. Holden, George Hoffman, Charles Timin, C. A. Gordon, Herman Goldman L. B. Sherwood, S. A. Rogers, M. B. Fisher, Leo Abrams, S. Abrams, Arthur Gould, Sidney Schwartz, L. Jacobs Joe Friedman and Phil Winnick.

"Mary Minds Her Business" an "America First" Film

THE first of the National Film Corporation of America series of productions to carry a message of reconstruction will be "Mary Minds Her Business," by George Weston.

The story is based on the attempt of a girl to operate a large industrial plant, which she has fallen heir to. After several labor demonstrations, a misunderstanding between her family and sweetheart, and other difficulties, "Mary" arranges her business to suit herself. Her method is so novel, her volunteer helps legion, that "Mary" outwits her enemies in short order.

"Mary Minds Her Business" is one of the most interesting and intensively American stories I have ever read," states Capt. Harry M. Rubey, president of the National. The production is a seven-part adaptation by Mildred Considine.

Feist Compliments Head of Goldwyn's Kansas Office

FELIX F. FEIST, vice-president and manager of sales of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, now on a tour of the country, reached Kansas City, Tuesday morning, January 13.

A meeting of the salesmen held Wednesday morning was attended by P. A. Bloch, manager of the Kansas City exchange; W. C. Ansell, salesman for Kansas; W. D. Singleton, salesman for Missouri, and R. C. Gary, press and service representative for the Kansas territory. After the business of the Kansas City office had been analyzed, Mr. Feist complimented Mr. Bloch and his associates on what had been accomplished and received assurances that a still more aggressive campaign will be carried on during 1920.

Thursday morning Mr. Feist and Mr. Bloch visited the building at Seventeenth and Main streets, which, on its completion about March 1, will be the new home of the Goldwyn Exchange. The Goldwyn offices will occupy the entire sixth floor.

Semon's Next Is "The Grocery Clerk."

Larry Semon has completed another of his comedies. This new one is called "The Grocery Clerk," and it will be released by Vitagraph some time next month.

"The Grocery Clerk" is the first comedy made by Semon since he entered into the new contract with Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph. The new comedy has been staged as expansively as any superfeature.

Picker to Open New Theatre.

Early in February will see the opening of a most spacious and beautiful picture house on Broadway at 159th and 160th streets, New York.

The Rio will be the name of the new house. It is splendidly situated and equipped, has a capacity of nearly 3,000 and will be operated at popular prices, with smoking allowed in the boxes and loges, and will open with a bi-weekly policy. Alfred de Manby will be director in chief of the Rio. Edwin Mocsary is to be house manager.

Sydney Cohen Puts It Up to Henry Ford and His Weekly

HERE'S a real estate owner and landlord who wants his rent reduced. That move would make history in realty circles, but the rent of films being in question transfers the "history" into another class.

Ford's Educational Weekly is asking $52 a year from exhibitors. Sydney S. Cohen is president of the New York State Exhibitors organization, an exhibitor himself, and to that effect has written Henry Ford, declaring that the said film weekly is straight advertising.

Mr. Cohen has received a reply from a Ford representative who sets forth the unselfish motives of the great motor magnate and adds that, on behalf of Mr. Ford, discussions and adjudications of the matter will be in order when Blair McElroy reaches Manhattan from Detroit.

Irwin Compliments Lehr.

Wallace Irwin, author of "The Blooming Angel," the story recently completed by Goldwyn, with Madge Kennedy as the star, has written a letter to Vice President Abraham Lehr at the Goldwyn Culver City studios, praising the production given his work in the highest terms. In common with many other authors, Mr. Irwin has had unfortunate experiences with picture producers who have taken liberties with his stories, and he expressed himself as being delighted with the spirit of co-operation shown by everyone in the Goldwyn organization connected with the filming of "The Blooming Angel."

Jerome Safron Goes to Detroit.

Jerome Safron has been appointed branch manager of the Detroit office of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation by A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice president and general manager. He was previously branch manager of the Albany, N. Y., office of the same company and his work there was responsible for his promotion. He was a salesman working through the Philadelphia territory of the old Mutual Corporation and was transferred by that company to Albany as branch manager, prior to his connection with Robertson-Cole.

Has Your Theatre a House Organ? No?—You're Missing a Good Thing

THE advertising forces of the Strand and the Rialto theatres in Omaha, Neb., have combined and formed the Consolidated Publishing Company for the purpose of issuing the semi-monthly Rialto Mirror and Strand Screenings, two of the best house organs in the middle west. The reasons given in the first issue of the Screenings for the existence of the magazines may be summed up as arguments to some exhibitors why they should have house organs. The announcement, made to advertisers, says:

"The Rialto Mirror and Strand Screenings are issued twice monthly. They are not simply cut and dried programs of the pictures shown, but snappy magazines containing interesting data and facts regarding coming attractions at both the Strand and Rialto theatres, besides a continued story from the pen of one of America's most widely known writers, Mary Roberts Rinehart.

Popularity Established.

"That these magazines are taken home and read is proven conclusively by the fact that the theatre management, running short of magazines one issue, instructed the janitors to pick up and turn in all magazines they could find on the floors of the theatres every night, but only ten or twelve could be found out of thousands distributed.

"The public is far more interested in moving picture doings than in any other form of amusement, as can easily be determined by checking up the seating capacity of the various movie theatres compared with those of any other class.

"Why not place your proposition before the thousands of movie-goers through an attractive ad. in the Rialto Mirror and the Strand Screenings?"

In the first issue of Screenings, Manager Harry Watts, of the Strand, announces he will give $5 for the best letter he gets before February 1 telling "What I would do to make this theatre more successful than it is now."

Besides the "dope" on pictures, the continued story, jokes and other usual features, the magazaines use a page of women's fashions. The magazines are sent to a selected mailing list and are distributed to patrons who come to the theatres. Each has a circulation of several thousand.

Southern Hostelry Has Modern Projection Room

ONE of the best examples of non-theatrical Simplex installation is that contained in the Green Briers Hotel, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., according to John Krulish of the equipment department of the Simplex factory. By the installation of three complete motor-driven Simplex projectors in a large, well-equipped projection room in the balcony of the ballroom, the hotel management has met the desire of its guests for modern entertainment. Here every evening, first class features are run off in a manner that outdoes many large city theatres. These shows precede dancing every evening and there is no admision charge for them.

White Sulphur Springs is one of the best known summer resorts of the South, numbering among its clientele guests of international importance. Green Briers Hotel, ideally located, is regarded as the last word in American hostelries.

The contract for the Simplexes was closed with the Hollis-Smith-Morton Company of Pittsburgh, by W. B. Hines, under whose management the screen program is given at the hotel.

Theatre Near Columbus Circle.

The property fronting on Eighth Avenue, between Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth streets, New York, has been leased from the Astor estate by Edward Margolis, who has been concerned in building several theatres in the Times Square district. The property leased by Margolis is four blocks south of Columbus Circle, where the Park Theatre is situated. Plans have been drawn for a theatre building, but whether the new house will be devoted to "movies" or the drama is not stated.

The neighborhood immediately surrounding the property is densely settled with rooming houses and apartment buildings. Subway stations are near and three surface lines are accessible, together with "L" roads handy. But the theatre will never fall in the "Times Square" class.

Theatre Magazine Twenty Years Old.

The Theatre Magazine will celebrate its twentieth birthday on May 1. The publishers, Louis and Paul Meyer, who founded the publication, will celebrate their twenty years of successful publication by the introduction of an innovation in the style and contents of their May issue, principally in so far as it will contain a history of the stage since 1900; several hundred full page portraits of the most noted stars of the stage and screen, in beautiful colors and duotone rotagravure and biographies of those representatives of the amusement world.

Death of Mrs. Schlesinger.

Mrs. Schlesinger was in her eightieth year. The interment was in Philadelphia, following funeral services at her late residence. Mr. Schlesinger has been the recipient of messages of condolence from his host of friends, within the motion picture industry as well as out of it.

Fox Plans Revival of Six De Luxe Specials, "Made" Box-Office Cards

WITH every accessory, all paper, press sheets and other exploitation aids prepared and ready for distribution, William Fox announces that Fox Film Corporation is planning a monster revival of six big special productions which have been found surpassingly popular as box-office drawing cards throughout the world.

These six de luxe specials comprise "Les Miserables," "Salome," "The Honor System," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Cleopatra" and "A Daughter of the Gods." Nothing whatever has been said about this move of the producer until the present time. Now it is learned from the Fox executive offices that a sufficient number of these prints, renovated and absolutely the same in every respect as when first introduced to the screen, is on hand to cover the entire country.

The reason given for reviving these big special Fox successes is that exhibitors in all parts of the world have reported them to possess such unusual drawing power as to justify their periodical use, on the same plan by which the speaking stage revives its acknowledged successes.

Release in February.

In bringing out these revivals, Mr. Fox has caused to be published a complete and efficient press sheet for each production, designed on the most up-to-the-minute lines and prepared to aid the busiest theatre man in his advertising and exploitation. There is a profusion of splendid cuts, mats, ad copies and stunt suggestions and a powerful array of paper.

With everything new—prints, paper, accessories and suggestions—the entire Fox organization is clearing its decks for action. A big national campaign will take in every Fox exchange in North America. February is the month in which William Fox will release these specials.

Reports from the nearby Fox exchanges, including the New York exchange, which, incidentally, is enlarging its quarters in the building at 130 West Forty-sixth street, indicate a market eager for these revivals. Many metropolitan exhibitors and suburban theatre men have closed with the exchange for February showings, and each day shows new business listed against one or the other of the six big pictures.

Build Elaborate Set for Eugene O'Brien's Production

ONE of the largest and most elaborate interior sets ever constructed for pictures is now being built at the Selznick Fort Lee studio for the interior scenes of Eugene O'Brien's new picture, "A Fool and His Money."

The set requires three fourths of the studio floor space, and includes the great hall and library of an ancient feudal castle of the Swiss Tyrols.

The effect of age is secured in the plaster, stained to represent mould. In the hall, which is of stone, the fireplace stands well over seven feet square. The entire hall is a perfect setting for boar's head feasts and yule log celebrations. In the library fine old pieces of furniture, tall throne-like chairs and armor make an interesting and authentic reproduction of a castle of old times.

Piquant contrast is afforded by the fact that the production is a delightful modern comedy-drama. The picture is based on a book by George Barr McCutcheon. Rubye De Remer plays the role of Countess Aline. The picture is being directed by Robert Ellis.

"Alma, Where Do You Live?" Directed by Hal Clarendon

THE Monopol feature, "Alma, Where Do You Live?" which is being presented as a novel production, with a song revue of numbers from the original stage version, is attaining success throughout the territory handling it and registering both because of the novelty and quality of the production, according to a statement from the Monopol Pictures Company.

This picture featuring Ruth McTammany and George Larkin, was directed by Hal Clarendon, who, born of theatrical parents started his dramatic career as a child actor with "May Blossoms," at the old Madison Square Theatre in New York. Later he gained popularity in stock, and then joined Famous Players, apearing in a number of features, including "Marta of the Lowlands," "One of the Girls" and "David Harum."

Next, Mr. Clarendon joined Thanhouser as a director and afterwards started as an independent producer, making "The Girl from Rectors," "One Day," "Will You Marry Me?" and "Alma, Where Do You Live?"

Pallette in Model Husband Role.

Eugene Pallette will be Viola Dana's leading man in "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," her Metro-Screen Classic picture following "Eliza Comes to Stay."

Mr. Pallette is at present enacting "Red" Jocelyn in "Alias Jimmy Valentine," Bert Lytell's picturization of Paul Armstrong's play. Eugene Pallette was May Allison's leading man in "Fair and Warmer," playing Billy, the model husband. In "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath" he will have the role of Reggie, also a model husband.

Loew Circuit Books "High Speed."

"High Speed," Hallmark Pictures Corporation's January 17 release on the Famous Director Series, has been booked over the Loew circuit of theatres in greater New York. Last week it showed at Loew's New York Theatre and, according to the criticisms, represents one of the best productions on this series. Gladys Hulette and Edward Earle are co-stars.

American Buys More Novels.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., announces the purchase of three novels for future screen adaptation: "The Blue Moon," by David Anderson; "The House of Toys," by Henry Miller, published by Bobbs-Merrill Company, and "Their Mutual Child," by P. G. Wodehouse, published by Boni & Livewright.

Griffith Pays Brady $175,000 for Picture Rights to "Way Down East"

ALBERT L. GREY, general manager for D. W. Griffith, announces the purchase by Mr. Griffith from William A. Brady of the motion picture rights to "Way Down East" for the sum of $175,000.

This world-famous pastoral play has been for the past twenty-two years one of the classics of the American stage. Originally produced in 1896 under the title of "Annie Laurie," it was a dismal failure and lost an average of $1,000 a week for seven weeks in the very territory (New England) whose life it sought to interpret. Both William A. Brady and Joseph R. Grismer had supreme faith in it, however, and it was revised and elaborated by Mr. Grismer and again presented under the new title of "Way Down East" at the Schiller Theatre, Chicago (now the Garrick) and became the reigning success of the season there, playing to capacity audiences for months.

Has Original Prompt Book.

"Way Down East" was first presented in New York at the old Manhattan Theatre, Sixth avenue and Thirty-third street, in February, 1898, with a cast that included Burr McIntosh, John Bunny, Phoebe Davies, Howard Kyle, Louise Galloway, George Backus, Felix Haney, Frank Lander, Ella Hugh Wood and others whose names became associated with its success for a period of fifteen years. It remained at the Manhattan Theatre for seven months, a run then considered phenomenal.

In its career, "Way Down East" has made more than $1,000,000 net profit and has been shown in nearly every village and hamlet in the United States.

In bringing this bucolic classic to the screen, D. W. Griffith will follow closely the original story by Lottie Bair Parker and will use the original prompt book owned by Joseph R. Grismer. Work on the production will be started immediately at the new Griffith studios at Mamaroneck, N. Y.

"Child for Sale" Has Strong Cast.

Headed by Gladys Leslie and Creighton Hale, and with a supporting cast including Julia Swayne Gordon, Bobby Connelly, Anna Lehr, William Davidson, William Tooker and William Bechtel, the new Abramson-Graphic photodrama, "A Child for Sale," is making headway under the guiding hand of Director Ivan Abramson.

Work commenced January 15, and according to Mr. Abramson the picture will be ready for the state righters between February 15 and March 1.

Metro Makes Alice Lake Star in Her Own Right

ALICE LAKE is now a Metro star in her own right. The New York offices of Metro issued an announcement to that effect immediately after the receipt of a telegram from the studios in Hollywood, where Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, arrived recently in company with Marcus Loew.

This young screen celebrity will have as her first starring vehicle a picturization of the American play, "Shore Acres," by James A. Herne.

Elevation of Miss Lake to equal rank with the other stars appearing in Screen Classics, Inc., productions was brought about because of this young actress' merit. It follows within a few weeks the closing of a five years' contract between Miss Lake and Metro.

Although Alice Lake has been advancing steadily in the finish of her art and in her popularity, it was not until "Lombardi, Ltd.," in which she played the part of Norah, the assistant to Tito Lombardi, the stellar role enacted by Bert Lytell, in the Hattons' comedy that she commanded recognition.

Editing Leroy Scott's "Partners of the Night"

FOR the last ten days Eugene Mullin, of the Goldwyn scenario staff, and Leroy Scott, the author of "Partners of the Night," have been at work editing the first eastern production for Eminent Authors. Rex Beach, as well as Mr. Scardon and Mr. Mullin, have helped on the subtitles.

"Partners of the Night" is the unusual detective story of New York life for which Charles D. Whittaker prepared the continuity. Leroy Scott is now working on his second picture for Eminent Authors. He has just finished a play, which has been accepted for production this spring on the speaking stage. His contract for Cosmopolitan Magazine calls for one short story each month, and he is writing a serial novel for Hearst's Magazine, which will be available on publication for another screen success to follow "Partners of the Night."

Select Next Alice Joyce Picture.

"Dollars and the Woman" has been selected by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, as Alice Joyce's next Vitagraph special production following "The Sporting Duchess," recently completed and now awaiting release. It is an adaptation from the original story by Albert Payson Terhune, with scenario by Lucien Hubbard. George Terwilliger, who directed Miss Joyce in "Slaves of Pride" and "The Sporting Duchess," will also direct her new feature.

Steinberg with Selznick in Chicago.

The Chicago branch office of Selznick Enterprises announces the acquisition of H. Steinberg, former advertising manager of the National Poster and Printing Company, as the new Selznick publicity and exploitation man in that territory. He succeeds Paul Smith who left recently to establish his own publicity bureau.

Millhauser Directing Juanita Hansen.

Bertram Millhauser, for several years scenario writer for Astra and George B. Seitz, during which time he collaborated on all of Pearl White's Pathe serials, has abandoned the typewriter in favor of the directorial megaphone. His first venture along this line is the direction of Juanita Hansen's first Pathe serial "The Mad Talon," which is being produced under the supervision of Mr. Seitz at the studio of George B. Seitz, Inc., 134th street and Park avenue, New York.

Paul Brunet Honored.

Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has just received another honor in being elected for a two year term as a member of the Directorate of the Franco-American Board of Commerce and Industry. This organization is comprised of the most prominent men of the United States engaged in promoting the best business relations between this country and the sister republic.

"Getting His Goat" New Rolin Comedy.

"Getting His Goat" was selected as an appropriate title for the new Rolin Comedy, which Pathe will release February 8, inasmuch as the "pint sized" comedian "Snub" Pollard, who is starred, is the possessor of the goat which someone "gets." Mildred Davis, Eddie Boland and "Sunshine Sammy," the diminutive Nubian, are also featured in the large cast.

Dunham on Ince Press Staff.

John S. Dunham, well known publicist and feature writer, is the latest addition to the publicity force of the Thomas H. Ince Studios in Culver City, Cal. Formerly in charge of publicity for one of the leading producing organizations, and a special writer of wide acquaintance, Mr. Dunham is well equipped to assist in the broad co-operative service now being rendered the newspapers and magazines of the country.

Dorothy Davenport Returns to Screen.

After some three years or more absence from the screen, Dorothy Davenport returns via Paramount Artcraft, as Leila Mortimer in "The Fighting Chance," directed by Charles Maigne and scenarized from Robert W. Chambers notable novel by Will M. Ritchey. Conrad Nagle plays the leading role and Anna Q. Nilsson is the heroine.

"The Hawgs Is In the Cucumbers!"
Sings Louise Fazenda in her newest Paramount-Sennett, "Down on the Farm."

"He Bent Down and Kissed Her."
A line from "The Sporting Duchess," Alice Joyce's new Vitagraph.

First Run Theatres Give "Blind Husbands" Big Runs

KEEPING tabs on the bookings of all pictures is quite a study in itself. Some pictures will have a large sale at the time of their release but bookings on them will stop in a short time.

"Blind Husbands," the Universal picture written and directed by Stroheim, is showing up in direct contrast to this. This picture was released before full publicity on it had been prepared. Bookings were satisfactory from the start but not above the usual run of a good picture.

As the publicity on the picture caught up and the production started scoring in town after town the bookings started to increase out of all proportion to its slow start. As a result the sales momentum of the picture increased steadily as the public's interest in the problem dealt with in the picture became awakened.

The production is now continuing to book heavily in first run theatres that were at first skeptical in regard to putting it on their program. As an instance of this the American Theatre of Denver has just played it although it was offered to them several months ago. They reported a record week, The Denver newspapers because of their big out-of-town circulation and the unusual comment aroused by the picture ran "club" advertisements giving the dates of showing in all the surrounding cities. This gave a "news" interest to the advertisements and was excellent exploitation.

Among the seven day bookings on the picture received this week were The Royal, Little Rock; The Signal, Knoxville, The Signal, Chattanooga; the Walnut, Louisville; the Strand, Phoenix; the Sun, Omaha, and the Casino, Spokane.

"Silver Horde," Rex Beach's Latest Goldwyn, Is Full of Strong Action

WITH many of the new Goldwyn directors present, Rex Beach's latest picture, "The Silver Horde," was screened recently at a private showing. It is said that the production combines the irrestible humor and pathos of "The Girl from Outside," with the dramatic vitality of "The Spoilers" and "The Brand."

Frank Lloyd directed the production and stages the mob scenes, the fight scenes, and the great outdoor action with all the skill that won him his high reputation. "The Silver Horde" bristles with rapid-fire action and dynamic climaxes. The book from which the photoplay is derived is one of the most popular of Rex Beach novels. The Goldwyn exploitation staff calls it a "red-blooded, He-man, two-fisted, straight-from-the-shoulder romance of the Great North."

Myrtle Stedman and Betty Blythe are the two leading women.

As Boyd Emerson, Curtis Cooksey is a dominant and forceful figure throughout. Frederick Stanton is Big George Bolt, and together these two men and Cherry Malotte fight the forces of cunning and greed which seek complete control of the salmon fisheries of Alaska. The rival forces are led by Marsh, a sinister and convincing character played by Robert McKim. The head of the eastern financial interests, Wayne Wayland, is in the capable hands of H. D. MacLean.

Remarkable shots of Alaskan scenes, of the gleaming millions of salmon hording into the Kalvik river to spawn, and of the great wharf riot on the docks of Seattle add to the picture quality of "The Silver Horde." Four fights of growing intensity mark the progress of the story. The struggle of two men and a woman against big odds in nature and financial power pictures the unconquerable American spirit that wins through to success in the face of failure.

Metro Officials Examine "Right of Way" in Chicago

IN response to a strong personal indorsement by William E. Atkinson, Metro general manager, and Maxwell Karger, director general, Marcus Loew interrupted his trip west with Richard A. Rowland and Joseph W. Engel to examine the first positive print of "The Right of Way" in Chicago. "The Right of Way," a picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel of the Canadian north woods. is Bert Lytell's newest Metro-Classic starring vehicle, just completed at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

"'The Right of Way' is one of the biggest pictures of the year. Be sure to see it," was the word to Messrs. Loew, Rowland and Engel the day before the theatre circuit owner, and the Metro president and treasurer left New York for the Pacific Coast to inspect the Metro studios. It came in a wire from Mr. Atkinson.

As Mr. Atkinson was about to ship the first positive print of "The Right of Way" east the Loew-Metro officials altered the program of their cross-country jaunt to include a stop-off at Chicago, where, in the projection room of Metro's exchange in the Lake City, they examined the print.

Jack Dillon directed. June Mathis wrote the scenario. In the supporting cast are Leatrice Joy, Carmen Phillips, H. Gibson-Gowland, Virginia Caldwell, Antrim Short, Frank Currier, Henry Harmon and Larry Steers.

The production is scheduled for early release by Metro.

Hotels Plan to Exhibit Pictures to Their Guests

A CONTRACT signed recently by General Sales Manager J. C. Ragland of Realart Pictures Corporation with Charles C. Ritz, son of Caeser Ritz, founder of the Ritz-Carlton chain of hotels, discloses an extensive organization, now in process of formation, which will exhibit high-class motion pictures in big resort hotels throughout the country.

Mr. Ritz says that many experiments along these lines conducted during the past year have met with signal success and have demonstrated that an excellent field for exhibiting good pictures is practically neglected.

"Amusement directors in the big resort hotels of the nation," said Mr. Ritz in a statement, "have come to the conclusion that through neglect of motion picture entertainment they have been missing a valuable business opportunity. The attitude of their guests has been reflected in willingness to patronize motion pictures.

"Hotel officials are recognizing the progress which the art has made and also its appeal as entertainment. The demand for hotel shows is tremendous. When negotiations are finally concluded we will show motion pictures in resort hotels throughout the country, but only those productions of the better class. Eventually many of these hostelries will have their own auditoriums for the sole purpose of projecting motion pictures. Recognizing that their guests are people of education and discernment, they will present big-time pictures, and the very latest to be had. Arrangements made with Realart Pictures Corporation will insure the presentation of these high-grade films in the best of surroundings."

Completes Script for "Half an Hour."

Clara Beranger has completed the scenario for Barrie's "Half an Hour," which is to be Dorothy Dalton's first vehicle under her contract with the Famous Players-Lasky.

It is Miss Beranger's firm belief that when masterpieces of fiction or the stage are purchased for the screen, the scenario writer should try as far as is compatible with screen technique to carry out the original idea of the story. In this instance the action of the play given to Miss Beranger takes place within half an hour's time. Though it may seem impossible to accomplish this on the screen, the scenario is so developed that the original idea has been preserved, and there is not a single time lapse from start to finish.

Must Bond Each State for "U-35."

Judge Edward R. Finch signed an order on January 24, compelling Aywon Film Corporation to file a bond indemnifying C. B. Price Co., Inc., in matters that are now headed for trial in court involving the rights to distribute "The Log of U-35." It is the declared intention of the Price people to initiate action in every state where the Aywon organization shall make distribution of the disputed film to compel the latter firm to file similar indemnifying bonds. The whole matter seems to be entered for a long journey through the courts.

"Poor Relations" Opens the Strand in Fresno

"POOR RELATIONS," with a notable cast, a Robertson-Cole Superior Picture, was the opening production at J. Walter Byrd's new Strand Theatre in Fresno, Cal. This picture, which was acclaimed by first run exhibitors as a real find, was so successful at the opening showing that Harry J. Wendland, the manager, re-booked the production for an additional day's run. The New Strand Theatre is one of the finest motion picture houses in lower California.

"I do not count my personal appreciation so much as that of the patrons," said Mr. Wendland. "On their appreciation our standards must be built if we wish to remain a permanent institution. You can well believe that I am happy now, that we secured 'Poor Relations' on our opening bill. It won the approval of packed houses."

"Poor Relations," which is enjoying a continued success by playing first-run houses, has a wealth of exploitation material which, exhibitors declare, puts it over with real box office force. ZaSu Pitts is featured.

Soutar Play for O'Brien.

The work of another well-known writer will have its initial screen presentation in a Selznick production according to Myron Selznick who announces the purchase of the screen rights to "The Honor of His House." This story was written and published in book form by Andrew Soutar. It will be adapted to the screen as a vehicle for Eugene O'Brien.

G & G Theatre Company of Seattle To Acquire Neighborhood Theatres

THE secret is out in Seattle as to the purchaser of a leading neighborhood theatre and the site and plans of a new house about which a lot of rumors have been circulating for the last two or three weeks. The talk has been about the sale of the Majestic Theatre, Ballard, and the site and plans of the proposed Varsity Theatre in the university district by H. W. Bruen, who has operated the Majestic for the past two years.

The present owner of these two theatre properties, as well as three others, namely, Ye College Playhouse, the Empress of Ballard, and the Fremont of Fremont, is the G. & G. Theatre Company, just incorporated for $500,000 by Harry Sigmond for Donald and Myrtle Geddes. Mr. Geddes is president of the corporation, while Mrs. Geddes is secretary and treasurer. They own the entire stock. Mr. Sigmond is the general manager.

The formation of this company is significant of the development of the idea of company control of a string of theatres, for their plan is to build and operate neighborhood theatres on a large scale. They will not attempt to rival the big downtown theatres, but their neighborhood houses will have all the comforts that family patronage asks, and the programs will be planned with a special view to pleasing the family audience. Negotiations are already under way for the purchase of three other neighborhood houses in Seattle.

Wife Composes and Plays.

Donald Geddes has been in the motion picture business since 1913, when he bought the Strand Theatre in Moscow, Idaho. He remained there until 1916, when he and Mrs. Geddes came to Seattle and bought the College Playhouse, the only theatre in the university district. This house had been a failure in the hands of eight different people. He and his wife have made it the most successful business proposition of any neighborhood theatre in Seattle.

In naming Mrs. Geddes with her husband as responsible for the success of Ye College Playhouse the whole truth and nothing but the truth is being stated, for all Seattle knows that Mrs. Geddes has a long business head. She is also a skilled musician. She arranges all the scores for the shows and plays the piano. Most of the music she composes herself. She is a graduate of the Chicago University of Music, has been associated with several orchestras in the East and has conducted an orchestra in Spokane.

Mr. Sigmond has been an attorney in Seattle for several years. In June, 1917, he organized the Northwest Film Board of Trade and has been its counsel ever since. He has kept up his law practice during that time, giving most of his attention to theatrical cases.

Sidelights and Reflections

HARRY TODD, who plays Jeremy in "Her Elephant Man," was a member of the first motion picture producing company to journey to Los Angeles. This was twelve years ago, and the company, under Frank Boggs, was from the Selig Chicago studio. Later Harry Todd was a member of the pioneer Essanay company under G. M. Anderson which made the first motion picture to be staged in Santa Monica. The name of this picture was "Tag Day." Others in the same cast were Augustus Carney ("Alkali Ike" of humorous memory), Arthur Mackley (the "Sheriff"), Fred Church and William Russell, the latter of whom died several years ago. The present Jeremy was one of the best known of the earlier players, chiefly by reason of his long association with Essanay's "Broncho Bill" and "Alkali Ike" series.

"Happy Endings" are still the favorite finish for most screen patrons ,and are likely to remain so until men and women no longer go to the moving picture theatres solely for amusement. That the story told on the screen squares absolutely with the facts of life is no recommendation for it with the "happy ending" worshipper. The characters may all be perfect types of humanity and their actions may keep this class of patron alternating between smiles and tears, but if there is no definite promise of wedding bells for the leading male and female at the finish the picture is "spoiled by a bad ending."

A picture released this season had an unhappy ending, and, although the story was written by a celebrated author and the whole theme demanded such a finish, the old cry for wedding bells was wrung loudly in the ears of the exhibitors that ran it. The most popular fiction the world over are fairy tales. The writer of them is endowed with a magic wand and can set stern reality at defiance. By applying the same method to the every day struggle of normal human beings every searcher for the pot of gold at the foot of the rainbow can return crowned with success to lay his treasures at the feet of his best girl, have the swellest of weddings and come to the end of all his earthly troubles. This is the sort of fairy tale beloved by those who go to the movies for mental relaxation only. So many of us there are who refuse to grow up!

What's in a name anyhow? Wid's gravely announces that Edward E. Rose, author of "Cappy Ricks" and "Penrod," has sold one of his original works to Joseph Menchen. Why not give the author's names of the two stories mentioned in place of the stage adaptor? Peter B. Kyne and Booth Tarkington are fairly well known to the public at large; and, anyway, they wrote the original stories. WEITZEL.

"The Walk-offs"

Metro Screen Classic Starring May Allison is Smart Production of Rather Ordinary Society Story.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

BUILT upon one of the stage comedies written by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, "The Walk-offs" was first produced by Oliver Morosco. The Metro screen version starring May Allison turns out to be a smart production of a rather ordinary society story. The meaning of the title is explained by an old negro, the servant of the hero from Kentucky. Originally, a "Walk-off" was one of several persons created after Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden who walked off before being supplied with brains. As used in the picture the term designates a man or woman who tries to put on style without either money or brains. Kathleen Rutherford, the heroine, is put down as a "Walk-off" by the young man from Kentucky, and the interest of the comedy is centered in the method Kathleen takes to make him change his mind. The situations are not startlingly new, but the scenes in society and high-class Bohemia are handled skillfully and with lavish pictorial effect.

May Allison bestows an engaging personality upon Kathleen and, in a "Society Circus" episode, appears as an amateur bareback rider in a fetching professional short skirt. The incident where the hero invades her dressing tent armed with a whip and a determination to win her by an exhibition of "caveman stuff" does not speak well for the young man's sense of propriety; but Emery Johnson, who plays the part of Robert Winston, contrives to surmount the bad impression of the scene. Joseph Kilgour is excellent as Murry Van Allan.

Herbert Blache's direction, and special art settings by John Holden contribute largely to the success of the picture.

Stage Play by Frederic and Fanny Hatton.

Adapted by June Mathis and A. P. Younger.

Directed by Herbert Blache.

The Story.

Kathleen Rutherford and her brother are the "Walk-offs" of the story. Of high social standing, but reduced to genteel poverty until Robert marries a rich wife, they both live off of her large income. Driven to resentment by her husband's flirtations with other women, Mrs. Rutherford divorces him, and Kathleen is forced to look for work or marry Murry Van Allan, an elderly man of wealth, whose suit is urged by Mary Carter, a successful sculptress and a close friend to the charming, but irresponsible Miss Rutherford.

As Kathleen has no desire to become Mrs. Van Allan, she is glad to accept the position of companion to Miss Carter. While she is living in the Carter studio apartment, Robert Winston, Miss Carter's rich nephew from Kentucky, arrives, and Kathleen overhears him denounce her and her brother for being "Walk-offs." She also overhears him say he is in need of a secretary. Determined to get even with him for his remarks, Kathleen has Mary Carter introduce her under another name and recommend her for the position. It is her intention to fascinate the young Kentuckian and then refuse him, after letting him know who she really is. The plan works out as she intended. Winston falls madly in love with her and refuses to be discouraged when he learns of the bad beginning he has made in the affair.

Winston's attitude effects Kathleen, but she will not listen to the promptings of her heart and becomes engaged to Van Allan, to show the younger man that his case is hopeless. While taking part in a society circus Kathleen so fires Winston's love for her that he walks into her dressing tent and tells her he is going to make her his wife in spite of everything. His unconventional act gives Kathleen's maid a chance to trick Van Allan into embracing her when he had hired the girl to compromise Winston by embracing him. Convinced at last that she is only standing in the light of her own happiness, Kathleen jilts Van Allan and agrees to let Winston take her back to Kentucky as his wife.

"The Walk-offs"—A Lavish Society Drama with May Allison as Its Star.

Exploitation Angles: Make Miss Allison the star, but don't forget that this story is by the authors of "Lombardi, Ltd." Whoop it up for the circus rider scenes and give emphasis to the fact that it is a society circus. Play hard on the society angle and start off with teasers about the title, giving the explanation a couple of days before the opening show. Paper, as well as cut outs, should be used heavily for this.

cast, struggles hard to put into the picture the pep and punch that is lacking. While there are undoubtedly some humorous situations which will provoke laughs, the humor is obvious and farfetched, and suspense is lacking.

The plot of "Too Much Johnson" is built on the oft-used theme of "too much mother-in-law" and, as the final sub-title states, "If there had not been too much mother-in-law, there would not have been too much Johnson."

Bryant Washburn gives a capable performance of the title role, but appears to be ill at ease at times. Lois Wilson makes a charming picture as his wife, but has very little to do. Adele Farrington gives a good portrayal of the shrewish mother-in-law, while Monte Blue, as the hero's friend, shows a tendency to force the humor. C. H. Geldert appears in the role of the real Johnson, a fit match for the "bossy" mother-in-law. Monte Banks struggles hard in the stagey role of an irate French husband who, armed with a knife and a sword, persists in pulling off everyone's hat, while endeavoring to locate the curly-headed Johnson who he claims has stolen his wife.

The Story.

"Too Much Johnson" refers to the careless use of that name by Augustus Billings, a young married man, when he wishes to conceal his true identity. He goes aboard a motor yacht he formerly owned, under the name of Johnson, and sails away for a short cruise with Mme. Dathis and her friends. A snap shot of him is taken on board the boat and is inscribed with his assumed name. Later on, when the jealous husband of Mme. Dathis seeks to get this photograph, it is torn, only the head of raven curly hair showing in the fragment obtained by the husband, and the name "Johnson."

Billings explains his absence to his wife and mother-in-law by stating that he was called to Mexico to look after certain oil properties he has recently acquired. They decide to investigate. Billings is obliged to go with them to Mexico in order to carry out the bluff. He takes them to a property owned by an intimate friend. Unfortunately this property has been sold to a man named Johnson. On the same steamer comes the jealous husband of Mme. Dathis, lifting the cap of every man he meets, in his hunt for the home wrecker with the raven curls. On that same boat is the young girl who is to become the bartered bride of the real Johnson. This Johnson is a fire-eater. He knocks the jealous Frenchman unconscious, frightens the bartered bride and her friends away and then mistakes the wife of Billings for his bride-to-be.

The real Johnson has everything his own way until he is drawn by a ruse into a declaration of marriage with Billings' mother-in-law. He accepts the situation like a man, thus forever relieving Billings of the lady who interfered with his married happiness.

Exploitation Angles: Make a noise for Washburn and then go on to work on the play angles. Advertise it as "How to get rid of your mother-in-law." Give a "Johnson" special performance with half price seats to all who can show legal right to the name, or offer free admissions to all who can duplicate "Johnson's" curly locks. Both are good side angles.

"The Beggar Prince"

Splendidly staged Haworth Production Gives Sessue Hayakawa Fine Opportunity in Double Role.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A GREAT deal of credit is due both director and author in the Robertson-Cole-Haworth production, "The Beggar Prince." The picture is based on a fantastical story which seems totally dissimilar to any other that has been seen on the screen. Light in fibre, having sufficient comedy to relieve a highly romantic situation, and presenting in one of its main characters an amusing ego clothed in the dignity of Oriental splendor, the story offers Sessue Hayakawa fine opportunities in a double role. As the Prince of a fantastical island in the Orient he is grandly royal in manner and attire, and as Niki, the fisherman, he displays the simple passion of his station. Hayakawa has never done a more consistently good piece of work than in "The Beggar Prince."

The sets and costuming of this production are also commendable, all of which is marked either by simplicity and grace, or richness of design. One of the best played characters in the picture, apart from those taken by the star, is that of the Court Astrologer. This is played by Robert Bolder. The Grand Vizier and the Court Murderer are also amusing characters well presented. Beatrice La Plante and Thelma Percy are pretty and graceful in the leading feminine roles.

The court scenes have slight suggestions of burlesque that will be enjoyed. The production is one of the best of the season, and presents a vivid lesson in contentment.

The Story.

In "The Beggar Prince" exact similitude of appearance cause the careers of a prince and a fisherman to become sadly tangled, a situation which discloses compensations for both parties.

The island of Desire is a fantastical kingdom ruled by a self-centered prince, who was so confident of his own powers that his courtiers and servants had little difficulty in persuading him of the truth of such illusions as the causing of the sea to retire. Summoned to a balcony overlooking the sea beach at the proper time by his careful master of the hour glass, otherwise known as court astrologer, he commands the sea to retire. His command apparently obeyed as the tide receded, he was well pleased with himself. It is therefore not difficult, when an eclipse of the moon is due to further stimulate his belief in himself to the extent of persuading him that it is still his command that caused the moon to cease shining.

In the accomplishment of this there is a graver matter at stake, for should the moon retire at the command of the prince, according to promise he is to make the daughter of the Grand Vizier his bride. But on this same night as he walks by the sea he beholds the beautiful peasant girl Olala dancing on the beach. Rewarding his advances with a smart slap on his cheek, she enrages the prince, so that he has her taken prisoned to his castle, where she is to become his slave. Entering the castle in the litter with Olala he bides his time, and when the prince has his back turned, he strikes him over the head and while he is unconscious exchanges clothes with him, and has him cast forth to be known as Niki the fisherman. When the real Niki in his prince's garb is about to marry Olala in the palace, he sends for the prince, confesses, and finds that he has at last found what he has lacked contentment, Olala becomes the bride of Niki, and the Prince marries the daughter of the Grand Vizier, and so all ends happily.

Entertaining Story of a Poor Fisherman and a Prince Whose Appearances Were So Similar That Their Affairs Became Sadly Entangled.

Exploitation Angles: Use Hayakawa, but capitalize the fantastic angle of the story and sell also on that. Play up the cast to use the oddly named characters and work such angles as "Greater Than Canute, he made the tide recede," and play on the eclipse. In a word make it plain that this likable star is to be seen in something new and dainty. His popularity will do the rest.

"The Shepherd of the Hills"

Harold Bell Wright's Story, Directed by Himself, Is in Nine Reels, Released by W. T. Gaskell.

Reviewed by Clarence L. Linz.

THE screen version of "The Shepherd of the Hills" offers theatregoers something new in photoplays. It is in nine reels. If some expert could go through it, cut out the repetitions and the unnecessary graveyard scenes, making it a five-reel production, it would rank with any of its class of picturized novel. For the most part the photography is very good, and the scenes bring forth a great deal of admiration. Harold Bell Wright's direction of his story is amateurish in spots and there is a lack of "pep" in the production.

As a box office proposition the picture is up to expectations. This is borne out by the crowds attending the Rialto (Washington, D. C.) this week, and by statements made by the manager of the theatre. None of the players are well known, but the cast shows up well. Harry Lonsdale as the Shepherd, Cathrine Curtis as Sammy, George McDaniels as Young Mat, Dan Bailey as Old Mat and C. Edward Raynor as Little Pete are the shining lights of the company.

The story is filled with dramatic situations, which are often well carried out on the screen. Summed up, the picture presents itself to the reviewer as follows: Photography, excellent as a whole; action, plenty in spots; acting, quite good; as a box office attraction, excellent.

The Cast.

The Shepherd.....Harry Lonsdale
"Sammy" Lane.....Cathrine Curtis

Olie Stewart.....Lawrence Coghlan
The Artist.....Chas. O'Moore
Post Master.....E. K. Kendall

Directed by the author.
Running time, nearly two hours.

The Story.

As in the book, the picture opens with the advent of the old man from the city. He has come to make up to the backwoods people the wrong his son, an artist, had done in deserting a girl who had posed for the picture which made him famous. The wrong was partly the father's, who in his pride wished his son to make a marriage befitting the son of a cultured clergyman. Chance leads him to stop for the night at the cabin of the father of the girl. She has been dead fifteen years and her son is a wild child of the hills, half-witted.

The old man becomes a shepherd for the Matthews family, and his kindly influence is felt throughout the region. Only the moonshiners resent his presence, believing him to be a revenue officer. Their attempt to kill him is stopped by the better residents of Mutton Hollow. The gentler side of life in the woods centers about "Sammy" Lane, whose lively spirits have succeeded in shortening her name from Samantha. All her life she has loved her playmate, "Young Matt," but she is trying to make herself believe she loves another.

Wealth and pleasure sound attractive to a girl who never has been far enough out of the valley to see a railroad. She begs the shepherd to teach her to become a "lady." What she learns in her daily lessons from the old man, instead of putting up an artificial barrier from her simple happy life, makes her see the charm and beauty of her surroundings and her home folks. The ending of the picture shows the finding of the artist's son by the old "Shepherd of the Hills," and the son dies in his father's arms after becoming reconciled to those he wronged.

"The Midnight Bride"

Gladys Leslie in Appealing Heroine in Vitagraph Adaptation of Charles Stokes Wayne Story.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

GLADYS LESLIE is particularly appealing as the heroine of the Vitagraph adaptation of "The Midnight Bride" by Charles Stokes Wayne. Her personality is in keeping with the requirements of the character of the simple country girl, who answered the lure of the city with a seriousness born of ignorance. The girl's plight, and the final clearing of an ugly situation in her favor will prove attractive to any audience by reason of the strongly human elements of the story.

The picture is well constructed, and the plot stands out clearly without an overburden of detail. The action is natural, the characterization interesting and well defined, and the sets attractive without being obtrusive. The mildly melodramatic vein of the story provides relief from the romantic tendency of its opening. And when all is said and done there remains a picture that is clean, unconventional in type and morally well balanced.

Length—About 5,000 feet.

The Story.

Jeanne Sterling, the heroine of "The Midnight Bride," makes her first visit to New York only to find that her friends have left for the seashore. While waiting in the park until train time, her friend's letter blows away from her and falls at the feet of a young man named Forrest Chenoweth, who is sitting on one of the benches. In her simple way she tells Chenoweth her plight, and he offers to visit the park menagerie with her to help put in the time. On better acquaintance he suggests that she have dinner with him and take a later train, which she does.

On the previous day Chenoweth, who has been born rich, had been wheedled into getting a marriage license by a loose woman of his circle. On the day following that of Jeanne's visit to the city he responds to a call from her for money, with a refusal to marry the woman and a declaration to have nothing further to do with her. A letter received by Jeanne from Chenoweth invites her to come to New York on Saturday morning. She is taken to a cabaret on Broadway by Chenoweth, who proposes marriage to her. She consents and they are married by an alderman, a friend of Chenoweth's, but in a moment of confusion fail to bring away the certificate of marriage.

An unfortunate link in the chain of events causes the wrong name to be copied into the certificate, and when Chenoweth, intoxicated, falls against the radiator and is killed, the wrong woman claims his estate. The alderman's son in league with the fake widow, tries to hold his father to a promise to ignore the girl's right to the marriage certificate. The alderman relents, however, and Jeanne not only gains the certificate, but is able to hold the respect of Robert Pitcairn, the man she really loves.

"Double Speed"

Wallace Reir Featured in Swiftly-Moving Comedy, Produced by Paramount-Artcraft.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

WITH most of its dramatic scenes laid in a galloping motor car, with an adventurous hero dubbed "Speed Carr" and a pretty heroine who has a fondness for chummy roadsters and chummy drivers, the plot of "Double Speed" rolls on through numberless entertaining situations. Sam Wood, who has directed this picture of racing and romance, has made the title an apt one by his skillful manipulation of scenes, events and characters. It is a production that is not wanting in sumptuous settings, many of which consist of sunny California's leafy-arched boulevards and parkways.

As the ever-happy, sometimes-lucky hero of the story, Wallace Reid encounters no especial requirements for serious acting. He is well adapted to this type of role which he delineates with a light comedy touch, eminently characteristic, if at times monotonous. A little more energetic action, mental as well as physical, would improve his performance at some of the more thrilling moments. Of real support to him is Wanda Hawley whose interest and enthusiasm is almost as inexhaustible as is her wardrobe. Two of the screen's most trustworthy character impersonators, Theodore Roberts and Tully Marshall, are responsible for some very successful scenes.

Length, Five Reels.

The Story.

Leaving Broadway and 42nd Street far in the distance, "Speed Carr" starts off in his roadster to see nature first. Supplied with all the equipment for camping, he sets up his teepee in the woods, and at nightfall retires.

His activities have been carefully watched by three hoboes who manage to rob him of car, clothes and tent—everything except his gold watch. He is rescued from his unfortunate plight by an automobile party of farmer and family bound for Los Angeles. They lend him some rough clothing and accept him as a passenger, after he has wired his uncle in Los Angeles for funds. Upon arriving he pawns his watch and buys some suitable clothes.

Meanwhile, the car has arrived ahead of time and has been sold, Sallie McPherson being the purchaser. "Speed" happens along just when she is attempting to drive the car for the first time, and he witnesses her near-demolishment of an arbor. He takes the wheel, steers the car back into safety. Attracted by the girl, and interested in the fact that she has possession of his own car, he accepts a position as chauffeur for her, still masquerading as "Barry Cole." This assumed name happens to be that of a criminal who is being trailed by detectives. They follow "Speed" and Sallie while out motoring one day, and the girl fears that it is her disapproving parent. The comedy ends with a hurried ceremony in the automobile, a meeting with the uncle and a satisfactory revelation of the chauffeur's real identity.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E.T. KEYSER

Well Ventilated Picture Theatres Have the Advantage and Retain It

IT is fairly easy to "fill the house" comfortably today, but the far-sighted exhibitor is aiming at more than this. He is constantly striving to educate his audience to come to his show instead of going to some other; and he is consistently striving also to improve the class of his patronage and gradually to draw his trade more and more from the class which can appreciate a good show and will come steadily and sit quietly and will buy the best seats in the house. They constitute his most dependable busness and he wants to get it.

Saw the Point.

It was not long since this class had a decided prejudice against motion picture shows. Many of the theatres were dark, draughty and often ill-smelling. That the motion picture manager "saw the point" was the chief reason for the rapid development of the picture house, and its still larger development waits on the fuller realization of just these same points—the importance of good fresh air and plenty of i; the absence of draughts; the avoidance of too much heat or cold; special attention to balcony ventilation where the proportion of impure air is much higher than on the main floor.

Proper ventilation is one of the greatest factors in the success of a picture theatre and affords a popular and effective appeal to the public taste.

Suppose you inserted an effective ventilating system and then inserted in your ads this slogan:

"This is the Ventilated Theatre continuously supplied with fresh, pure tempered air."

It is safe to say that your picture show would become the best-liked house in town. You might not run the best pictures—perhaps you can' tget as good features as you would like—but as for comfort, for healthfulness, for a contented and rested audience, you would have a tremendous advantage over the unventilated or poorly ventilated show.

Worthy of Consideration.

Not all exhibitors realize that one adult coming into their theatre at half past seven and leaving after a two-hour show has consumed all the air which would be contained in a room ten feet high and eighteen feet square.

This is worthy of serious consideration.

In other words, the seat which is sold a man or woman is comparatively a small part of the "contract." There is a space eighteen feet in both directions from that seat and ten feet high which must be filled with good air if that person is to enjoy the show and wants to come again.

Air that is breathed in contains 4 parts carbon dioxide to every 10,000 of volume.

Air that is breathed out contains 400 parts carbon dioxide to 10,000 or an increase of one hundred times. Imagine the tremendous production of "breath gas" in an ordinary audience, when each individual is increasing the carbon dioxide content of the air one hundred times every breath he takes; and he takes sixteen respirations a minute.

Ventilation is fresh air insurance and an added attraction that lines them up at the box office.

We are indebted for the above to the B. F. Sturtevant Company of Boston, to whose knowledge of ventilation requirements and ability to put such knowledge into operation, many of our foremost picture theatres constitute practical testimonials. The Sturtevant branches in all the principal cities are at our readers' convenience (without obligation) for consultation on ventilating needs.—Ed.

The Jones Theatre Blows Itself to A New Monsoon Ventilating System

FOR the benefit of those exhibitors who are figuring on cooling their houses in preparation for the coming summer's hot weather, we illustrate in the accompanying diagram a layout of the Monsoon Cooling System for the Jones Theatre, Canon City, Colorado.

Before we go into details covering the specifications of the apparatus used, it might be well to explain the principle of cooling used.

Everyone knows the positive cooling effect of a ride in an open trolley car or automobile with its attendant breezes.

And yet at no time is there the slightest drop in the temperature of the air. It is the breeze that does the work by evaporating the moisture in its passage over the body.

Evaporation Lowers the Temperature.

In hot dry climates—such as in Arizona—water is kept at a very low temperature in porous, earthen jugs. The porosity of the jug permits the water to seep through to the outside very slowly, keeping the outside always covered slightly with moisture. The air evaporates this rapidly and in doing so cools to a very low temperature the contents of the jug. And the more air circulation there is, the more rapid the evaporation and the lower the temperature

This, then, is Nature's way of cooling —and it is the method used by the Monsoon Cooling System, Inc.

100,000 Cubic Feet Capacity.

The Jones Theatre is a house of nearly one thousand seats—100 feet long, 44 feet wide and with an average height of 24 feet. This figures a little over 100,000 cubic feet of air capacity—and it is on the basis of the cubical contents that the Monsoon Engineers estimate the apparatus necessary to maintain the movement of air essential to cooling

In this case, a Number 7 Monsoon

TYPHOONS
COOL AND VENTILATE

Keep your head cool

You wouldn't try to keep cool in back of a desk fan—neither would you try by turning the fan on your feet.

Apply this good sense in the selection of the Cooling System for your theatre and you will install TYPHOONS—your patrons demand comfort. TYPHOONS blow the air in from the roof.

Duplex Set was decided upon, set in the location shown in the diagram.

The set consists of two eighty-four inch fans of reversible type which may be set to blow air in or exhaust same as desired. Both fans rotate on the same shaft and are operated by a single motor.

Typical Monsoon Roof Installation.

With this equipment, harnessed to a 7½ hp. ac. motor, and running silently at a speed of 200 r. p. m. on a current consumption of 5½ k. w. tremendous volumes of pure wholesome air are blown directly into the house. The capacity is sufficient to effect a complete air change at least once every minute—a total of 6,000,000 cubic feet of air every hour.

Attractive in Hot Weather.

With this enormous volume of air sweeping steadily through the house, a delightful breeze, wholesome and refreshing, is maintained all over the auditorium. It is felt by every person in the audience and makes the Jones Theatre a very attractive place in hot weather.

The Monsoon equipment has been especially designed for this class of work. It runs at low speed, smoothly and silently, without vibration, and yet delivers the enormous volumes of air required without objectionable drafts.

Both the Monsoon apparatus and the cooling system, as laid out for the Jones Theatre were designed by the Engineering Department of the Monsoon Cooling System, Inc., 70 West Forty-fifth street, New York City

The Typhoon Fan Company Makes a Good Suggestion

IN conection with our call for suggestions for the plan of a new theatre, which one of our subscribers was interested in building, a few of which were published in the Equipment Section of the Hoving Picture World of January 17, the Typhoon Fan Company of New York has supplied a plan for cooling, ventilating and heating this particular house.

For cooling and ventilating purposes two "Typhoon Twins" of proper size are suggested. These are mounted on the roof, one on each side of the main aisle and in the middle of the theatre. They take pure, fresh air from high above the dust and dirt of the street and blow it down through grilles in the ceiling and through the auditorium below with a steady breeze. It delivers this pure air

What Typhoon Writes.

For the purpose of heating this theatre a six-inch steam pipe can be run from the boiler room to the Vento Heater located just over the proscenium arch. A "Typhoon Twin" would draw the required amount of fresh air through this heater and blow it down through grilles to the audience below. This same apparatus would be used for additional cooling in the summer time.

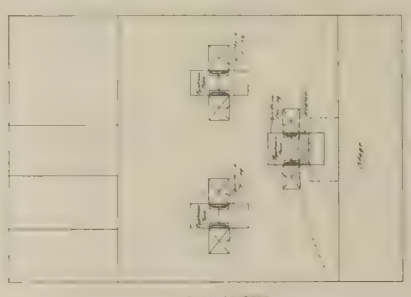
Providing this theatre had a balcony, it would be necessary to have vents in the rear of the balcony and rearrange the "Typhoons" somewhat in order to force a sweep of air over the balcony as well as throughout the orchestra.

Each theatre installation requires special analysis to determine just what amount of air per cubic foot is necessary to properly cool and ventilate.

The "Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System" can be operated very successfully by attaching the equipment to the side or rear outside walls of the theatre, in the event the roof is not especially suited for placing it there.

As an example of the efficiency of the "Typhoon System of heating, cooling and ventilating," attention is called to Harry



PLAN OF ROOF

Typhoon's Roof Suggestion.

M. Crandall's circuit of theatres in Washington, D. C. These are all beautiful houses and Mr. Crandall decided upon "Typhoons" only after a very careful and complete investigation.

What a Heating Concern Says

New York, Jan. 8, 1920.

Moving Picture World:

The writer was very much interested in the article "Do You Own a Heating Plant?" in January 10th issue. The writer of this article has correctly classified the usual type of heating plants that are put in moving picture theatres. The builder of a moving picture theatre seems to possess but one idea and that is to get a plant at the lowest possible figure regardless of the kind of a plant that he purchases. The cost of the plant is his only concern. If the moving picture people wish to have heating apparatuses that are satisfactory and that heat the buildings as intended and save the owner money in fuel and in labor, he should have the plant properly designed by a good heating engineer, and then see that the steamfitter installs it according to layout. The failure of one or all of this type of apparatus that has been installed is not an argument against the efficiency of steam as a heating medium nor of low pressure as steam and economy producers, but in each case it applies to that particular installation. Argument is not necessary to substantiate the value of steam for heating this type of construction. It remains for the builder and owner to see that his plant is properly laid out and installed.

The use of a magazine feed down draft boiler connected to a proper chimney would save from thirty to fifty per cent. in fuel cost and could be attended by employees who have other work to do on account of the little attention required in maintaining temperatures. The magazine feed down draft boiler carries steam for twelve hours without attention and burns the cheaper grades of fuel.

Very truly yours,
MOLBY BOILER CO., INC.

A SMALL INVESTMENT— LARGE RETURNS—

This Machine is designed to apply a wax compound to the margin of New Films, to prevent damage during the first few runs thru the Projecting Machine.

The collecting of emulsion from "green" films on aperture plate and tension springs of the projector is in many cases causing untold damage to the film and excessive wear to the projector as well as marring the presentation on the screen by jumping.

Proper Waxing of New Films—

Prolongs the life of the Film.
Eliminates excessive wear on Projecting Machine.
Insure Steady Pictures on the screen.
Prevents tearing of sprocket holes by emulsion deposits.

AND

Saves the film from having Oil squirted all over it by some Operator trying to get "green" film thru his machine without a stop.

The Werner Film Waxing Machine applies the Compound accurately to the margin of the film and positively will not spread wax onto the picture.

Wax always in position. Requires no adjusting.
